To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: It would be difficult for me to describe the condition of my thoughts as I sit down to pen you this article. I can hardly tell whether it is a feeling of pity, contempt, or sadness that pervades my mind for a large class of Freethinkers in this country. The laity of this class are doubtless to be pitied; but what are we to think of their leaders and preachers, who profess to stand on the outer walls of the advanced thought of our day, and yet when questioned as to their opinion of the prosecution and persecution of such men as D. M. Bennett, E. H. Heywood, and others, for their writings, publications, and utterances in the cause of mental freedom, are forced to acknowledge their total ignorance of what is being done?

During the week that has just passed we hav been having in this city a three-days meeting of what professed to be the advanced thinkers and teachers in the arena of Liberal ideas. But when one of these Liberal "divines" (and I hav no reason to believe he is not a fair representative of the whole class of divines who took part in this gathering) was asked his opinion in regard to the justice or injustice of D. M. Bennett's imprisonment, he was surprised to hear that any such thing was being done, and he had to frankly confess that he knew nothing about it. He did not know that there was such a man in New York, and he had never heard or seen anything about these prosecutions. When asked if he did not know there was such a Liberal paper published in New York city as The Truth Seeker, he said he believed he had heard there was sueh a paper published somewhere (or words to that effect), but he did not know anything about its character. And yet this man is a preacher to a society in an adjoining state (the state of Iowa, where there are hundreds, and for aught I know thousands of your paper taken every week) a society of professed Liberals in religion. Now the most lamentable thing in this matter is that this Rev. Divine is but a fair representative of a large class of professed Freethinkers and Free Religionists who are standing before their audiences (which are scattered all over this country, and professing to preach advanced ideas in religion, while they themselves are culpably ignorant of what is being done to suppress Freethought and free speech. They are ignorant of the fact that the heterodoxy they are teaching is in danger just as soon as the Y. M. C. A. (with such tools as Comstock & Co. to do their bidding) hav disposed of the advance guard in Freethought. And if the Christian Church ever gets the God, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Bible amendment into the Constitution of the United States, this class of Freethinkers will be made to feel where they stand; and the shock will come to many of them like a bombshell dropping into a camp when the enemy is supposed to be a hundred miles away. I can sympathize with a preacher, teacher, or layman who is kept back from investigating or advancing through the fear of hell and the wrath of a revengeful and angry God, for I hav been there and know how it is myself; but here is a class of religious teachers who hav a large following in this country whom they are either ignorantly or wilfully holding back from advancing, and that, too, as it appears to me, in order to draw their salaries as preachers. With this class of preachers I hav no sympathy. They may be classed among those of whom it was said, "For ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in;" and although, for the sake of drawing their salaries, they stand Sunday after Sunday in their pulpits and laud such men as Huxley and John Stuart Mill and Tyndall, and a host of other scientists and Freethinkers, yet either from ignorance or design they withhold from their congregations the real deviltry that is being committed to suppress free thought and free speech and investigation, of which they feel so proud. If this should reach the eye of any of the class I hav mentioned, I hope they will take it kindly and that it may set them to thinking and looking into this matter; and by doing so they may be able to take more advanced ground in the Liberal field.

Yours for the truth though the heavens fall,

Rockford, Ill., April 19, 1880. F. F. Follett.

National Defense Association Reception.

That irrepressible and indefatigable heroine Miss Josephine S. Tilton never tires of inventing some happy device to cheer on those who are fighting the good fight for liberty. Accordingly, on Thursday evening May 20th, the members of the National Defense Association and their friends were invited to spend a social hour at the hospitable parlors of Mrs. Emily Fernandez, 201 Second avenue.

The occasion brought together a very pleasant and intelligent gathering of Liberals, among whom were Prof. A. L. Rawson, President of the Association, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. E. B. Foote, T. B. Wakeman, Stephen Pearl Andrews, and others.

The social interchange of sentiment was introduced by a very fitting and pretty introductory speech by Mr. Henry Appleton, which was followed by some able remarks by Stephen Pearl Andrews, inspired by a toast proposed by Miss Tilton. Mr. T. B. Wakeman was then called up, and gave a very logical and interesting analysis of true Liberalism. Criticism and discussion were then in order, till the proceedings were sweetened by some delicious strawberries and cream, furnished by Miss Tilton.

We took occasion to thank the Defense Association for their efforts in our behalf, and Dr. E. B. Foote read a very flattering outline of the noble, practical work accomplished by the Association.

The occasion was in every way enjoyable, and very creditable to Miss Tilton, who took upon herself the whole expense and management of the affair.

The report read by Dr. Foote is as follows:

FRIENDS: This is the first time since the organization of the National Defense Association that its fighting men hav laid down thier knapsacks to receive the congratulations of friends. To-night we hav been lured from our war-path by the courageous little skirmisher Josephine Tilton and our hospitable hostess Mrs. Fernandez. We hav jumped over the fence, so to speak, to talk with the girls and pick strawberries. Possibly we can entertain you with some of the stories of our victories and defeats. Our officers may be induced to indulge in some interesting reminiscences, but the best ones to relate everything that is going on are the high privates. We are not fettered with red tape and dignity. Little events with big meaning do not escape our notice.

Our organization sprang into being on the 12th of June, 1878. This was shortly after Inquisitor-General Comstock issued his third annual report, in which he announced that —and I here quote his own phraseology—"the bulk of impure literature now was found in the so-called boys' papers and the journals of Freelovers and Freethinkers." The agent of the Vice Society had found during the years 1875–6–7 how easily the conviction of honest thinkers and writers a little in advance of the times was obtained in the United States courts, and he thereupon determined to win laurels for himself and bread for all his family excepting his impecunious father by carrying the war into the very heart of the Liberal camp. This determination was fortified and his hand strengthened at the very meeting at which the foregoing announcement was made, by subscriptions from his supporters then and there amounting to the generous sum of eight thousand dollars.

A few of us who had been watching this formidable movement and foresaw that it was aimed directly at free speech, free press, and free mails, associated ourselves together to resist it. We elected our officers and instituted weekly Thursday evening meetings to watch events, exchange notes, and to devise means to harass in every possisible way the seemingly victorious march of the arch enemy of progress. Our active company of sharpshooters, skirmishers, sappers and miners, consisted of our worthy President, Prof. A. L. Rawson; the Chairman of the Executive Committee, T. C. Leland; our acting and finally appointed Treasurer, Hugh Byron Brown; our Secretary, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; and an especially active member of the Executive Committee, Mr. Charles Codman, with Mr. D. M. Bennett and myself as water carriers. Until Mr. Bennett was railroaded to Albany to make shoes, this indefatigable band of workers was almost invariably present at every meeting, at rooms liberally provided for the purpose by Mr. Brown, the Treasurer. These rooms were in the Science Hall building. The meetings were continued with the same regularity after Mr. Bennett was picked off by the enemy.

Although our working force has been small it has been rooted in the hearts of thousands of liberty loving people in all parts of the country, a large number of whom proudly hold our certificate of membership. The donation of only one dollar renders the contributor an honorary member. Formidable forests, with their towering oaks and beeches, bear acorns and beech nuts—small shack; for large products look among the lowly vines with their far reaching rootlets. Here you will find big pumpkins, enormous squashes, and yard long watermelons.

Well, our organization, considering its size, has done a wonderful amount of hard work—has borne much fruit. This is evidenced in the complaints of our adversaries, who admit that they hav been harassed by our musketry in ambush. The Baptist Examiner and Chronicle, in its issue of February 6, 1879, deprecatingly referred to the obstacles which the National Defense Association had continually thrown in the path of Anthony, who has often found his guns unexpectedly spiked or his powder horn empty at a critical moment.

The National Defense Association has issued thousands of pamphlets and circulars exposing the "true inwardness" of the Vice Society and its agent. These documents hav been mailed to the clergy, to the press in all parts of the country, to Congress, and to congressional committees. When St. Anthony was heard from in Cleveland, St. Louis, Chicago, or elsewhere, engaged in forming an auxiliary Vice Society, our documents hav quickly followed in his trail. For the past two years his annual and other meetings hav been liberally circularized with the damaging facts concerning his prosecutions, issued by the Defense Association. So persistently has this work been carried on that the wily agent in many instances secretly advertised his meetings by means of circulars intrusted only to the hands of the faithful. He used to parade in the press the distinguished names of the officers of newly-formed auxiliary societies, but since it was discovered that these names were invariably used to circulate still further the literature of the Defense Association, and that, too, in the very heart of the enemy's camp, they are now withheld or blindly given. When in 1878 the monster petition containing the names of 70,000 petitioners for modification or repeal was sent to Congress, the Defense Association flooded the Committee rooms with printed facts and arguments sustaining the prayer of the petitioners, beside which, telling documents were placed upon the desk of every Congressman.

During the past winter, when Anthony was importuning Congress to make the odious provisions of the postal laws still more stringent, the Defense Association mailed five hundred copies of Mr. Wakeman's masterly argument on the unconstitutionality of those laws to members of Congress. When the Baptist Conference, held in this city during the past winter, passed resolutions commending Anthony and his work, every Baptist clergyman of New York was supplied with a damaging pamphlet of facts regarding the Inquisition. There is reason to believe that it was the publications of our Association which lead the "Baptist Pastor" to denounce Comstock and his methods through the columns of the Tribune, an event, it will be remembered, which caused at the time much inquiry and comment. We know that the publications of the Association hav often brought the press of the country to sustain our cause and to denounce the methods of the inquisition. So much for our literature.

Albeit, there has been a great amount of other work done. When Josephine Tilton, D. M. Bennett, W. S. Bell, and Mr. Mosher were arrested at the Liberal Convention at Watkins, in the summer of 1878, at the instigation, as it is believed, of Anthony the Meddlesome, the Association flew to their rescue. Counsel was engaged, retainer fees paid, and when the accused subsequently were obliged to visit Watkins to answer the charge, their expenses were met from the treasury of our Association, and a considerable amount of correspondence relating to the matter was conducted by the Secretary.

When the doughty Miss Josephine Tilton, whose guests we hav the honor to be, in part, to-night, chose rather to go to jail than accept proffered bail at Watkins, the Chairman of our Executive Committee, Mr. Leland, went up to Watkins to view the situation, and it was through his persuasion that the heroic little woman was induced for prudential reasons known to the Defense Association to accept bail. Furthermore, the literature of the Association had probably something to do with opening the eyes of the people of the famous Glen to the injustice of those arrests and to the pigeon holing of those indictments, for the accused hav never been brought to trial.

When, in June 1878, Anthony disgraced himself and his Society by hiring three Greene street young women to exhibit themselves in a state of nudity for over an hour, Prof. Rawson, our President, at the request of the Association, attended the entire trial, making copious notes, which, as court records, were published and circulated broadcast, greatly to the damage of the Vice Society and its indiscreet scavenger.

When, in June 1878, E. H. Heywood was sent to Dedham jail under sentence of two years' imprisonment, a petition for Mr. Heywood's pardon, bristling with sharp points in favor of the liberty of printing and circulating the thoughts of progressive minds, was drawn up by the Chairman of our Executive Committee. This was in due time put in circulation and 6,000 names obtained through the efforts of the Defense Association and its co-workers and supporters throughout the land. Our Association sent Mr. T. B. Wakeman and Prof. Rawson to the memorable Faneuil Hall indignation meeting on the first of August of the same summer where over 6,000 people crowded the "Cradle of Liberty" to express their indignation at the unjust imprisonment of Mr. Heywood. It was here that Mr. Wakeman made his unanswerable argument upon the unconstitutionality of the Comstock postal laws which has been so extensively quoted and used both in Congress and everywhere that Liberal hands hav been found to distribute it.

In the fall of the same year the Defense Association secured the services of the eloquent and irresistible Laura Kendrick, of Boston, in behalf of Mr. Heywood's pardon. She was sent to Washington by our Association backed with the prayer of 6,000 highly respectable petitioners and with private letters from high sources to President Hayes. Her mission was crowned with complete success, and Mr. Heywood after a little more than six months' imprisonment was restored to his family and friends. Mr. Heywood gratefully remembers our Association for his timely pardon at a moment when his health was rapidly giving way under his confinement. At the enthusiastic reception given Mr. Heywood in Boston after his release our Association was well represented.

In December, 1878, came the third arrest of Mr. D. M. Bennett, who had openly defied the Vice Society by sending "Cupid's Yokes" through the mails. His object was to break down, if possible, the American Inquisition; but, as the sequel proved, the latter was too strong for him. During the trial our Association was active in bringing every possible effort to bear against the success of the prosecution. One little stratagem originated in our Association and worked out by it, which as yet it is too early to reveal, all but proved that things had been fixed in and out of court in advance for Mr. Bennett's sure conviction. The facts in our possession are sufficient to satisfy any reasonable mind that such was indeed the situation. Thus forwarned we endeavored to be forearmed, and while the trial was pending preliminary steps were taken to obtain a pardon from President Hayes. Soon after the conviction of Mr. Bennett the Chairman of our Executive Committee visited Washington to consult influential men and to obtain their co-operation. To this extent his mission was entirely successful. Petitions for pardon were circulated and the unprecedented number of 200,000 names was procured. These were forwarded to Washington and between ten and twelve thousand letters were written to the President from people in all positions in life. You all know how near Mr. Bennett came to being pardoned at that time and what devices were employed for our defeat.

In the fall of 1879 Mr. Bennett's health became seriously impaired. This fact coming to the knowledge of the Association, one more strenuous effort was made to obtain pardon. We prepared a brief giving five good reasons (any one of which ought to hav been enough to convince a rational mind) that Mr. Bennett should be released. This brief was supplemented with five large legal envelopes stuffed with facts supporting the five reasons. A further avalanche of letters to the President was set in motion, and Mrs. Bennett, the ever constant and devoted wife of the unjustly imprisoned editor, took the papers we had prepared for the President. Again we almost achieved success. The pardon papers were actually made out, and no secret was made in the office of the Attorney-General that Mr. Bennett was shortly to be released. At this juncture, unfortunately for us, the prisoner's health greatly improved, and the Vice Society caused two physicians to be sent from New York to Albany to report on his condition. The report of these physicians who were fully in sympathy with the Vice Society, together with influence brought to bear on the mind of the President's wife, once more turned our nearly accomplished victory into discouraging defeat. But at last we feel that we hav triumphed, for we set in motion the initiatory steps leading to the grand Chickering Hall reception of Mr. Bennett on the expiration of his term of imprisonment. A more crowded or enthusiastic meeting was never convened in the great metropolis of America. Our Association were a part of, and acted in concert with, the Reception Committee. As a great moral victory we esteem the Chickering Hall meeting of greater value to our cause than could hav been the success of either of our efforts to obtain the President's pardon.

Much which our Association has accomplished may hav been overlooked in this hastily prepared paper. As I am about drawing to a close I will recall the meeting at Germania Hall at the time of Mr. Bennett's conviction, also the meeting at the Astor House on the day the verdict was reached, upon which occasion nearly all the active members of the Association were present. The fingermarks of our band of workers were visible in the great uprising which took place in Cincinnati in the summer of 1879. Nor should we forget the formation of the auxiliary Defense Association in Boston in 1879, with Mrs. Kendrick as its presiding officer. It has contributed its aid to nearly every movement against the common enemy.

All the work which this paper refers to, and much more which may hav been overlooked, during the past two years, has been accomplished with the expenditure of very little money—less indeed than is paid to Anthony Comstock for six months' service by the society which stands at his back and professedly directs his movements. The National Defense Association works because of its faith in the justice of its cause, having no parasites in its treasury to gorge themselves with the substance deposited therein by its friends and co-workers. Much valuable voluntary aid has been given to the association by the Hon. Elizur Wright, T. B. Wakeman, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Benjamin F. Tucker, Courtlandt Palmer, Eugene Macdonald, Daniel E. Ryan, Flora and Josephine Tilton, and many others, all of whom deserve the thanks, not only of our Association, but of friends of progress everywhere.

A Grand Liberal Rally At Belvidere, Ill.

There will be a Liberal camp-meeting held on the Boone county Fair Grounds, at Belvedere, Boone county, Ill., commencing Thursday, June 17, and closing Monday, June 21, 1880.

It is expected to make this the largest Liberal gathering ever held in northern Illinois or southern Wisconsin. This meeting is to be conducted on the principle of a free platform, open to every phase of Liberal belief or non-belief. The Liberals, Spiritualists, and all classes of Freethinkers in the Northwest are earnestly invited to turn out and come to this meeting. We hav corresponded with nearly all the best Liberal speakers in the United States in regard to being there to address you, amongst whom we would name Col. R. G. Ingersoll, Moses Hull, Leo Miller, W. S. Bell, B. F. Underwood, E. C. Walker, and others. And not amongst the least, that grand and noble martyr to truth, free thought, free speech, free press, and free mails, D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, has been requested to be there. It is hoped that representatives of all of the Liberal press of the country will be there. There will be opportunities given to all Spiritualist mediums who choose to come to hold seances; and Mrs. Simpson, the flower medium of Chicago, has been especially invited to come and hold her seances.

An effort will be made to run excursion trains on all of the railroads as far as practicable, as well as to procure reduced rates to all parties wishing to attend the meeting. For any further particulars in regard to this meeting please address me, F. F. FOLLETT, Managing Sec.

A Letter From Kansas.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I ask space in The Truth Seeker to say a few words to the Liberals, not only of Kansas but over our whole country.

Kansas is the banner state in the League movement. It has thirty-one chartered Leagues, and several applications for charters hav recently been made to the secretary. It has a state organization, and a county committee for nearly every organized county in the state. What state has a better record?

To accomplish this result Prof. O. A. Phelps and myself hav devoted nearly all our time, and very liberally of our means, during the last year, and how hav we succeeded? We are well organized, as above shown, but how hav we been sustained? The Professor cannot lay by a dollar, as his terms for lectures are so very low that he has nothing left after paying traveling expenses and postage bills. As for myself, I'm paying out money all the while for postage and stationery, and none coming in to replace it. Since I hav engaged in the Liberal work I hav expended over $200 and hav not received from every source $25.

The Professor is now obliged to enlarge his field of work in order that he may receive sufficient remuneration to warrant him remaining in the lecture field. For my part I am completely broken down in health, and am obliged to retire from active work. I hav resigned my position as Chairman Ex. Com. of the K. S. L. L, because unable to longer bear the burdens of the work which devolve upon me. The position on the Ex. Com. N. L. L. I shall retain for a while longer, but here giv due warning that unless I receive sufficient to defray all expenses for postage, printing, and stationery, I shall resign that position and retire to private life. Hereafter I shall reply to no letters relating to the work in this state unless the writers inclose return postage, officers and members of committees alone excepted.

It is not right or just that those who do the work should be compelled to bear all the expenses attendant upon this work, and I trust that each committeeman will establish such a rule as I hav above laid down. The sooner it is done the more progress we will make in the work.

In this state almost perfect unity exists among all classes of Liberals. Materialists, Spiritualists, and Free Religionists work side by side in harmony. Those who cannot tolerate a diversity of opinion are not true Liberals. They may be anti-orthodox, yet they are illiberal. Whenever I hear a Materialist denouncing a Spiritualist, or vice versa, I come to the conclusion that such a person is somewhat deluded in his idea of what constitutes Liberalism. A person may be extremely radical in his opinion, and at the same time be a Liberal, for true Liberalism tolerates all opinions, and respects the author for his manliness in giving expression thereto.

I appeal to all; not to you as Materialists, not as Spiritualists, Atheists, Deists, but as Liberals, and ask you to be true Liberals. Work together in harmony for the good of all. Let us present to our enemies a solid front, not a body racked by petty bickerings, and unable to work in unison. Let us know nothing but Liberalism, and above all, let there be harmony, and then the cause of Freethought will spread like wildfire throughout the length and breadth of our land.

Welcome, thrice welcome, Bennett! Welcome back to your editorial chair. The cause of liberty in the nineteenth century has had its martyr. It now needs its army of workers. Let us hope that your voice and pen will long be heard, and its writings read, in defense of freedom. Bigots may rail, priests may rave, and solemn deacons and laymen curse, but Christianity is doomed and must go down before the advancing forces of Freethought. E. Campfield.

Obituary.

Died, at his residence, in the township of Colon, county of St. Joseph, and state of Michigan, on the twelfth day of April last, after a protracted illness, Alvin Hoyt, one of our most respected, worthy, and pioneer citizens, having resided on the same farm which he has improved, since the fall of 1835. Mr. Hoyt was a native of New Hampshire, was aged 66 years, was one of the charter members of our Liberal League (No. 167), and its honored president.

At a regular meeting of said Liberal League held on May 9th, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Our worthy and highly esteemed president and brother has been obliged to submit to the inexorable law of nature, and has been removed from our midst by death, to which all animate nature is subject and must yield, therefore

Resolved, That in the demise of our worthy brother our community has lost one of its highly esteemed and worthy citizens, his family a kind, indulgent, and faithful husband and father, his immediate associates a true and faithful friend, the Liberal cause a devoted, life-long friend and advocate, and the cause of freedom, free thought, and free religious action, based upon reason and sound philosophical principles, one of its pioneers, maintaining his life-long opinions with rare ability and remarkable consistency up to the last of his physical existence and consciousness.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved wife and family of our deceased friend and brother our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in their affliction.

Resolved, That these proceedings and resolutions be entered by our secretary on the books of our League, and also a copy of the same be presented to the bereaved wife and family of our deceased brother, and forwarded to the Boston Investigator, The Truth Seeker, and the Rational Appeal. ## Mr. Bennett's New Book.

The new volume of D. M. Bennett on "The Gods and Religions" is no doubt a valuable and a convenient compilation of what is known on the subject treated. It would seem that it would take a good many ordinary men more than one year to collect and rewrite so vast a mass of matter from so great a multitude of authors, without having to do the state some service ten hours a day and being refused light. But Volume I., containing 835 broad pages and weighing three pounds and thirteen ounces good Hoosier weight, is before us. In addition to this Mr. Bennett wrote during his confinement in "a Christian bastile" sundry published letters at the rate of one a month. These would make another volume of huge proportions. Accompanying the book is a list of the books, one hundred and thirty-five in number, from which it is compiled. Most of them are rare and costly works, and it isn't every Christian bastile that can afford such a library, or that would if it could. Of course, if Mr. Bennett was allowed to bring these books there and to hav a light and work all night after the ten hours of compulsory labor was over, it was a violation of Christian bastile rules that would hav subjected the superintendent to expulsion from his office. But scarce any feat is impossible in a state that has developed a Tweed, a Beecher, a Talmage, a Sam Tilden, a Vanderbilt or two, and a Jay Gould, to say nothing of Dana and John Kelly.

If New York "Liberals" would be liberal enough to let a fellow entertain, if not express, his own opinions, we would just love to believe that the work referred to is the work of several brains and pairs of hands, employed for a good many more months than twelve.

But we are glad the world has got the information the book contains in an eligible shape and so cheap as to bring it within the reach of the general reader. No matter how or where produced, Mr. Bennett has rendered humanity an invaluable service by the mass of compilations he has brought in a cheap form before the reading public. All honor to his enterprise and industry.

[Dr. Monroe implies a doubt that we wrote the work in prison, but we beg to assure him that we wrote every word of it while in the Albany Penitentiary.—Ed. T. S.]

A New Work.

[The following notice of our new work we clip from the editorial columns of the Boston Investigator:]

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.—This large volume, by D. M. Bennett, was written by him while a prisoner in the Albany Penitentiary, and is dedicated to Mrs. Margaret McEwen and Mrs. Martha Van Allen (mother and daughter), who are connected officially with the prison, and in return for whose kindness to Mr. Bennett he has dedicated to them his book.

It is a volume of 835 pages, and very curious and interesting throughout. "The gods" are indeed numerous, about two hundred and fifty of these "gentlemen of the air" being enumerated — Hindoo gods, Brahmanic, Persian, Chaldaic, Egyptian, Chinese, Grecian, Roman, Norse, Indian, African, Semitic, Jewish, etc. Two hundred pages or more are devoted to a general review of the Bible, its origin, character, tendency, and influence. The work is to be in two volumes—three dollars each, or five dollars for both. The second volume will be issued in a few weeks.

[From the same paper we also extract the following review of the work, by Miss Wixon:]

"THE GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES."

Mr. Editor: If the unmerited imprisonment of D. M. Bennett has served no other purpose, it has been the means of giving to the world a splendid work under the above caption.

This is a book of absorbing interest, very instructive, and shows wide and careful research on the part of its author. Much of the matter is necessarily a compilation, but is thus put in just the compact form most desirable for reference and consultation by the student as well as the general reader. Commencing at the very earliest period of man's existence on this planet, and taking up the various religions and gods of the different peoples, it follows a straight and perfect line right onward, portraying in vivid colors the religious life of ignorant, savage, barbarous, half-civilized, civilized, and "enlightened" people.

The closing part of the book is devoted to a consideration of the Bible, after reading which no person can retain a particle of respect for it as an "inspired" volume, or as a standard set up for the guidance of an intelligent race.

This part of Mr. Bennett's work—clear, conclusive, logical, written in a finished and masterly manner—is alone worth the price of the book.

The entire work comprises some 835 pages, and there is promise of another volume, both of which will be valuable additions to every library in the land. When it is remembered that it was written while the author was shut in from the blessed sunlight and free air of heaven, suffering a persecution for opinion's sake, and that generations yet to come might enjoy a larger, broader, sweeter mental liberty, all must feel a special interest in this last, best work of one who has done honorable service in the field of Freethought and Liberal truth. I can cordially recommend this book as well worthy an earnest perusal by everybody.

Yours, Susan H. Wixon.

Resolutions on D. M. Bennett.

At a meeting of a few of the Liberals of our town, the following preamble and resolutions were, after a lively discussion and somewhat prolonged consideration, unanimously adopted:

Whereas, We consider the late most unjust imprisonment of D. M. Bennett as an unmistakable menace to our liberties, and the failure of the President to be moved to clemency by the great number of petitions for pardon, when there was no actual offense, proves that church and state are combined against the exercise of these rights guaranteed by the Constitution, first of which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, by those who dare to think and speak for themselves on all subjects; therefore

Resolved, That we agree with the Attorney-General that Mr. Bennett was guilty of no crime, but that he was convicted and punished solely because he was the exponent of Liberal principles and publisher of an Infidel paper.

Resolved, That as the church is in the position of an enemy, and the old political parties hav proved themselves powerless to protect us, we commend to the consideration of our friends the propriety of organizing for mutual defense under a new party banner.

Resolved, That we welcome back to home and friends and to the editorial chair, the veteran of Freethought, D. M. Bennett, and hope he may never again fall into the jaws of that bloodhound of the church, Anthony Comstock.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to The Truth Seeker, Mind and Matter, and the Investigator.

G. W. Thornbuy, President,
Mrs. E. Campbell, Secretary.

A Mass Meeting for All Women Who Want to Vote.

A mass meeting for all women who want to vote will be held at Farwell Hall, 148 Madison street, between Clark and La Salle streets, Chicago, Illinois, Wednesday, June 2, 1880, at 10 A. M. and 2 30 and 8 P. M. Every woman in the United States who sees or hears of this call is most earnestly invited to be present at this meeting. If this is impossible, she is urged to send a letter or postal, with her name and wish expressed in her briefest and strongest manner, addressed to

Care 476 West Lake st., Chicago, Ill.

Letters or postals certain to reach Chicago on June 2d can be addressed to Farwell Hall.

Now let us receive at least twenty thousand postals, and let them be sent in ample time to reach our meeting in Farwell Hall in season.

The best speakers in the United States will be present. Our delegates will proceed from this meeting to the Republican Nominating Convention to present our demand for their insertion of the following plank:

Resolved, That the right of suffrage inheres in the citizen of the United States, and we pledge ourselves to secure protection in the exercise of this right to all citizens, irrespective of sex, by an amendment to the national Constitution.

Let us meet together and, by overwhelming force of numbers, show our earnestness and our determination to secure for ourselves the acknowledged right of self-government.

Susan B. Anthony,
Vice-Pres. at Large N. W. S. A.
Matilda Joslyn Gage, Ch. Ex. Com. N. W. S. A.

Don't Allow It!

Friends and Liberals: We must not suffer so good and efficient a worker as H. L. Green to resign his position. It will never do. We must sustain him at all or any reasonable sacrifice.

No matter who we should get to fill his place, no one could fill it better nor would any one be willing to do it for nothing, and more than this, we ought not to ask it. A worker like Mr. Green, who toils for universal good, should meet universal recompense. I hav just sent him 25 cents in stamps, and shall make him a quarterly remittance hereafter as long as he holds his present position.

A spasmodic effort at sustaining any person or institution is uncertain and unreliable, for while the outlay is continuous, the help is only now and then. Therefore, let all who will make quarterly donations to the good cause in the person of friend Green, write to him at once and send in their names and first remittance, and let the aid be sure and reliable. Just think how freely money is poured into the lap of the church, and then consider how little, as a class, we Liberals pay for good, true, and honest work!

Let every one who can be just, and all who can will I trust be generous also.

Prayerfully and hopefully yours,

Snowville, Va. Elmina D. Slenker.

Labor Emancipation.—"One World at a Time."

To The Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: There has been much talk and discussion of late, among your contributors, about the next world.

A grand old gentleman, whom we readers of The Truth Seeker much admire, and who I truly believe will enjoy the next world—should there be one—as much as any of us, once wrote as follows: "One world at a time, should be our motto and our rule of action. We find in this life sufficient to exercise our entire abilities, strength, and energy. Our fellow-beings are needing much at our hands, and we hav no necessity for looking to other worlds than this for useful fields to labor in. Until we hav done all we can to benefit ourselves in the sphere of existence we now occupy, and hav done all in our power to aid and befriend our brothers and sisters of humanity, let our eyes not be withdrawn from this theater of usefulness to search after and investigate that other existence of which we can at best know so little." "Let not our attention from the present be distracted by anything real or imaginary foreign to our duty. The next world may be pleasant and delightful, but for the present it is beyond our power to change or improve it. This world is also a pleasant world, but much less a heaven than it is capable of becoming. It is in our power to improve this world and the people who liv in it."

"The more we cast about ourselves, and the more we do to improve our condition and that of those around us, the more we comprehend the almost unlimited work which lies before us and all within our powers and capacities. To this let us giv our attention and service, leaving a future state of existence until our duties here are all faithfully performed." "It should be the object of our lives to be happy ourselves and to make all around us as happy as is in our power. Happiness should ever be the object of our existence. Let this be secured, and our lives will not hav been in vain."

And again: "In no way can we so effectually prepare ourselves for a future life as in wisely and faithfully discharging our present duties. It is no part of a wise line of conduct to neglect or overlook present necessities and obligations for those we may deem to be waiting for us in the future."

Now, to those well read and argumentative thinkers who devote whole pages of our popular paper to the discussion of other lives and worlds than this, I would say, Is there not some important truth in the above? Is not the world beyond this dim and shadowy at best? and is it not impossible, with all the faculties within our reach, to inform ourselves about it with any degree of accuracy? After you hav all said your say, we readers, I fear, will be left about where you found us. Why should the Spiritualist and Materialist continue this argument. The Spiritualist does not claim that we Materialists will not exist, or will be "burnt up root and branch," or that we will ever be separated from our loved ones of the Spiritualistic faith, if we hav any such. Why, then, should there be "war to the knife" between us, or any war at all? The truth of the matter seems plain to me. Both of these classes of Liberals should work together. They should form themselves into line of battle—that is, they should form auxiliary Liberal Leagues until the list of Leagues is so long that when The Truth Seeker undertakes to publish it, a supplement will be required of about sixteen pages. In the mean time the great questions pertaining to this world will require much attention. The things of that "better land" will keep until we shall hav arranged matters on earth more to our satisfaction.

There is one great question which, if I mistake not, remains for the Liberals of America to settle, and I believe they are equal to the task. It is that of the emancipation of labor. Liberals of America, I am certain that I but put into words the thoughts of thousands of our number when I say that the work of emancipating the mind should go hand in hand with the work of emancipating labor.

I hav noticed that there is an aversion among some of our writers (prominent among this class is Robert Gunther, of this state) to the subject of labor emancipation. They are ever ready to cry, "Communism!" "Anarchy!" or, "They want us to divide." Gunther talks as follows (see Truth Seeker of Feb. 28th, p. 135): "Take to the spade and shovel, and leave the pen alone. When the United States shall hav doubled or tripled its population, there will be work enough for all; nor is there any want of work now. There are millions of acres of productive soil in the United States which can be had for the taking of them." "Tell your Socialists to take their hands out of their pockets and try to turn up something instead of clamoring and allowing themselves to be turned," etc. Such cries and such talk show the writer to be in a state of ignorance, indifference, or foolish fear. Many are surprisingly ignorant of the whole subject from want of thought. This is probably the case with Mr. Gunther. In fact, "his speech betrayeth him." Would he hav these men who cannot find employment enough where they are to make a living start out West and take up homesteads? What nonsense! How shall this be done? As they hav no money to pay railroad fare, they will of course be obliged to walk. They cannot take their wives and children, so we suppose these must be left to starve or beg. As they cannot purchase horses, oxen, plows, etc., they must borrow or "take to the spade and shovel." These men hav not the wherewith to build houses, so they must either liv in a hut or a hole in the ground. We know not what they would eat unless it be grass. A pretty hard lot truly! Put down the pen, Robert, or try another subject.

Those having but little knowledge of the subject are generally men who hav been fortunate in business or hav been set up in life by parents, or who, like Washington, hav married a rich widow. We know not which of these has been Bro. Gunther's good fortune, but would wager that he is no poor man.

The number who are in a state of indifference to the fact that there are in our own boasted country millions of laborers and their families whose lives are miserable, whose hopes are eternally blasted, and whose mental capacities are never developed on account of the perplexities and troubles arising from the difficulties of making an honest living, we believe is small among Liberals. Whether Spiritual or Material, we hav ever found Liberals battling for human rights and equal rights. As to those who are in a state of fear, they are generally those who hav in some legal manner stolen their wealth, and are afraid of some rampant system of Communism that will compel them to divide. We think their fears are groundless, and their cries a bugbear held up to stem the tide of labor emancipation.

Professor Huxley, in an address delivered in this country in 1876, said: "As you grow more people, and the pressure of population makes itself manifest, the specter of pauperism will stalk among you, and you will be very unlike Europe if Communism and Socialism do not claim to be heard. I cannot imagine anyone should envy you this great destiny, for a great destiny it is to solve these problems some way or other. Great will be your honor, great will be your position, if you solve them righteously and honestly; great your shame and your misery if you fail."

This state of things already exists. The claims of Socialism may be heard; the claims of sand-lotters may be heard; the claims of rioters and strikers may ever and anon be heard. Hundreds of thousands of strong men, with willing hearts, are idle to-day. The terrible suffering of their poverty-stricken families is too well known to all who hav cared for the poor. A few more labor-saving machines, a little more centralization of capital, and a few millions more of emigrants, and the very pillars of society will begin to shake. There is no use in denying facts. If we Liberals intend to reform and benefit mankind, we must take things as we find them. If, as Mr. Leland demonstrates, Christian morality is not natural morality, then let us commence preaching and practicing natural morality. If society is so unwisely organized that noble men and women can scarcely exist, though exerting every energy; if lives by the million are thus to be wasted and miseries untold be suffered; if labor-saving machines are to prove a curse when reason says they should shorten and lighten the hours of labor, and thus prove a blessing to all, then, in the name of reason and humanity, let us commence to reorganize society. Of what practical use is the principle that men are created free and equal if they are not to remain so through life? The important question is not, How are we created? or How will we die? but How shall we liv? Shall one half of mankind be forever the slaves of labor, or shall labor be emancipated by reorganizing society in some form of co-operative colonies, as, for example that of the "York Farming and Manufacturing Association?" If Mr. H. E. Sharp, president of the above, has not solved the problem, then he has certainly come somewhere near the mark. No system is expected to be perfect at first. I commend to the readers of The Truth Seeker his address to our "wise business men," etc.; also, the Constitution and By-laws of the above association. To me the principles he has laid down seem to be the only true method of labor emancipation, and of settling the great issue between labor and capital. They will bear the most critical examination. Here we hav community but no Communism, and a way to go West and still remain in civilization. (See Truth Seeker, page 217.)

In conclusion, let me again urge the propriety of discussion on this subject and all important questions pertaining to this world in preference to those of any other. Will not our "wise men" who write so ably on other subjects take up this one also? F. T. Wheeler.

Of Publishers, Congress is Caught!
Peterson would his fortune spend
To fight the Law to bitter end?
Zion would hav a startled look!

Reply to Geo. W. Chapman, M. D.

Dear Sir: In reply to your "Open Letter" in The Truth Seeker of April 24th, I would say, in my judgment, an effort to comply with your request, to giv you proof of immortality that you can comprehend with your peculiar "faculties" and accept as proof, would be attended by as great difficulties as an effort to create a human being out of a man's rib, or a piece of primary rock by some short process independent of evolution. You declare that your five senses and the faculty which proves to you the existence of Paris and Calcutta, are all you know anything about, and you foolishly expect that the measure that fits you will fit everybody else.

I think I alluded in the article you criticise to the difficulties in the way of your comprehending spiritual forces and entities, when I wrote of "possibilities" that are yet latent hav ten talents who hide them, others five, and others one, in the race. You remember "the good book" says, some but I am of the opinion that some havn't any at all, unless they exist in a latent conditon. For such I hav the greatest charity. I know that means are necessary to the accomplishment of ends, therefore, I never censure or sneer at those who cannot comprehend a fact or idea. You say you hav tried the five senses for half a century, and hav now come to a stand still, can go no further. I am not at all surprised that under the circumstances, without the means of "spiritual discernment," you should conclude that "Death does end all," and that "an appeal to the five senses (for proof) is played out."

Friend Chapman, that "faculty" of yours should hav told you that others may possess what you do not, and vice versa, that yourself may not be a proper standard by which to judge the whole human race, therefore, by a little strategy on your part you might hav made us believe you were verifying the good old maxim, "A wise man keepeth a close mouth." Every rule has its exception. If you possess no spiritual discernment, it does not prove a want of it in others. I hav found others besides yourself who lack this beautiful gift, who will no doubt when they reach spirit life be as difficult to convince that they are spirits, as that they are now spirits dwelling in their tabernacles of flesh. Mr. H. W. Boozer, in the same issue argues in favor of "conditional immortality," and I confess, when I find a total lack of Spirituality, when there is not the least glimmer of it, as in your case. I fear there are indeed good grounds for such a belief, yet I would not discourage anyone who is honestly struggling for light. I hav heard you cry, "Come over to Macedonia," and I'll come to the best of my ability. There is certainly hope in the idea that you may hav this gift undeveloped, and that evolution may yet arouse the latent possibilities of your soul, if you hav one.

You say, if I should tread on your toes, or, if you should retaliate and giv me an unmerciful thrashing, your eyesight would enable you to see the cause of the pain produced. Now, that "faculty" which enables you to prove the existence of Paris and Calcutta ought to hav told you that not the toes, or fist, or club was the cause of the pain, but the mind back of them. If that is the kind of reasoning that "faculty" does for you, and if that is a sample of the science or knowledge it grinds out, I should advise that it be put out as farmers do sheep—"to double." If one is going to hunt for a cause, it is not wise to shout "Eureka," and pretend to hav found it unless such is really the case.

You say "humanity is a bubble." Well, I begin to think so myself, or, with Boozer, that it may be such conditionally.

Again, you say "We hav so much psuedo-philosophy trying to be palmed off on the credulous, that it needs great exertion to expose these impostors."

Now, friend Chapman, if that is really your honest opinion, I must say with brother Babcock, "it is a little tough," and know if you "spare the rod you spoil the child," therefore, I do love you for your candor, and for your "great exertions" in our behalf. Now, brother Chapman, if you need any more light, or if you think I do, or if you hav kept anything back about this "psuedo-philosophy," or "these impostors," I insist on your speaking right out. This is a free rostrum, so far as I am concerned.

Lowell, Mich., April 24, 1880. E. A. CHAPMAN.

Origin of Life, etc.

The child receives its physical form from its mother, the seed of the spirit from the father, otherwise there would be no need of opposites, as male and female. The life-principles existed with the father before conception took place. Nor is this an isolated case, but so with all animals. Hens will lay eggs, but those eggs will not bring forth chicks without the interference of the male. If I could be convinced that external nature was the evolving principle, I might believe as you do, but I fail to see that it is so. C.

Friend C.: It is evident to me that the child receives the physical form as well as the mental (or spirit) from both parents alike. It inherits the form, features, and predilections of both; it resembles both, and is really a part of both, in every fibre of its being. The egg is as much alive before it is impregnated as after, though it is like a seed that is not placed where it can germinate. It will only retain its vitality a certain length of time. A dead egg—one that has been boiled or has become rotten—has no life and cannot become impregnated. Oxygen and hydrogen, if united, form water; if kept apart, both are only elements of water, and not water itself. Flour and water will make bread if mixed, but dry flour will not do it, nor will water, if baked by itself. The elements of life are in matter, and when they come together under favorable circumstances, life is produced, evolved, and generated, but not created. To liv is just as much a natural process as it is to die. Life, as a whole, is eternal, but no one identity is so.

As to Spiritualism, there may be phenomena that are incomprehensible under the present development of science and philosophy; but I think time will solve what now seems mysterious. There is so much humbug and deceit among mediums that it is hard to tell wilful deceivers from real performers. Some are self-deceived, and some practice deception from a desire of fame or pecuniary recompense. Now there has been an immense furor here for months concerning a Mr. Miller over in Scott county. The man gave out that he had prayed for twelve years that God would giv him the gift of healing, and at last he gave out that he had received it, and his house was besieged night and day for months. Carloads of sick, lame, halt, and blind visited him. Report said hundreds threw aside crutches and went off cured, and the blind from birth had sight given them. But though only a little way off, not one could I see that had been there. At last a young man, drawn up double from a child, went from here, and all said, "If he is cured we will believe." He came back just as he went. The doctor said the joint water was dried up and a cure was impossible. Said I, "If God givs the power he can create new joint water." But right here let me say that all this is no proof that all magnetic healers are humbugs, but that many are and all may be so. My advice is, read, study, investigate, and seek for truth as it is in nature.

Organization of a League at Lowell, Michigan.

At the meeting held in Train's Hall, Lowell, Michigan, last Sunday, May 16th, an organization of an auxiliary Liberal League was effected, with thirty-five charter members and the following officers: President, J. M. Matthewson; Secretary, Chandler Johnson; Treasurer, Mrs. George Bisbee. Much enthusiasm prevailed, and it is confidently expected that Lowell will soon hav one of the largest and most effective Leagues in Michigan.

The Liberals of Lowell are determined that those who are stealing away the liberties and rights of the people shall be thwarted in their unholy purpose; that a union of church and state shall not be accomplished; that church property shall be taxed; the Bible and all religious instruction be expelled from our public schools; that no more public funds shall be appropriated for religious purposes; that free speech, free press, free mails, and equal rights shall be secured to all the people, irrespective of religious opinions, and that this government shall be purged of all corruption until, in truth, it becomes the land of universal liberty.

Rev. J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, addressed the meeting in the forenoon on the "Objects and Work of the League," and in the evening on "Design in the Universe According to Theology as Viewed in the Light of Reason." The conclusion was that all sufferings, pains, diseases, pestilences, malarias, poisons, cruelties, misfortunes, and evil in the world were designed by the same being that designed the good, therefore, if there is a God, heis infinitely bad as well as good. In his next lecture—which will probably be some time in July—he will explain how things are as they are, or evolution. Mr. Burnham, we consider, has but few equals and no superiors on the rostrum.

CHANDLER JOHNSON,

From Friends in California.

OFFICE OF THE FREETHINKER,
603 WASHINGTON STREET.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The cruel and merciless persecution which you, as a representative Freethinker, hav suffered at the hands of the Christian bigots, Judge Benedict, Anthony Comstock & Co., has aroused the deepest indignation in the hearts of all friends of Freethought. Telegrams announcing the spirited and magnificent reception you received at Chickering Hall were published in the daily journals here, and to-day several copies of Truth, the brilliant New York daily, hav been received with a very full account of the historical event in which you were the central figure. The inhumanity of President Hayes in not pardoning you, knowing as he did that you committed no offense against the law, is a dark stain upon the life of the accidental President. But you endured your incarceration like a man, a Freethinker, and a hero. The Freethinkers of the Pacific coast, and they are legions, congratulate you on your freedom and are with you heart and soul in your work of shattering and annihilating that accursed thing called superstition. I hav the pleasure of translating for THE TRUTH SEEKER two editorial articles from the Italian journals published in this city. They speak for themselves in ringing tones, and are as follows:

PERSECUTING AN INFIDEL.

History repeats itself. In every place and age the fanatics hav been the bitter persecutors of the defenders of truth. The blind bigots cannot endure that they are shown up in their true colors, that the so-called mysteries through which they deceive the people are exposed. These Christian fanatics raise an infamous cry against those who cannot conscientiously believe in superstition, and who will not act the hypocrite in deceiving the credulous. These intolerant enemies of light and reason are capable of committing any crime and carrying out the most base and villainous vengeance to ruin men who are superior to them, men who devote their lives to the cause of humanity. D. M. Bennett of the New York TRUTH SEEKER has been a victim of the persecutions of these god-eating banditti. [Here follows a statement of the Comstock decoy and the legal or rather illegal aspects of the case.] Mr. Bennett was not the author of the book for the selling of which he was sent to the penitentiary, neither is it obscene. This charge was merely trumped up to ruin him and his Freethought publication house. At last he is out of prison. The Freethinkers of the East hav given him a grand ovation. The Bible worshipers hav not gained their point for THE TRUTH SEEKER has been carried on and is more influential than ever. Bennett is a free man. The fidelity of his friends was worthy of the great cause and merits the highest praise. We join with him and them in congratulations.—La Voce del Popolo, May 7, 1880.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE.

The priests and bigots, regardless of the sects to which they belong, resemble each other in intolerance and fanaticism. It is in this particular that all the believers in religion and sects hav an affinity amongst them, and are alike in the subtle and iniquitous manner in which they make war against their adversaries in the attempt to annihilate them. It may be said that the Jesuitic school, on the side of Catholicism, has not alone a prerogative in this respect, but the Protestants partake of it, for they seem to hav adopted the maxims of Loyola. In proof of this, we hav the harsh war which the Protestants hav waged against the Freethinker, D. M. Bennett, of New York, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and author of various works on the liberty of thought. Not being able to make an open attack, not having the courage to combat his doctrines, and wishing to absolutely overthrow and ruin him, they had recourse to an infernal stratagem, by which it will be seen how subtle, infamous, and Jesuitical were the arts used. The notorious Anthony Comstock, of the organization called the Young Men's Christian Association, through means of a decoy letter, sent to Mr. Bennett for a certain book, and, when sent to him, Comstock turned around and had Mr. Bennett arrested for sending obscene matter through the mails. Bennett is a man over sixty years of age, is a gentleman in the full sense of the term, yet he was found guilty and sentenced to thirteen months in the penitentiary for having sent the book to a person who proved to be Anthony Comstock under a false name. Behold the spirit of the fanatics, the impostors of religion!

Bennett has recently been liberated, having served his full term, and the Freethinkers of the East gave him a grand banquet in honor of the occasion in New York. The believers in Freethought, during the incarceration of the illustrious Freethinker, contributed funds liberally to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER alive, as a protest in the face of his infamous persecutors, who thus hav failed in the principal motive of their persecution."—La Scintilla Italiana, May 11.

A BIT OF INTERESTING INFORMATION.

I will briefly state that there are 35,000 Italian-Americans on the Pacific Coast, and yet they hav neither priest nor church, and what is more, nor will they hav, either. Archbishop Alemany has recently tried to procure funds to build a Catholic church for the Italian population of this city, but signally failed. La Voce del Popolo unflinchingly opposed the scheme, and to the firm but judicious course of its editor and proprietor, G. B. Cevasco, is largely due the failure. Mr. Cevasco is a true and fearless Liberal and an out-and-out Freethinker. Fully nine-tenths of our Italian population are Freethinkers; and a more industrious, temperate, and respectable element of the city's population in general is not in our midst. I hav no doubt that thousands of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be astonished to learn that the Italians of this state are Freethinkers, but the fact that they will hav neither priest nor church is evidence that they hav concluded to do their own praying whenever it is necessary to do so. They hav had all they want of priests and religion.

Yours in the glorious cause of Freethought,
San Francisco, Cal., May 12, 1880. BYRON ADONIS.

"Spiritualism and Liberalism."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A point made by Bro. E. C. Walker in your issue of April 24th deserves emphasis in further expression of its eminent soundness. He says: "I decidedly object to the use of the phrase 'Liberalists and Spiritualists.' It would indicate that Spiritualists are not Liberals." Notwithstanding our perfect acquiescence in the above, yet, once upon a time, through a typographical blunder, an article headed "Spiritualism in Literature" appeared in print "Spiritualism and Liberalism," killing dead by its irrelevancy the subject matter thereof and helping the author, who was the present writer, to undeserved literary criticism. The latter mortification, however, was nothing compared with being represented as accepting the phrase as an appropriate cognomen for those with whom we took a professed place; and we now feel that this point made by Bro. Walker should hav a complete showing up.

The indication above referred to might offset the unpleasant circumstance of other shades of belief and disbelief hanging on to the Spiritualistic kite; but it would hav given evidence of nobility of character if, in a practical work such as Liberals are engaged in, Spiritualists would drop all disposition to drag their ism into it, and unite with Leagues purposely organized for the preservation of our constitutional liberties; or, as they recently did in Philadelphia, where there was none, at once organize new Leagues and work as though interested for their success.

And why not? Why was there ever any far-fetched and strained effort at organization under the ambiguous, misleading—not square and truthful, but contradictory—name of "Spiritualists and Liberalists?" Simply because, in violation of the teachings of Spiritualism, parties seeking power through the world-worn channels of money and popularity, with those who gave their acceptance, deemed it a wise thing to bow the servile knee to the Grundy god as a means to such ends, hoping by the accession of members and the addition of their means to make an array of respectability that would insure success. Without confidence in the dignity that always pertains to a just cause, or in the power and sufficiency of the truths of Spiritualism, they aspired for the fleshpots of the world's old methods, and through cunning and more or less false presentation of things, sought a temporary success in the way of external propagandism, the modus operandi of which the light of time must surely afterward reveal. Spiritual things and spiritual truths are not based upon policies, methods, or studied falsities, but, like Humboldt's science, upon law, and, in this case, the law of inflexible justice and exact and undeviating truth and truthfulness. The phrase "Spiritualists and Materialists" describes faithfully two classes of minds. "Liberals" embrace these, and also religionists of every shade who may love the right more than the sect to which they belong. I think each person in the Liberal army should so personally conduct himself or herself in kindness to all humanity—should so separate in their action the individual from the individual's errors—as to win the cordial co-operation of those who may most widely differ from them in opinion in the real and practical work of the hour, which is the regaining of the liberties which were bequeathed to us by the men of 1776, and which are now already being torn from us, one precious bulwark after another. Strange, when the hand of the tyrant is already clutching our throat, that we can devote ourselves to contriving how we can obtain some of our neighbors' external power and influence, with which to ride forward on popularity's wave! Strange, too, when truth's portals open wide, with invitation to come in and partake of its freshness and life, we can turn away to the world's hypocritical barrenness, to gain approbation of the crowds that throng the way to death!

Weak-kneed Spiritualists, when they feel faint in their supports, should remember Garrison and his stanch fight for human liberty as a natural right of all, without color exceptions, and see how, in the march of time, events demonstrated his wisdom as well as his insight.

Grand Rapids, Mich. H. W. BOOZER.

WANTED, at West Pawlet, Vt., a minister who will preach hell and damnation, and board himself. He must be under forty and over twenty years of age, and hav a strong constitution and money in the bank. He must know nothing and preach nothing but Christ and him crucified and hell and damnation. He must be able to picture hell to the old folks in such a frightful manner that they will deed their farms to the society, and make the young folks come to Jesus in flocks. He must be without wife or family, and must board at the hotel. He must know how to blow and blackguard Spiritualism and Infidelity, and especially the church across the way and the Liberal League. A situation for life will be given to such a minister. P. S.—None other than Baptist ministers need apply.

How Reads the Record?

A Western patron sends us the following letter:

MARIONVILLE, Mo., May 12, 1880.

M. B. THURSTON, ESQ.: Through the kindness of a friend I came in possession of a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, in which I find your letter addressed to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Mr. D. M. Bennett. In this letter you congratulate him (the editor) on his speedy recovery from a protracted illness, together with his being a so much better man than Jesus & Co. (using your terms of expression), the former of which I heartily join with you; the latter I would say I most seriously doubt, therefore cannot join with you.

Now, sir, your letter arouses my sympathy for you, and also my curiosity to know where in this broad land you get matter on which to predicate your assertions (I can't call it a belief, from the fact I don't think you can think as you talk.)

Now, sir, permit me to ask you the following questions:

1. Please tell me, through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, where you find in the Bible that Jesus ever commanded those that would not hav him rule over them brought before him and slain?

2. Where do you get your grounds for believing that Jesus' curse was placed upon the fig-tree in winter?

3 Please tell me where in the Bible you find anything that conveys the idea to your mind that Jesus ever lashed any people with a thong?

4 Where do you find anything in the Bible declaring that God ever commanded his people to sell their spoilt meat or carrion to strangers?

5. Please giv me reference to Scripture or history whereby I may knew that God ever slew such a vast multitude of people for the mere cause of one having raised a certain little box-lid?

Now, sir, until you giv me those references I shall remain in my present belief, and that is, that you hav nothing to warrant you in such assertions. I hope you hav nerve enough to search for these things, and when you fail to find them, which you will most certainly do, come out like a man and confess your hitherto absurd ideas to him who is full of loving mercy and faithful to forgive (the one in three and the three in one). Yours in humanity,

M. WYRICK.

REPLY.—Not understanding whether Mr. Thurston proposes to reply to the above, we will take this occasion to briefly do so. If he sends on a response we will of course giv it a place. At all events, the queries should be answered.

1. If Mr. W. will turn to the nineteenth chapter of Luke, in the parable of the ten pieces of money, in the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh verses, he will read the following words, spoken by Jesus: "For I say unto you, that unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him. But those mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay before me."

2. If it was not in the winter that Jesus went to the fig-tree expecting to find fruit thereon, and, not finding fruit, cursed the tree, it was at least in the season of the year when no figs should hav been looked for. Mark xi, 13, in narrating the circumstance, says, "For the time of figs was not yet." It matters little, so far as the cursing was concerned, whether it was done in the winter, when the tree had neither leaves nor fruit upon it, or in the spring, when there were leaves, but no figs. It was just as unreasonable to look for figs in the spring-time, before the blossoming had taken place, as in the winter, after the leaves had fallen. The anger of Jesus, because no figs were found, was as uncalled for in the one season as the other. But, according to Mark, the cursing must hav been very effectual, for on the evening of the same day after the cursing was performed, in passing by the same unfortunate tree, it was found to be dried up and withered to its very roots. According to Matthew, however, the withering seems to hav been instantaneous, as it took place before Jesus and his disciples left the tree to pass on to Jerusalem, while, as observed, Mark has it that the withering and death of the tree was not perceived till after they had passed the day in the city and they were upon their return. This is one of the many little discrepancies in the story told of Jesus by the four writers called Evangelists; and in this case, like many others, the reader is placed in the position of the man who went to see the representation of Daniel in the lions' den, when he innocently asked which was Daniel and which were the lions, was told by the exhibitor that as he had paid his money he could take his choice.

3. If Mr. W. will turn to John ii, 14, 15, he will find it recorded that when Jesus went into the temple and found those there who sold oxen, sheep, and doves, and the changers of money sitting around, he made a scourge of small cords and drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep and oxen; and that he also poured out the changers' money and overthrew their tables. Webster, in defining the meaning of scourge, says it is a lash, a strap, or cord, especially one used to inflict pain. To scourge is to whip severely; to lash; to punish with severity; to chastise. A thong, he says, is a strap of leather. A scourge, then, is much the same thing as a thong, and, if there is any difference, the scourge is the more severe. It certainly seems like pretty rough treatment for the son of the Divine Being to beat peaceable people with a scourge or thong. If it was necessary that oxen, sheep, and doves should be offered up to appease the wrath of the Divine Father, or to secure his mercy, it was a convenience to the people for those useful animals to be kept for sale, and the rudeness and severity of the son seem out of place.

4. Deuteronomy xiv. 21, reads thus: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt giv it unto the stranger that is in thy gates that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien, for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God; thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk."

This quotation shows most clearly that while God was unwilling that his holy, chosen people should eat any animal that died itself, he had no objections that it should be given to strangers and aliens. Those, probably, were not children of his, and he did not care what offensive or diseased food they ate.

5. Mr. W. has only to turn to the fourth chapter of 1 Samuel to find how the Philistines, after having the ark of the Lord—a simple box about four feet square—in their country seven months, finding it a troublesome and mischievous piece of furniture, called upon their priests and divines to decide what should be done with it, when it was determined to send it back to the Jews, where it belonged; but deeming it not quite the handsome thing to return it empty, therefore they placed in this box—in which the God of Israel was supposed to make his residence—five golden emerods and five golden mice. And they made a new cart and yoked before it two new milch cows, whose calves had not yet been weaned, and on this cart was placed the mysterious box called the ark, when the two cows without a driver left their calves, which were taken from them, and hauled the antique box toward Beth-shemesh, which was in the country belonging to the children of Israel. As the cows went lowing along the road, either feeling very proud that they were hauling such a valuable treasure, or mourning because they were thus compelled to leave their hungry calves at home, the attention of over fifty thousand men, who happened to be at work in a harvest-field, was attracted to the heavenly freight which the young cows were hauling, and they "lifted up their eyes" at the glad display. They recognized the ark of the Lord, and rejoiced to see it coming back to them. To express their joy thereat they offered up to God the two young cows as a burnt-offering, using the cart as fuel for the purpose. It was on this occasion that one of the children of Israel, feeling a curiosity to see the condition of the inside of the box, gently raised the lid to satisfy his curiosity; but this little circumstance offended God so highly that he slew 50,070 men for the act. One man only raised the lid of the box, and for that offense 50,069 innocent men were killed. Waiving the probability of between fifty and a hundred thousand men being at work in a single harvest-field (though their farming operations must hav been very extensive), it cannot be denied that the punishment of putting to death over fifty thousand men for such a trivial affair as raising the lid of an old box was a most unfeeling act for a merciful God to be guilty of, and the friends of the slain must hav wished the box had remained with the Philistines.

If Mr. W. is satisfied with the authorities and references he calls for, he will doubtless decide, and confess where the absurd ideas are, and whether the God of the Jews was really a being "full of loving mercy and faithful to forgive" his children.

A Message from the Lord.

FROM THE MOUTH OF OR WRITTEN BY THE HAND OF THE PROPHET, A. A. TANNER, VERBATIM ET LITERATIM.

UNION UTAH

REVELATION THROUGH A. A. TANNER TO D. M. BENNETT.

May th 14 1880

Thus, saith the Lord to D. M. Bennett you are commanded to worsip me the truee and living God I am Alpha and Omega the beginng and end and besige me there is no God neather shall you worship any other God but me, for I am Jehovah th Great I. A. M. my powr is Infinite and beyond th understanding of man. Feer ye lest my judgment come upon you in an hour when you least exspect it. When ye shall be cast of from my presence forever, never to return again. For I the Lord command you to repent and if you repent not you can have no forgivness neather in this world nor in the world to come, Wharefore you shall be as Saton desireing to do evle to overcome good. But it shall not be in your power to acomplish your designes. For unto whosoever I have Commanded I have given them power to overcome evle And they are my servents who obey my covenence and keep my Commandments and unto sutch it shall be given to enheit the kingdom of Heavon and to be crownd with Eternal Glorey forever Amen.

REMARKS.—The most that can be said to the foregoing is that there is just about the same amount of proof that the Lord spoke by the prophet Tanner as that he did by the prophets Samuel, Elijah, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, Habbakkuk, Daniel, and Joe Smith, but it is to be regretted that if the Lord in this intellectual age of the world finds it necessary to call upon a prophet to write his word for him he cannot find some one who can spell decently, one who knows better than to spell such s-u-t-c-h, covenants c-o-v-e-n-e-n-c-e, evil e-v-l-e, Satan S-a-t-o-n, servants s-e-r-v-e-n-t-s, glory g-l-o-r-y, etc., etc. It is possible that the Lord don't know how to spell any better himself, as he has very little respect for knowledge and was very unwilling that his first children should partake of the fruit which grew upon the tree by that name. But even though he was a very poor speller in the first place, and never made any use of vowels in spelling words, it would seem that by a practice of five thousand years he ought to be able to spell such, glory, servants, and simple words of that kind, correctly, or it may be just a bad spell which came over him in connection with his prophet Tanner. Or possibly, again, it may be that he is trying to introduce a new system of spelling reform, as that is one of the improvements of the day. But if neither of these is the case, and he wishes to spell correctly, we would advise him in selecting a prophet to speak and write for him to look around a little further and not take up with such a blockhead as A. A. Tanner proves himself to be. There are still a few men of faith willing to speak for their god who are not such consummate fools as this man demonstrates himself to be.

It is to be inferred that the prophet A. A. Tanner wishes it to be understood that "the Lord" he represents is the old Jewish Jehovah, as he makes him to say that he is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and end (without telling us the beginning and end of what), the "Great I Am," etc. It is no longer a secret that we are by no means partial to that god. From the accounts given of him in the book which it is asserted he wrote, we entertain a very poor opinion of him, and shall never worship him, whether we worship any other god or not. We can never worship any god who instituted or approved of human slavery; who oppressed and crushed woman, depriving her of the natural rights accorded to the male sex; who commanded that men should be stoned to death for picking up a few sticks on a certain day of the week; who gave this command to his people, "Suffer not a witch to liv;" who commanded his peculiar people to massacre in cold blood all the males, young and old, of an entire peaceful nation; who ordered the male children all put to death, and every woman who had known man by lying with him; and then after putting young women and girls through this cruel and merciless examination, and after their fathers and brothers, to at least the number of sixty thousand, had been mercilessly put to death before their eyes, they were turned over—thirty-two thousand young girls and maidens—to satisfy the brutal lusts of the murderous soldiers who had made them orphans. A god capable of doing all this; capable of putting his own innocent, inoffensive son to death to satisfy his own anger and injustice; capable of creating a devil to destroy his own offspring and bring upon them eternal misery; capable of creating a hell in which to burn and fry countless millions of his creatures because they fell into the trap which he set for them, and because they simply performed the deed which he rendered it possible for them to commit, and which he knew to be inevitable. Now we cannot respect nor worship such a God as that, though through his illiterate prophet A. A. Tanner he commands us to do so. We do not fear his judgments nor aught that he can do to us. If he will only keep off his Comstocks, Tanners, Cooks, Colgates, Crosbys, Bundys, Ellises, and Abbots, we will take the risk of all he can do to injure us. We rejoice that we are to be cast from his presence forever. We should dislike to be in his society far more than any being we ever heard of. If there is nothing else to keep us from repenting, the strong desire to not be in his company will be quite sufficient. Neither do we want his forgiveness. We shall never forgive him for his evil deeds, and do not want him to forgive us our good ones.

If, however, we were on familiar terms with him, and he should ask us what we thought of his prophet, A. A. Tanner, practical phrenologist, of Salt Lake city, we should be frank and tell him that we consider him a poor ignorant fool and knave, and that if he could not succeed better in describing character from the bumps of his dupes than in speaking for the Great I Am, he had better quit the business and sell himself for soap-grease, grub-bait, fish-fodder, or anything else he can turn himself into.

Joseph Cook the Vile Calumniator.

This notorious defamer appears to be going around the country repeating his falsehoods and slanders with as much assurance as though he was telling the truth. In a report in the St. Paul Pioneer Press of his lecture in that city appears the following:

He continued his pointed illustrations and interrogatories which drew out the credence of the supreme interference with matters which causes it to move. In meeting Ingersoll's sentiments he affected to treat him with pity and contempt for his belief in the mistakes of Moses. He did not follow Ingersoll through many of his quibbles because he thinks that he is too emphatic to be in earnest. But when Ingersoll comes before Congress to introduce a bill to admit indecent literature through the mails, it is time to look after him. Robert, as well as Moses, has made mistakes. When he championed Bennett, who was imprisoned for desecrating the purity of the mails, he made a mistake. For refusing to pardon this Bennett out of prison the President has been threatened with the withdrawal of Ingersoll from the Republican party, and he has gone so far as to drag that poor woman who is mistress of the White House into the question by insinuating that she was responsible for his refusal, as President Hayes is tied to her apron strings. It is a combination of so many such miserable things which makes him even more disreputable than if he belonged to a hundred Liberal Leagues. (Great applause.)

Several positive falsehoods appear in this short quotation, and it is most singular that a man who makes the pretension to morality, truth, and religion that this loud-mouthed individual does, will persist in reiterating out-and-out untruths as he roams about the country. Among the falsehoods in this little extract these may be enumerated:

1. Ingersoll is not too emphatic to be in earnest. He is in no sense insincere. A more earnest and honest man does not exist in this country. His emphasis is a proof of his sincerity. And what is more, Joseph Cook, with all his boasting, is unable to refute a single one of the propositions made by Ingersoll.

2. Ingersoll did not go before Congress to introduce a bill to admit indecent literature through the mails. Cook lies like a Christian when he makes such a statement. Ingersoll never said a word before Congress or anywhere else in favor of indecent literature in the mails or any other place. He simply signed a petition asking Congress to repeal an unjust and unconstitutional law, rushed through in the expiring moments of Congress, when more than half the members were drunk, and which act subverts the constitutional rights of the citizen, sets up a system of espionage in every post-office in the country, and is capable of being swerved and twisted so as by the merest and basest pretext to send a man to prison for opinion's sake, for speaking and printing his honest convictions, as was done to the editor of this paper.

3. Ingersoll did not champion Bennett. We trust we can justly number him among our friends, but he did not champion us. He did urge R. B. Hayes to release us from an unjust imprisonment, but he made no mistake in doing so.

4. It is a base falsehood that Bennett was sent to prison for desecrating the purity of the mails. He has never desecrated the mails. He has never sent any obscenity through the mails, but Cook's friend, Comstock, has. Attorney-General Charles Devens gave it as his official opinion that Mr. Heywood's pamphlet is not obscene. Secretary Carl Schurz did the same, and pronounced our imprisonment for it a "gross outrage." Secretary John Sherman did much the same. Pardon Clerk Judge Gray decided the same way. Mr. C. K. Chase, in the Department of Justice, gave it as his decided opinion that the pamphlet is not obscene, and he took the trouble to learn the fact that the best booksellers in this city had sold it. He informed us while in prison that every man he knew of connected with the government was opposed to our imprisonment for mailing that pamphlet, and they considered it a great wrong and outrage—every man connected with the government save R. B. Hayes, and even he told a friend of ours that we had violated no law and did not deserve imprisonment. He even gave orders for a pardon to be made out for our release, and the pardon was made out; but the church, represented by such men as Comstock and Cook, said to Hayes: You must not let that man out of prison. If you want our support, you must not pardon that man. Hayes being weak in the knees, weak in the back, and an arrant moral coward, did not dare to displease the power of the church, and refused to perform a just deed he had decided to perform. Here was moral cowardice of the most culpable character. He ceased to be a man, and became the tool and slave of the church. Truthfully did Mr. Chase say to us while still a prisoner, "Bennett, you committed no crime, but the church was too strong for you." There is scarcely an intelligent man in the whole country who understands the merits of the case who does not know that we were very unjustly imprisoned; that it was not the obscenity of the pamphlet in question that sent us to prison, but because we were an Infidel editor and publisher, the object being to break up our legitimate business.

Even this calumniator and liar, Joe Cook, was present a part of the time during our trial, feeling anxious that we should be convicted. He took up the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," which we had written, and which was, in fact, more the cause of our conviction than was "Cupid's Yokes." He sat there before that Christian jury and read that "Open Letter;" and the look of pious horror which overspread his hypocritical countenance appears before us still. He there virtually decided against us, on the merits of that "Open Letter," and his mind could not fail to be understood by the jury. He thus aided in our conviction, and it is now in extremely bad taste and in a spirit of extremely poor Christianity, for him to be going about the country scattering his lies and vilification wherever he goes. Let him confine his talk to Jesus and the fountain of his blood, and let his betters alone.

His remarks about the influence of Mrs. Hayes over Mr. Hayes, and about his being tied to her apron strings, may be founded on truth. It is well known that priests and pious hypocrites in all parts of the country sent petitions to her asking her to use all the influence she possessed to oppose our liberation from prison. She listened to those appeals. She hearkened to those prayers. She strongly opposed our being set at liberty, and told Rutherford he must not sign our pardon, and he was good little boy enough to mind his wife, though he thereby violated his own conscience. Had Mrs. Hayes been less a bigoted Methodist, had R. B. Hayes been more a man of decision and justice, better would it hav been for us. Were Joe Cook more a man of truth and honor, better would it be for himself and the many people who inflict upon themselves the punishment of listening to him.

Anthony Comstock in the Pulpit.

On the evening of Sunday, the 16th inst., the notorious Anthony Comstock occupied the pulpit of Williston church in Portland, Maine. His subject was "Evil Reading." He said: "The mind assimilates what it reads; it is therefore important that the mind be kept full of pure thoughts." He pitched into daily papers that giv to the public sickening details of crime, which should never be touched upon, but which young children read with avidity. He also pointed out certain pictorial papers which delineated crime still more vividly. Next he gave the Boys' and Girls' Own Papers a very uncomplimentary notice, and recounted some instances showing his great ability as a detective in exposing the crimes of certain boys who had gone astray in consequence of reading story papers. But he was eloquent only when he came to attack Infidel publications. Said he: "There is still another class of publications that must be noticed. The Infidel publications are my special enemies. They hav traduced my character, my work, myself, and I am always to meet them. The Infidel publications and the Infidels deride the Bible, shake all faith, remove prayer, dry up the fountain filled with blood, attack even the spotless character of Christ. These publications are filled with blasphemy, and are yet beyond the reach of the law." After this he proceeded to repeat his antiquated and worn-out lies about the twenty-four tons of obscene matter he had seized, and about schools being persistently supplied with the foulest reading matter. He also boasted of the four hundred arrests he had caused to be made. It is evidently Infidel literature that troubles him most, and his great regret is that there is no law to suppress it. Could he hav his way, Ingersoll's lectures would be speedily discontinued, and THE TRUTH SEEKER and Truth Seeker Tracts, pamphlets, and books would be utterly suppressed.

This unclean and lying hypocrite, who disgraces any pulpit or church which he enters, did not tell his audience how he hired three unfortunate girls to expose themselves for an hour and twenty minutes before himself and five other men nearly as coarse-minded as himself, he being the master of ceremonies, attitudes, posturing, and indecent operations. He did not tell his hearers how he had taken prostitutes to a photograph gallery to hav their pictures taken in a nude state. He did not tell them of his immense museum of filthy and most obscene books and prints at his office in the building of the American Tract Society—the most extensive museum of obscenity in the world—which he takes great pleasure in exhibiting to clergymen, pious saints, editors, reporters on the daily papers, and his unclean acquaintances, and from which stock he fills his smutbag when he visits religious meetings and gatherings in various parts of the country, as well as on his visits to committees of Congress and legislatures, where he makes his nasty exhibitions with supreme gusto. We hav been informed by those who hav been through his filthy museum, both in his office and in his cellar, that there is a great amount of it, and that it takes a long time to inspect it all. There are large and fine volumes of erotic literature, the plates and illustrations of which are gotten up in the richest style of European art, taken from life, and painted by hand—large volumes the price of which was five hundred dollars and over. These, extensive as they are, cost Comstock not a cent. He took them from the dealers in this city nearly ten years ago to add to his already extensive collection of vile stuff, which he has looked over hundreds of times, and which he has gloated over and devoured until he is perfectly saturated with indecency and obscenity. If it is true, as he stated in his discourse, that "the mind assimilates what it reads," think what a mass of uncleanness and indecency he must be! His own vile den needs cleaning out more than any other place in the world.

He did not tell his audience how his assistant Britton has recently visited numerous photographers in this city, and by offers of large sums of money tried to persuade and induce them to take for him pictures of persons in a nude state, pretendedly for the use of students, and doing his best by coaxing and offers of money to induce them to do an act for which they could be arrested.

He did not tell his audience of the numerous instances where he had laid the foulest and meanest traps a man could possibly be guilty of to induce people to commit a crime for which he could arrest them and throw them into prison. He did not tell of his repeated and wicked perjuries by which he has succeeded in sending to a horrible and ignominous prison persons far freer from crime than himself.

He however showed a scar upon his cheek made by Charles Conroy, and said it was given him by an Infidel. But in this he lied egregiously, as he has in hundreds of cases. The man who gave him that cut is not an Infidel. He was born and reared in the Catholic church, and has belonged to it all his life. Comstock arrested Conroy unjustly and without a warrant, and he was justified—a man with only a left hand—to draw his penknife as he did. Had he severed Comstock's jugular vein he would hav performed a valuable service to society. No man in the country has had such power to unjustly oppress others placed in his hands, and no man has used this power so ruthlessly. He has proved himself a curse to many loyal and well disposed people. He has probably caused more intense grief, more absolute agony of mind to people far better than himself, than any man in this country. It may be thought by his Christian admirers and backers that he is doing the cause of Christianity and morality much good, but they could not be more mistaken. He is as foul a man as livs, and his continued championship will drag them down to the very dregs of indecency and disgrace. When such men as he appear in the Christian pulpit it is degrading the pulpit to the level of the brothel and his own filthy museum of obscenity and nastiness in the American Tract Society building at 150 Nassau street.

Representation at Brussels.

IN THE TRUTH SEEKER of last week notice was given of the International Congress of Freethinkers to be held in Brussels, in August of this year. The Congress will consist of the National Secular Societies of Great Britain, the British Secular Union with sixty-eight branches, and the federated Radical and Rationalistic societies of Belgium, Holland and other European countries. It is thought by many that the one hundred and ninety Liberal Leagues of the United States should send a representation to that Congress. It seems to us also important that the Liberals of America should not fail to hav a delegation there. The principles of Freethought are rapidly spreading in all civilized countries, and we should not be backward in fraternizing in a meeting with our brothers over the water. We should be cosmopolitan enough to co-operate with those in other countries who are engaged in the same work we are.

It has been suggested that not less than ten delegates should represent us in this International Freethinkers' Congress. The number does not seem too great. Mr. O. B. Frothingham is now in Europe, and it is believed he can be induced to be present and assist in representing us. He is a most worthy and able man, and will do us great credit in that convocation of Radical thinkers. There are doubtless some other Liberals from this country who will be in Europe in August that can be induced to be present during the session of the Congress, and act as delegates from this country. It has been suggested that the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER should go over as a delegate. When it was first named to us we thought we could not spare the time; the money necessary we knew we were not in possession of, THE TRUTH SEEKER requiring all the means we hav or will be likely to hav at our disposal. But since we hav thought more of the matter we hav concluded we would spare the time if the needed amount of money to meet expenses can be raised. In fact, for several reasons we would be glad to attend that Freethinkers' Congress. It was suggested that inasmuch as we hav led a year of confined and abstemious life under rather unpleasant circumstances, and as we propose to enter the lecture field in the fall, a brief European trip might do us good. We will cheerfully go, and do the best we can. In case we go, we would like to be there in time to spend a few weeks looking around the country before the Congress comes off, and be ready to return as soon as it adjourns, in time for the Freethinkers' Convention in this state and the National Liberal League Congress in the fall. We will take pleasure, during our absence, in keeping our readers regularly and fully apprised of what we see and meet with in Great Britain, Ireland, France, Belgium, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, etc. We leave it with our readers to decide whether we go or not. We will go if they send us and furnish the lucre (not "filthy") to meet the necessary expenses. It will take but little from each one able to contribute. We do not want to spend a dollar unnecessarily. We will cheerfully publish the responses we get and the amount contributed by each Liberal friend. Probably Prof. A. L. Rawson, Secretary of the National Liberal League, and also some others, will go. It is desirable to leave here about July 1st and to return soon after the first of September.

In a letter from James Parton to A. L. Rawson on the subject, he says:

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., May 19, 1880.

MY DEAR SIR: I hav received your letter of May 17th, inclosing the printed papers relating to the Congress of which I had not before heard. I shall be glad to do my part. This country ought to be well represented in such a body, and if possible by some one who can speak French easily and fluently.

I regret to say I cannot find time and cannot undertake any additional labor this summer. . . . I will bear my share in the expenses of sending a representative.

Very truly yours, JAMES PARTON.

The following is received from our friend Courtlandt Palmer:

STONINGTON, CT., May 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Sir: I inclose letter to Mr. Frothingham. Let Mr. Wright and at least twenty other strong Liberals sign it. I cannot doubt he will accept the position. All the Leagues and all the Liberals of the United States must combine to send at least two other delegates. I think Prof. A. L. Rawson and yourself would be a good choice.

I hear Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol is going to France. If so, she would make an excellent representative. But I do not wish to appear exclusive. Let the voice of the Liberals be heard through your paper and other Liberal publications. All the various orders of Freethinking people should be allowed to express their preferences as to delegates.

Call for subscriptions not to exceed $5, nor less than 25 cents. Such contributions generally agreed to would readily raise the funds to pay the expenses of the delegates. Put me down for $5. Yours truly, COURTLANDT PALMER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22, 1880.

PROF. A. L. RAWSON, Dear Sir: I notice by to-day's TRUTH SEEKER your receipt of the circular call for a congress of Freethinkers, to be held at Brussels in August. Now this call strikes me as exhibiting clear-headed, practical, common-sense business, and forestalls a crude idea I was about to formulate and lay before Mr. Bennett concerning the importance or necessity of organizing a bureau whose specialty would be to gather information of the condition of Freethought as a pre-requisite to the adoption of wise measures to advance it.

I earnestly hope that our American Liberals will take this opportunity to assert themselves, to prove equal to their sacred responsibility and worthy the expectations of friends of liberty in Europe. I inclose my little contribution to assist in defraying expenses of delegation to International Congress, $5.00; my friend, John Cosgrove, also chips in with $2.00. I also inclose a small map of the city of Brussels for 1879, in which you will find the streets, etc., answering to the local addresses of the gentlemen composing the Council of Organization. I trust our delegation will be decidedly in favor of "woman's rights." I suspect they are rather behind on this question over there; nay, I am not sure but our delegation should be composed in part of women. I am, your obedient servant,

JAMES C. LEHMER.

We shall be glad to hear from our friends upon this subject. Such Liberals as anticipate visiting Europe this season are requested to communicate with A. L. Rawson, 19 Lafayette place, or the editor of this paper.

WE hav not room to describe Ingersoll's second great speech at Booth's Theater, Sunday evening, May 23d. It was a grand affair.

BENNETT Reception, full report, in pamphlet from, sixty-six pages, at 5 cents.

BENNETT'S photos, in prison garb. Card size, 15 cents; imperials, three styles, 25 cents.

The Argument of Prof. J. H. W. Toohey,

BEFORE THE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE, FEB. 19, 1880, IN OPPOSITION TO THE PROPOSED "ACT" TO REGULATE THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: My objections to this effort to regulate the practice of medicine in this state are intensified by the painful intelligence that the present movement originated with the Social Science Association and not with the medical societies as heretofore; and the painful side of this intelligence is deepened by the respect I cherish for and the importance I attach to the mission and ministry of science in general, as well as the more Liberalizing efforts of the Social Science Association in particular. On the present occasion, however, my sympathy is wholly with the former and not with the latter, as I consider the main assumption of the proposed "act" to be as unscientific in spirit as it is misleading and mischievous in method.

The better to be understood, however, I will add that the social science I delight to honor is associated in this country and Europe with an improved and an improving civilization, the rulings of which are everywhere as non-personal as its purposes are general and generous; and here, as heretofore, I see no reason to prevent the same motives from producing the same results, nor can I understand just why the demands of hygiene and the requirements of the public health may not be effectually secured without doing violence to those fundamental principles of action.

I commence, then, by asserting I am opposed to the proposed "act" for many reasons, not the least of which is my dislike for this attempt to make it "law." I make this acknowledgement because I am fully convinced that in this as in other cases history will repeat itself against unnecessary legislation. Circumstances may seem to justify the enforcement of this act, as they hav ever and always been made to support conventional conceit, but time and a more thoughtful consideration of all the interests involved will lead to wiser conclusions. One or two particulars will make this general statement plain. For instance, near the close of the last century there were in England "one hundred and sixty different offenses which subjected the parties found guilty thereof to death, without benefit of clergy." Nevertheless the evils complained of multiplied—one class (the receivers of stolen goods) increased from three hundred to three thousand in the course of twenty years in London. By way of offset the same authority states that the Roman Empire never flourished so well as during the era of the Portian law, which abrogated the punishment of death for all offenses whatever. When a different policy and severer punishments were afterward revived the empire fell" (A Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis. By P. Colquhoun, LL.D., Chap. 1 passim. Sixth edition. London, 1800).

The logical value of these illustrations consists in this, that all laws that are made and enforced compelling conformity to conventional standards, whatever their merits may be in other particulars, is an act of intimidation and at war with the larger and better interests of civilization. Law measures as a policy, therefore, are justifiable only in cases of great danger to persons or property, and nothing short of the urgent needs of the people should be considered "sufficient reason" for passing such. Men and women, out of their great love for law and order, hav conformed many a time and oft, but the age has gone by for a thinking people to be long enslaved by the requirements of any corporation or the rulings of any legislature.

The passage of this bill, therefore, gentlemen of the committee, whatever else it may effect, will bring no change to the convictions of those now opposing it. You may fine them, and the sum of $500 will be a large one to impose upon the healers who get little or nothing for their services; you may imprison them, or do both as you may think best, and in conformity to the rulings of this bill; but should you do so, you will only prepare the way for additional legislation and the final abolition of this and such other laws as you may pass in the interests of the so-called regular medical profession.

My next objection is against the proposed board of examiners. I will not question the oft-expressed desire of the medical gentlemen to effect what to them appears to be a necessary reform, but I will show that the proposed board is unequal to the issue, the history and literature of the medical profession being authority; and what is more to the point, I will show that the regulations and requirements of the board are beyond the science and practice of a large majority of the doctors in this country and in Europe, the medical practitioners for the most part having been as conservative of their ignorance as they should hav been progressive and reformatory. On these points I submit the acknowledgments and confessions of medical men and authors and practitioners, that the supporters of this bill may be judged by their peers, and their lately-developed zeal for humanity pass for what it is worth.

As my survey must be brief, I commence with Dr. John Senac, of Paris. "He was physician to the king of France, counselor of state, and superintendent of the mineral waters of the kingdom." He died in 1770, after devoting years of scientific labor to the improvement of physiology and the harmonizing of the then medical practice. In his latest publication on the "Structure of the Heart," he wrote of medicine as "a delirium of most minds," for he found the physicians as a class opposed to the study of anatomy and physiology, and, in their zeal for mere professional experience and routine practice, indifferent to physics, chemistry, and other departments of science. This is the testimony of the distinguished Magendie, who had occasion to remind the M.D's. of his day that they "had always opposed the progress of medicine." He characterizes such conduct as "absurd," and adds, "They rejected for thirty years the discovery of the circulation of the blood; they made Parliament condemn tartar emetic, and . . at this very moment (1820) they declaim against the reality of physiological experiments and the rational and restricted use of chemistry in medicine" (Physiological and Chemical Researches, 1820, pp. 3, 4, New Haven Ed).

Of the need of this opposed and long-rejected physiological reform, there can be no rational doubt, as Dr. Charles Caldwell testifies "there were in the English language in 1794 not more than two or three works expressly on physiology, and they were exceedingly limited and otherwise unimportant. Of these, one was a small and superficial volume by Dr. Brooks, published in the early part of the last century, and a still smaller one by Dr. Cullen" (Autobiography, p. 195. Philadelphia edition, 1855).

To the same effect is the testimony of Dr. Libbald, who thought it "somewhat remarkable that no later works on the subject of medical ethics than Dr. Gregory's 'Lectures on the Duties and Qualifications of a Physician' had been published for upwards of seventy years, and Dr. Perceival's 'Medical Ethics,' published at the commencement of the present century."

Dr. James Mackness republishes these testimonies of the backwardness of the medical profession in 1846, and adds, "A complete work on medical life, suited to the wants of the present age, is still a desideratum" (Preface of Moral Aspects of Medical Life. London edition, 1846.)

How much the profession was in need of a text-book of this kind will appear from the following testimony of Dr. John C. Warren. It was given in an address to the American Medical Association in Cincinnati, in 1850, and is as appropriate now as then. He says: "I hav seen a variety of fashions in surgery and medicine. A large part of these hav passed out of my recollection, but I do remember that at one time mercury was employed in most diseases, not only general but local; inflammations and fevers, affections acute and chronic, syphilitic and scrofulous; in short, nearly all diseases, all ages, both sexes, were invaded by this potent medicine. A medical man would not hav dared to go into consultation with the statement that his patient had taken no calomel in a case of typhoid fever. And now it has been shown by the distinguished and accurate Louis and others that patients may get well of fever, not only without mercury, but without medicine, and the more simple their treatment, the more likely they are to recover. In other complaints, also, it is now used in a very limited manner" (Boston edition, 1850, pp. 45–6).

These acknowledgments occur in an address of sixty-five octavo pages, and outline the more noticeable and important improvements in surgery and medicine during half a century, nevertheless the author, in giving the work to the public, confesses that "it is very doubtful whether the publication will add anything to the stock of medical knowledge."

This acknowledgment of "physiological barrenness," to use the language of Dr. Caldwell, is worthy of more than common consideration, as it was given to the public in 1850, after a survey of half a century of effort by the rank and file of the medical fraternity, and by no less an authority than Dr. Warren, a gentleman of liberal education, large professional experience, and a "regular" among "regulars." I emphasize the confession to probe the difficulty and find, if possible, if the non-progressiveness of medicine springs from the policy of the practitioner or the defectiveness of his craft, for both are placed upon trial by the pretensions of this bill.

Here, as heretofore, however, I prefer to hav the evidence come from the doctors themselves. The issue may be dainty without being delicate, but in either case I will, so far as my limited time will permit, let the doctors speak for themselves. And just here it may be well to recall Dr. Warren, as his testimony was not quite in. He says: "Of all the habits a medical practitioner is apt to fall into, that of identical remedies in cases both identical and non-identical is the most general. Such a practice saves a great deal of thinking, and is a vast accommodation to a practitioner whose rooms are thronged with patients waiting to receive their recipes" (Address, p. 27).

To the same general end, but with more startling emphasis, is the acknowledgments of Dr. C. E. Brown-Sequard, the physician so long in attendance on the Hon. Charles Sumner during his sickness in Europe and this country. And it may be well, gentlemen of the committee, to bear in mind that the testimony I am about to read was given before a learned body of scientists in Washington during their annual meeting in the National Academy of Sciences. The Doctor said: "I am sorry to say that physicians adhere too pertinaciously to old views without regarding more recent discoveries. We are constantly holding on to our old clothing—wearing it when it is worn out. I am sorry to speak thus severely of a profession which is my own, but the discoveries of the last ten years seem scarcely to be recognized by the medical faculty. Younger members of the profession should seize opportunities to make themselves familiar with the advances of modern discovery" (Tribune, extra, May, 1874, p. 6).

Additional witnesses might be cited and their testimonies introduced to show the conflicting and almost worthless elements that hav entered into and still form a part of what passes for regular medical practice in this country and Europe, but they are unnecessary. Enough has been submitted to demonstrate the non-progressiveness of the medical system and the utter folly of investing men thus educated with authority to fine and imprison the more radical and progressive practitioners. But for fear I may hav attached unnecessary importance to the evidence already adduced, I will add the still more opposing conclusions of medical authors, writers of acknowledged ability and usefulness, in condemnation of the pretensions of the medical system. And that there may be no dispute as to the qualification of the witness, I submit as evidence the testimony of Dr. John Forbes, F.R.S., and editor of the "Cyclopedia of Practical Medicine." He says: "We do not deny that medicine has made progress, or that it can cure diseases and save life; we merely assert that the superiority in the proportion of the instances in which it does so, in the present day, is most lamentably small, all things considered, when placed side by side with the amount of any former day. In several of our commonest and most important diseases it is hardly to be questioned that the proportion is little, if at all, on our side, and in others it is manifestly against us" (quoted by Dr. Frederick Hollick in the "Family Physician" of 1851, pp. 4, 5).

Equally humiliating to the pretensions of the profession the acknowledgment of Dr. Jacob Bigelow, when he says, "The vulgar estimate of the powers of medicine is founded on the common acceptation of the name, that medicine is the art of curing diseases. This is a false definition. . . . It is because physicians allow themselves to profess and vaunt more power over disease than belongs to them," etc., etc. (Brief Expositions of Rational Medicine; Boston, 1858, pp. 29, 30.)

Conclusions like these, gentlemen of the committee, may surprise you, considering the pretensions of the proposed "act" and the oft-repeated condemnation of quacks and quackery by its supporters, but you hav yet to realize the full measure of the plausibleness of the one and the professional policy of the other. In the first there is a plea for education, scientific education, based upon anatomy and physiology, while the common assumption of the doctors supporting it is, Know physiology, understand anatomy, and you will do no great violence to medical propriety. This is the burden of nearly every one of the gentlemen who hav spoken in defense of the "act," a conclusion contradicted by nearly every authority I hav submitted, and in conflict with the ever-returning experiences of medical life. It is on the strength of this assumption, nevertheless, that you, gentlemen of the committee, are asked to believe their testimonies and giv your support to the following conclusions:

1. That a knowledge of physiology and anatomy is necessary to a wise use of medicine and a proper use of any and all power used for the relief of the sick and the help of the afflicted.

2. That certainty in therapeutics will result from this professional study, and a large increase of human usefulness and medical reform follow the enforcement of the proposed law.

3. That fœtal abortions and other criminal practices will diminish in number and eventually come to an end when the ministrations of the midwife are taken out of the hands of the non-educated and confined to a legally recognized class of practitioners.

Nothing less than the importance attached to these conclusions could induce me, Mr. Chairman, to add a word by way of amplification. As it is, my word will be brief, so limited is my time. And first, of the need of the proposed study of physiology and anatomy, as there should be a clear discrimination made between professionals needing such critical study of the human body and others whose methods of cure do not require it. That a certain amount of exactness of knowledge should be in the mind of the medical practitioner, be he or she regular or otherwise, is conceded; nay, I will go further and add, it is necessary. But here, as elsewhere, we must insist upon distinctions and recognize the principle that to him or her, to whom much is intrusted, of such much is required. In other words, the man or woman who aspires to usefulness as a surgeon or dentist should be scientifically exact in anatomy, while the professional retailer of mineral drugs and vegetable poisons should possess every kind of knowledge that can make such practice useful; or, if that is asking too much, harmless! For this class the most exact and critical knowledge of physiology and pathology should be added to the latest researches in chemistry, that in the manufacture of medical remedies they may avoid the evil and choose the good. But here, as heretofore, these preferences may be left with the individual for the most part, as specialists can now be found in nearly every department of surgery, dentistry, and therapeutics, in every town, township, and city, ready qualified for the occasion, that is, they are qualified so far as the mere study of physiology and anatomy will qualify them, and that is all the "act" calls for.

A very different class of practitioners, however, must be reached by the enforcement of this act, if the intentions of its supporters are carried out; and that class is found for the most part among the non-educated. It is made up of men and women of "peculiar gifts" of body and mind, most of whom hav reached mature if not later life. They are all healers on principle, and reformers in the healing art from conviction. They profess great faith in nature, having little or no faith in drugs or druggists, and use medicine, in the common acceptation of the term, seldom. They may be homeopathic, hydropathic, mesmeric, vegetarians, spirit healers, rubbers, or movement cure physicians, but be that as it may, each and all believe in the power to aid the sick and assist the afflicted by "the laying on of hands" and the power of one mind over another. They may touch the hand or face, and rub the body; they may fast or feast, but in all that is done, as well as all that is avoided, the intention is to give nature the first chance, and regain health and strength in the easiest way, the shortest time, and the cheapest manner; with the special understanding in all cases that he or she is the best doctor who does most with the sources and resources of magnetic and spiritual life, the whole culminating in a more or less systematic reliance on mental rather than physical medicine. Many of these medical reformers are religiously in earnest, and believe their power to analyze disease as well as their ability to cure comes of God. Theoretically they may be extravagant, but they consider their outlook humanizing and in the best sense scientific.

The opposition of this class to the act now under review is, therefore, of easy comprehension when it is known that the technical education now proposed is unnecessary to them as healers of the sick. Their analysis may be as defective as their methods of cure are simple, but to them they are satisfactory. One or both may be impressional, clairvoyant, sympathetic, mediumistic, or "God-given;" but in each there is a power that sways the judgment, controls the issues of life, and sustains the sufferer in the hour of suffering. Besides, as a class, they are too far advanced in years, are too mature in their habits and positive in their convictions, to be essentially benefited by the proposed change, particularly if fines and imprisonments are to be among the most certain and unmistakable educators.

The second assumption of the advocates of this act has been so fully answered by other speakers that it is only necessary for me to remind the committee that the confessed inability of the supporters of this act to teach therapeutics is a virtual abandonment of all that is really fundamental in the issue, for therapeutics, you will please bear in mind, is the "art of treating diseases." Not to know this art, or, knowing it, prove on trial to be incapable to make that knowledge serviceable, is a practical demonstration of the incompetency of the teacher, or the misleading character of his theory, or both. In this case, good sense and good manners can unite in condemning the pretensions of "the art" rather than the motives of the practitioner, since high medical authority has acknowledged that "therapeutics, like ethics and political economy, is still a conjectural study, incapable of demonstration in many of its great processes, and subject to various and even opposite opinions in regard to the laws and means which govern its results" (Brief Exposition of Rational Medicine, by Jacob Bigelow, M.D., Boston, 1858, p. 26). With this acknowledgment I submit this part of the testimony to your consideration without further remark.

The third assumption of the advocates of this act has been repeated so often by the medical gentlemen giving testimony in its favor that I can but regret that my limited time will not allow me to follow them, and introduce the evidence to convince you, gentlemen of the committee, of their mistake. The subject-matter is too important and their line of remark too misleading to allow me to dismiss it altogether, so I ask your indulgence while I make some additions to what has already been said. To this end you will remember the oft-repeated remark—I had almost said charges—that the fœtal abortions and other criminal practices of sexual life in this city and commonwealth are largely due to the practices of a depraved and a depraving class of men and women who mislead the simple and victimize the unfortunate while acting as medical practitioners. The statement is strong and the consequences alarming if we can believe the assertion that the results of these depraving practices hav so far spread in the city and vicinity as to endanger the public health and cause alarm for the social integrity of other places in this commonwealth. Facts, figures, and some acquaintance with the professional usages of Boston, however, justify me in saying there is more alarm and sensation than truth in the assertion, as I will show. True there hav been sent from Boston and Chelsea a few women whose places of business convicted them of criminal practices. They are now in the prisons of the state, according to sentence, and no doubt will remain there, notwithstanding the painstaking efforts that hav been made to obtain their pardons. But the noticeable fact even in these cases is that these very women were in professional relationship with the regular doctors; more, that the majority of M. D.'s in Chelsea signed the petition for the condemned woman's pardon. Just why there is so much sympathy between the educated doctors and this woman I do not know; but the fact is known, and some speculative genius has asked if in this, as in other cases, "a fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind?" Be that, however, as it may, the fact remains that the regular doctor as well as the quack is sometimes associated with crime, showing that the educated practitioner is no more exempt from professional malpractice than his less-favored brother or sister. This is the moral of history.

There is another phase of this accusation, however, that needs to be recalled in order to appreciate the evidence I am about to offer against it. I refer to the remarks of the doctors that associated the poor as well as the uneducated with the ministry of crime and the practice of fœtal abortion—assertions so surprising to me that I had to ask for something like proof before the speakers left the floor. The proof, however, has not appeared, so I submit the following evidence in proof of the misleading and false nature of the accusation; and my witnesses will not be ignored in any of the educated circles of New England society, for their testimonies hav been before the public for years, and may be found in the little volume, "A Book for Every Woman." Turning to page 17 I learn that the elder Dr. Storer, then professor of midwifery in the University of Harvard, set on foot an "anti-abortion movement in New England" as early as 1856. In 1857 "a committee, consisting of some of the most prominent and most reliable practitioners in various parts of the country, with the younger Storer as chairman, was appointed by the American Medical Association, at its meeting in Nashville, to investigate the crime, with a view to its possible suppression." In 1859, the same association, while in convention at Louisville, resolved, "in view of the prevalence and increasing frequency of the crime, publicly to enter an earnest and solemn protest against such unwarrantable destruction of human life." ("Why Not? A Book for Every Woman." By Horatio R. Storer, M. D., of Boston, 2d edition, 1867, pp. 19–23.)

These and kindred protests, however, did not correct the evil complained of, much less stop the practice of fœtal abortion, so, in 1867, Dr. Storer considered the following charges established:

1. That "forced abortions in America were of very frequent occurrence."

2. That the evil was "increasing in country districts as well as cities."

3. That in 1850 "the natural increase of population, or the excess of the births over the deaths, had of late years been wholly by those of recent foreign origin."

4. That "three years later the births in that commonwealth had resulted in favor of foreign parents in an increased ratio."

5. That "the population of the oldest states, even allowing for loss by emigration, is stationary or decreasing."

6. That "fœtal abortions are infinitely more frequent among Protestant women than among Catholics." (Ib., pp. 61–64.)

The few minutes remaining to me, Mr. Chairman, will not permit of comment, so I add, by way of sequel, the reflection of the registrar of Boston, who, in 1877, compared some of the wealthiest and some of the poorest wards of the city, and said: "The result shown in the above table is very significant. On the one side is seen that the percentage of births in a given population is far below what ought to be in any well-conditioned community. On the other side a totally opposite result is seen, not to be explained, certainly, by any physiological reasons." (Report for 1877).

Two requests, gentlemen, and I hav done. The first is to the committee, in case a bill is reported, that the study of anatomy and physiology be recommended for the higher departments of our common schools, that the great evil complained of by the petitioners may cease to exist. I offer this suggestion, as there is no conflict of opinion in the testimony of either party on the utility of science; the only issue turns on the when and the how to acquire the much coveted knowledge. The petitioners hav insisted upon the vital importance of those branches of anthropologic science, and I so far agree with them that I earnestly hope you will support the suggestion. There is a difference, however, in our outlook, which I hope you will not lose sight of, viz., that the information be given to the people for the education of the people, and not for the support of a profession.

The second request is that the members of the Social Science Association, who hav interested themselves and the doctors in the present attempt to make class legislation necessary and respectable, offer premiums and other rewards for intelligent and scientific essays on the causes of malpractice in medicine, and such other abortions of body and mind as they hav complained of, as a full and candid report from the people on many of these points would enlarge the usefulness of the Social Science Association and prepare the way for the better education of the medical profession. In any event they would show their willingness to co-operate with other reformers in directing attention to the physiology of crime and the complex nature of existing evils; more, they would aid in developing that long-looked-for fraternity of effort so necessary in utilizing all that is good, better, and best in society.

In submitting these requests, gentlemen, I take it for granted you will see to it that no report will be made that in any way can interfere with the liberties of the citizen, or abridge the time-honored customs of this commonwealth that make the right to life inalienable, the love of liberty ennobling, and the pursuit of happiness a blessing to a rejoicing people.

Abraham's Bosom.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Our orthodox friends all the while keep begging and teasing that finally they may be permitted to rest in Abraham's bosom. When we reflect that already two women, Sarah and Hagar, at least hav a squatter's right to the occupancy of that bosom, the question arises, If the millions of white and black, old and young, male and female, shall succeed in getting a resting spot in Abraham's bosom, if the original occupants will not feel, that their rights hav not been properly respected?

If Abraham was a white man and an Irishman, or if he is possessed of the Irish prejudice against the colored population, it is possible that Abraham himself might object to having his bosom overcrowded unless he himself could hav something to say as to its occupants.

And if it be true that Abraham was a black man, will the white sisters rest as contentedly in his bosom as they would if his bosom was of a different color?

But would it not first be well to inquire as to the capacity and the location of the bosom, whether in heaven or in hell?

We are told that no one can be saved except through the blood of the Son. And if this be true, Abraham must now be in hell, for the Savior did not come until it was too late to save Abraham.

We hear a great deal about Abraham's faith. And as the continual preaching about Abraham's faith caused the murder of little Edith Freeman, besides doing great harm to many others, we will now examine the Bible itself and see if the clergy tell the truth when they say that Abraham was possessed of great faith.

The Lord had promised that Isaac should liv to be the father of a large progeny, and that he should be Abraham's heir (Gen. xxi, 10; xxii, 19). Then I ask, How could Abraham hav any faith in a God who would command him to kill the child which he had promised should liv? The fact is that Abraham had not one particle of faith in God, nor does the account say that he had. But it does say that in attempting to kill his son he was actuated by fear, for as he was in the very act of cutting the throat of his child, a voice says, "Hold on, Abraham, stay thy hand, for now I know thou fearest God." There is not one word said about his faith, nor does the account intimate that he had any faith that God would save the child. He hadn't faith enough to induce him to even ask that his child might be spared. He already had pleaded in vain that Sodom and Gomorrah might be spared, but God refused for the reason that there was not found nine more men like Lot. Lot was a righteous man, and notwithstanding he would get most righteously drunk when he felt like it, God saved him, which goes to show that God was not much on the red ribbon, and with fire and brimstone he burned up those cities and all of the inhabitants. Nice God, but a little tough on babes, mothers, and innocent little children, and such as didn't get drunk like Lot. So I say, with such a display of God's wrath, it is not surprising that Abraham should, as the account says, fear such a God.

The "good" book tells us that on a certain occasion Abraham said to his wife, "Say that thou art my sister, so that it may be well with me, and that my soul may liv." Here we hav a confession that Abraham did not believe in the immortality of the soul. He thought if the Egyptians should kill him that his soul would not liv. He, like Moses, was in the habit of talking with God, but neither had any more idea about an existence after death than a three-year old steer. If Abraham had any faith, and so much of it as is claimed, why didn't he tell the Egyptians the truth and say: Gentlemen, this woman is my wife; touch her if you dare! I hav faith in a God, who will enable me, if necessary, to "lick" all Egypt in defense of my wife. But instead of, like a man, defending his wife, like a villain and coward he permitted his wife to be taken and given to another man without so much as raising a finger in her defense or uttering one word in her behalf. Ladies, don't you want to rest in Abraham's bosom? He feared the Lord; he feared the people; he was a villain and a coward, and had rather sacrifice his old wife to the lust of others than to endanger the life of his soul. So he tells her to say that thou art my sister, so that it may be well with me (didn't matter if it was well with her or not), and that my soul may liv. He had rather that his wife should be abused than to be abused himself. And do you still say that such a man's bosom is just the thing to satisfy the wants of the civilization of the nineteenth century? A man who permitted poor Hagar to be driven from his house, that she and his own unborn child might in the wilderness die of starvation? What! yes! 'tis true; get your Bibles and read for yourself. A pretty bosom, indeed!

When we reflect that Abraham had a wife and also kept a concubine; that he was willing to see his wife abused and his concubine and her child die of starvation, and that he was ready to murder and roast his only child, it seems to us that the clergy ought to stop praising him and misrepresenting the facts in the case by falsely claiming that he was full of faith, and a model worthy of the adoration of the nineteenth century, so much so that there was none like unto him.

The Logic of a Good Life.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Having read you on personal affairs, I feel tempted to say that you hav been very shabbily treated by both friends and foes. The friends were false friends; the foes were genuine ones. The foes were sincere; the friends were insincere. Insincerity is hypocrisy. A hypocrite is a rascal. You hav done well to show the rascals up. You will do better by not condescending to notice the shabby gentry in the future, but answer them with "a logic of a good life."

In the Catholic church there is a doctrine that your false friends would do well to learn, and better to practice; it is the doctrine of retribution. The church teaches if one man injures another, and that injury does not benefit society or the church, the man committing the injuries must go and ask the injured man's pardon and make all the compensation and restoration to the injured man that is in his power to make. The church says it is of no importance whether the statement was true or false; that is not to the point; it is the amount of injury done knowingly; you knew that that report would injure the man; you knew that it would not benefit either the church or society, therefore it was done with an evil intent, and it is your duty to repair the evil.

Shall we, who hav thrown off the fetters of old mother church; who boast that we are clear of her dogmas, sins, and follies; we who call ourselves reasoners; we who boast that we are lead by reason, and not by passion, are we to injure our fellow-man when it will not benefit society nor Freethought? Shame on the man that will do it! Shame on the man that will not come forward and confess his fault, promising never more to be lead by the passion of malice or another passion, but leading all passions by the beautiful force of reason! We are all frail. Come back, erring friends, come back, and ask pardon. It is more manly to confess faults than to attempt to face them out. The church of Rome takes her erring and false children back into her bosom—forgives their sins. The church of Humanity is more forgiving than the church of Rome. Then let the erring, foolish ones come back. I know that our church will forgive them. I know, dear Bennett, you, too, will forgiv them. If they will not come back, let them forever hold their peace. Whether they come back or not, whether they talk or not, never disturb yourself by referring to their slanders again. Yours faithfully,

Wilkensburg, Pa., May 16, 1880. CHARLES AUDLEY.

Spiritualists' Meeting.

A quarterly meeting of the Spiritualists of western New York will be held at Odd Fellow's Temple, Rochester, on the first Saturday and Sunday of June next. Mrs. Amelia H. Colby, Emma Taylor, J. W. Seaver, George W. Taylor, and other speakers will be present and address the meeting.

Letters from Friends.

THE BENNETT OVATION.—AN UNSPOKEN SPEECH.

The magnificent ovation to Mr. Bennett at Chickering Hall far surpassed anything of the kind I hav ever seen. But with all the stirring eloquence and fulness of expression on that occasion, some things were left unsaid which would hav been very appropriate from Mr. Wakeman or Mr. Wright. I framed a little speech in my own mind, and as I am sure it would hav been received with applause, I beg leave to exercise the same privilege as Congressman Downey, and print my unspoken speech as a part of the register of this great occasion.

Mr. President, and Freemen of New York: To-night we are proving, in spite of federal courts, that this is a republic of the highest type, the ideal republic that Solon described in his definition as a community in which an injury, done to the humblest individual was felt by the entire community. The entire community before me now resents the wrongs of Mr. Bennett, and we resent not only the wrong inflicted by religious persecution through the officers of the law, but the more malignant wrong of personal malice which sought to make him personally infamous.

We resent it as gross injustice, for the common sense and common justice of mankind judge all men by their entire record. The account is fairly balanced by public justice, which credits us with our virtues, and charges us with our feelings, of which we all hav a liberal share, and I think that when posterity shall adjust the balances on Mr. Bennett's record, but few men will hav a larger balance to their credit than this martyr of free speech.

And I would further say, that if, as has been proposed, we should send Mr. Bennett to Congress, he would not enter the Capitol with a downcast countenance, but would stand among his peers, and challenge any man to show a whiter record of general virtue and unselfish patriotism.

BURLINGTON, KAN., May 16, 1880.

BRO. BENNETT: I was gratified to learn through your paper that the massive doors of the Christian bastile had to yield to the demands of Father Time, and let you pass out into the world, and that your ovation was a success. How I would hav enjoyed the meeting of friends on the occasion of honoring our martyr and leader on his return home from captivity, caused by Christian bigotry and religious superstition.

I notice in this conflict between Christianity and Liberalism that most of the injustice that has been done to Liberals is charged to Comstock. This to my perception is reasoning from effects, instead of causes, for I hav always contended that he is but the agent of the power behind the throne. He is the legal official of what the masses think is a democratic form of government. A republican administration created the law, and Anthony, their agent, at $4 000 a year is to see that it is executed. To support our inquisitor-general, we hav our U. S. courts created by the chief executive of the nation, supported by about 65,000 priests who claim to be the special agents of God, and to cap the climax of absurdities in this era of American history. Quite a number of our journalists or skeptics, for fear of the church and priesthood, remain in the quagmires of superstition to please this church oligarchy. In taking a retrospective view of our country and people I become discouraged at the magnitude of the approaching contest which is certain to come, sooner or later, between church and state, labor and the moneyed monopolies of the Christian world. We need not quiet our fears; that it is only a struggle between the lords and serfs in this country, for if I can read the signs of the times the Christian world is on the eve of a mighty eruption to cast off the morbid matter of church and state, and evolute us higher in the plane of humanity. I am a month past sixty-two, and I would like to see the question settled before my vital force is exhausted—whether we are to hav a republic, or be the slaves of priest and kingcraft.

CHRIS BROWN.

SKANEATELES, N. Y., May 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The friends at Skaneateles congratulate you and your dear, good wife on your return to your home and office. We all like Mr. Macdonald, but we believe in the old saying, "When you hav a friend that is good and true, exchange not the old one for the new."

L. D. HUXFORD.

NEW HARTFORD, Iowa, May 9, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The man having the most enemies and the meanest, and the most friends and the best and truest of any man in the United States, is yourself.

Having addressed you several times as a prisoner, I now for the first time address you as a free man. Inclosed is six dollars, five for your two volumes on "Ancient Gods," and one to apply on subscription. Your enemies hav truly spread abroad your worth. A little over a year ago thousands of us knew you not. To-day you are known by all the earth, yes, even by the hosts of gods in heaven. Well, you owe these defamers and persecutors that hav belittled themselves, and helped place your name with the great men of the present and past ages, and I want you to pay them. Pay them well, and the best way to do it is to leave them in their own rottenness. Your work is beyond all such as they. Let their insignificance tell their worth.

I am obliged to them for sending me one of each of their "extra ten thousand." They advertised their meanness gratis. I will hereafter take it for granted that they are mean enough to do anything, if only for the sake of not being further troubled with "hi kulture."

Truly your friend, M. J. PIERCE.

HOWE, TEX., May 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Distance prevents me from being at your reception. I should be proud indeed to be one of the many who will take you by the hand and giv you words of welcome. My whole soul glows with gratitude toward you for your noble defense of our cherished right of free press and mails. There is no organization of Liberals here, and but few who are outspoken in sympathy with the cause. With the aid of THE TRUTH SEEKER I hav been able to gain a few friends among the intelligent class. I am in arrears for my paper, and I inclose two dollars, which is all that I can get at present. I hope to be able to order your new book this fall. I wish I had a hundred dollars to spend on your publications. I lend my papers to all who will read them, and send some to friends at a distance. How I hav laughed at Babcock's recital of that hog-killing story, vouched for by Mr. Mark of New Testament fame. I am much interested in the pro and con of the hereafter question, although I take my place in the ranks along with the Atheistical Materialist. I do not assert beyond a doubt that death ends all, and so giv myself the benefit of the doubt, and stand ready to receive evidence either way. I think Mrs. Slenker's reply to the Dodd Card No. 3 very good. I guess she spoke so he could hear that time. I confess to a little partiality for T. C. Leland, and hope he may liv always and continue to write for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Giv my love to Mrs. Bennett. She deserves to be happy now, and I believe the world will be benefited by all you both hav dared and suffered.

Your friend, ANNA M. BROOKS.

AYER, MASS., May 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT: Please hav the kindness to send me one of each size of both pictures of D. M. Bennett, in the costume of a "Christian institution," and citizen's dress. These reflect the real, while Bible pictures are but fancy sketches of the imagination.

Sampson's dental operation on the lion, and the talking donkey are spirited pictures, if they were true. I doubt not the latter might be reproduced and photographed to-day.

Truth will outlive its would-be assassins, and rout intrenched error. Ever for the right,

ELIJAH MYRICK.

EAST DUBUQUE, ILL., May 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, MY DEAR OLD AND VALUED FRIEND: Happy to learn you are home again. That happiness and nature's choicest blessings be yours in time allotted to you is not more devoutly desired by any living being than the writer, your old friend; and none more deeply grieved at the unjust sufferings of a just and righteous man through the wicked conspiracy of Christians—the real enemies of happiness of their fellow-man. It is truly hard and bitter to suffer as you hav for no crime or wrong to man, woman, or child, and for your untiring labor to benefit and happify others at great personal sacrifices.

Well, there is this reflection: every act must hav its equivalent, and the reward, though late, must come in some shape for good, to equalize the great injury you suffered in laboring for the enlightenment, the elevation, the purity, happiness, and the largest liberty for man.

Of this I am confident is the imperious law of nature's forces for her protection and adaptation to progress which an eternity has presented. Retrogression is impossible, change and progress is an inherent principle of matter; and the evil measured to you with injustice must be meted to your enemies, who justly deserve its return with interest. My best regards to Mrs. Bennett and yourself.

Your true friend, D. R. BURT.

VALLEY FALLS, KAN., May 21, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT Dear Sir: This is the first time I hav had the pleasure of addressing you since your release from Christian captivity. I am both pleased and surprised that you hav come out in good health and mind unimpaired. May you liv long to wield your sharp sword of reason against the foes of liberty, is my earnest desire. I hav received one of the slanderous pamphlets of which you spoke in your last issue. The fool who sent it wasted a nickel in printers' ink and postage. So far as I know, there is not a Liberal in this county who has so far forgotten himself as to become your enemy at the instigation of the designing tools of the church who are so busy slandering you.

Our League is in good condition, and numbers forty-five members. O. A. Phelps delivered a neat oration at our League meeting on the 2d of May. This meeting was held to celebrate your return to your home and editorial chair.

Inclosed you will find $3, which you will place to my credit on subscription. As I am a young man yet, I expect to liv and read THE TRUTH SEEKER for at least fifty years to come, and shall consider the $150 paid for it one of the best investments of my life. May the grand old TRUTH SEEKER always liv! Yours, A. J. SEARL.

IRWIN'S STATION, PA., May 23, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: After congratulating you upon your fortunate escape alive from the good Christians' tender mercy den, I will inform you that I am still faithful to the good healthy teaching prescribed by you through your books and papers, and can fully recommend it to my neighbors and friends as a good purgative medicine to cast out the demons of superstition and bigotry and restore to them the valuable reason that the yaller-legged, chicken-eating aristocratic paupers hav robbed them of. Giv me liberty for to believe as I can, and discriminate my belief, or giv me death, is my motto, and shall be till I die, and I want every person to hav the same liberty.

I wrote two or three letters to you when at Albany in the Christian reformatory school. I hope you received them. I hav chosen you as my patron saint, and would not exchange you for all the gods that ever emanated from cannibal brains. I never did believe in dog eating dog, neither do I believe in man eating man, much less in drinking his blood.

Go on, brother Bennett, in the good cause of publishing the truth, and unborn nations will rise up to honor and bless your noble example, always remembering that it is impossible for the straight-jacket orthodox ministers to tell the truth about those who take no stock in their ghost and witch stories, for the time has fully come when all it takes to constitute a Christian is to curse and denounce all unbelievers of their dogmas.

I wish to tell friend Chapman that my opinion of Spiritualism is nothing more than Christianity running wild. If the people of America must hav an ideal god, I suggest that D. M. Bennett make one, and I'll warrant him to be a good one if you take my word for it, but remember that prejudice doth often blind the understanding of mankind.

Yours fraternally, WM. N. RIDINGER.

HANCOCK, MD., May 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I congratulate you on your return to liberty, and hope you will wield your able pen to the destruction of Comstock & Co.

A marked instance of oppression came under my notice yesterday, and I hope you will publish it and let the people know how things are going here. A gentleman living here has a small piece of land lying along the Potomac river just outside of Hancock, and a few years ago the fence around the farm was taken away by high water, and now he is farming without fence, for the law of this state compels every man to fence against his own stock. On last Sunday a strange cow entered the gentleman's cornfield and he drove her to his barn and shut her up. Yesterday the son of the owner of the cow stole the cow away from captivity and took her home, when the owner of the farm went after her. He could not find the owner, so he went to the stable to take her out, and a bystander and uninterested party picked up a stone weighing about four pounds and told the farmer he would knock his brains out, when the farmer turned on his heel and went to the magistrate to get a warrant for the man for threatening his life, but the magistrate and the man who did the threatening were both members of the Methodist church, and the farmer was not. To be sure he was refused a warrant. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

The aforesaid farmer is my father, and I was so incensed at the proceeding that I resolved to make it public.

Yours in the cause of truth seeking,

J. D. STOLLEMEYER.

DE WITT, IOWA, May 8, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed please find $3 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year. I would like to hav been in New York last Monday to hav met with the friends of truth and freedom and taken the hero and martyr by the hand and said thrice welcome; yes, a thousand times welcome to liberty again and to freedom; and I hope their hands may be palsied and their tongues cleave to the roof of their mouths if they make another unholy attempt to deprive humanity of their most sacred rights. While truth stares them in the face they will continue to squirm, and in their dying agonies they will wound on every side both friends and foes. Their race is nearly run; it is only a question of time and a little more education to complete the emancipation of the human family from the errors of superstition and priestcraft.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is doing a noble work, and my prayer is that its editor may long liv to enjoy the sunshine of liberty and the freedom that justly belongs to all the human race.

With my best wishes to all who are laboring in the good cause for freedom, I subscribe myself your sincere friend and well wisher, E. SWEETING.

GOLD HILL, NEV., May 8, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I can assure you, my dear sir, that the Liberals here, as elsewhere, greatly rejoice to know that you are at last enjoying your freedom of which you had been so cruelly deprived. On coming out of the "bastile" how bright and inspiring must hav been to you the sunshine; how sweet to breathe once more in the atmosphere of physical and intellectual liberty! May you retain your health and strength and vigor for many long years to continue the great work in which you are engaged! Methinks I see Abbot, Bundy, etc., trembling in their boots because the lion that they kicked a little while ago while he was chained, and consequently defenseless, is at last turned loose and fully able to defend himself.

Yours, PAUL GARIEPY.

BRIGHTON, N. Y., May 15, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND: When Job was tried by the two great opposing forces, God and the devil, his friends, after his living through the crisis, gave him a piece of money, so he became far better off in every respect than before. I thought I would send $1, but find the volume "The Gods," etc., so much larger and better than I expected that I shall send you $6 instead of $5. I think you hav a better wife than Job, for she told him to curse God and die, but Mrs. Bennett showed the true jewel in every way. I trust I shall see you both at the annual meeting in August.

With true regard and esteem, your friend,

E. E. CURTIS.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 16, 1880.

WHEREAS, By reason of evolution in material things changes are produced in the affairs of governments either statutory or derogatory to the inhabitants thereof; be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, under the protection of our Liberal constitution, do form ourselves into what is known as a Local Liberal League, and hereby seek admission into the National Liberal League.

PROF. A. L. RAWSON, SEC.: Our reasons for such affiliation are to help as best we can in the promulgation of several important reforms already begun, viz, the equal rights to liberty and knowledge for the humblest citizen. The non interference in government or state affairs by any incorporated sect, religious or otherwise. The abolition of the chaplains in all national or state institutions, of whatever description. Also the Bible from schools and all public institutions of learning or jurisprudence where are gathered persons of various religious creeds. Believing that church tyranny, like its fabled hell, has become a terror in the land and its fires of bigotry are fast consuming the charter of liberty which our ancestors fought and won for us, therefore we respectfully submit the inclosed names of applicants to your consideration for the grant of a charter:

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, May 3, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find one dollar to square up my account. The balance, if there is any, put where it will do the most good. I only wish it were more. I know it takes money to furnish the munitions of war and carry on a campaign, and this fight that we hav upon our hands against superstition, bigotry, and error is no exception, but requires funds just the same. I hope this letter will find you enjoying your liberty once more. I feel ashamed and mortified to think that such injustice has been done to a citizen by my country; and my wish is that the like may never happen again.

With kind regards, I remain, Yours, L. B. DAWSON.

LAMAR CO., TEXAS, May 2, 1880.

DEAR OLD FRIEND: I hope you realize to-day that

The darkest day,
Liv till to-morrow, will hav passed away.

I hope the bracing sun and air are enjoyed by your old, well-worn system, this good Sunday morning, as by other freemen.

A year ago I was afraid you would hav to die in prison, but I now hope that the next TRUTH SEEKER will bring word that you are a live freeman. I don't want you to pray as wicked a prayer as old David did. I want you, however, to be sure to pay the orthodox devils about as fast as you can. But be sure to watch the corners, lest they get the under hold on you again. They hate you a thousand times worse than they hate the devil; and no wonder. You hav hurt them worse than the devil ever did.

I inclose one dollar, for which you will please send me the amount in copies of "The Pocasset Tragedy." by Prof. Denton. I propose to distributs them gratis. I wish you could write me a speech showing that the true, genuine Infidel livs a happier life and dies a more peaceful death than the true, genuine orthodox Christian does. A debate is expected on this question. I take the affirmative by choice.

I close by hoping to meet you in the next world. I am inclined to think that for the last thirteen months you hav had the sympathy of more people than any other person on earth. I hav felt the tender emotion for you a thousand times.

Giv your wife the name of your old patron and well wisher. Tell her I was sorry for her also. I hav seen eighty-one winters. I may never write again.

Yours fraternally, J. A. RUTHERFORD.

EUDORA, May 3, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed please find documents which will explain themselves.

The Liberals of this vicinity celebrated your release from prison in a fitting manner, and I will say that it was the first meeting of Liberals ever held in this part of the county, and was a complete success. The Liberals, being notified of the anticipated meeting, came from far and near with their wives and children, and joyfully participated in the social festivities of the occasion.

I inclose a report of the meeting, and a copy of a poem written for the occasion. We should hav taken great pleasure in attending your grand reception in New York, but the distance rendered it impossible. We hope to see you next fall at Bismarck Grove at the Liberal camp-meeting.

Your very true friends, CHARLES and MARY SEARS.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 8, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I am heartily glad to know through a dispatch from New York that you are out of the Christian church hell at Albany, and that the hall in which the exercises in honor of your release took place was all too small to hold the multitude which thronged to it. I did not write a letter direct to you in prison, but I did write to and work for your paper. I am not now, nor am I "hardly ever," in the writing mood, but I want to send a word along with money order for $3, which I inclose as subscription for another year. Although you hav just completed a pretty big job for human rights, liberty, and freedom, still I can't forgive you, dear Bennett, oh, no, no! But dear old dyed-in-the-wool Freethinker, do not despair at this, for there may yet be invented a microscope of sufficient power to enable me to see what in the name of all the dam phools there is in you to forgive. Yours for honesty,

RAWLINS, WYO., May 10, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: When I first subscribed for THE TRUTH SEEKER I was orthodox in principle, and concluded to take your paper until your unjust imprisonment should expire. Since that time I hav taken considerable pains to post myself in religious matters, and I must confess that I am surprised to learn that Christianity stands on such a poor foundation. You can count on me as a permanent subscriber to your valuable paper.

Yours truly, WM. HARDESTY.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 4, 1880.

BROTHER BENNETT: As the census enumerator will soon be on duty asking what our religion is, will you not, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, urge Freethinkers, Liberals, Spiritualists, and Infidels to stand up in manly independence and say they are disciples of Freethought and of Free Religion; that the Liberal element of this country may be fairly represented in the coming census, and that we may hav the true number of the lovers of liberty and freedom and the haters of slavery, intolerance, and religious bigotry.

It should be a credit to every honest man who does not indorse orthodox religion—either Protestant or Catholic—to say so boldly and firmly, and the Liberal element may soon become a power in the land battling for truth and right.

We heartily welcome your return to liberty again. As our friend and leader, millions of warm and honest hearts greet your return, and future generations will rise up and call you blessed. Yours for religious freedom,

R. C. TROWBRIDGE.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., May 6, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT: My dear old and much persecuted friend, as I hav now just passed my sixty-eighth birthday, and hav my domestic and financial affairs in a shape so I can devote more time to the Liberal cause, I want you to send me a few extra copies of this week's TRUTH SEEKER and oblige, S. D. MOORE.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., April 29, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: At the request of A. L. Rawson, Esq., of New York, Secretary of the National Liberal League, I hereby send you a report of the date of the organization and names of the officers of the Battle Creek Auxiliary Liberal League No. 184.

The charter members of League No. 184 met at my office April 28th and elected Ralph B. Cummings, President; Abner Hitchcock, Secretary; Horace Clark, Treasurer; and A. B. Woodcock, Chairman on public work; W. S. Gray, Chairman on discussion; A. M. Jordan, Chairman on social affairs; John Harper, Chairman on finance.

Respectfully yours truly, ABNER HITCHCOCK,
Sec. Battle Creek L. L.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK.

PORTLAND, ME., May 21, 1880.

BRO. BENNETT: Sunday, May the ninth, the good people of Portland, Me., had the pleasure of assembling themselves together in an orthodox church and listening to the great teacher Anthony (sneak) Comstock. I did not listen to his lies, for my wife was not willing for me to attend his meeting, knowing that I should surely ask him some questions, and would be likely to make some trouble in the meeting. So I stayed at home, and Mrs. Lamb went and heard what the old fraud had to say. On her return from the meeting she informed me that the pious Anthony came into the church about half past seven and ascended the coward's castle, and began by telling the parents that they must sign the petition at once to hav a law here in Maine to prevent the children from reading dime novels. He then told the congregation that he was the great Anthony Comstock, of New York, and had caused the arrest of more than four hundred of men, women, and children, for reading and sending obscene literature through the United States mail. He said his greatest enemies were Infidels. Turning partly around and showing a scar an his neck: "See what an Infidel did to me as I attempted to arrest him for selling dime novels." He told his little congregation that the old Infidel cut off three or four of his jugular veins, but as God had given him extra jugular veins he protected him and his glorious work, and brought him off victorious.

Just then some children, thinking it laughable that a man had so many jugular veins inside of his neck, made some disturbance, and the great law-giver stopped and told the children that they were in the house of God, and to keep very quiet or he should put them out of doors. The old coward in his castle then ordered them to take up contribution so that he could carry on his great and good work in other parts of God's moral vineyard. Here let me say, if Anthony Comstock ever visits this city again and lectures here I shall hear him, and then and there he will be asked if he is the man that caused the arrest of D. M. Bennett, and sent him to Albany prison for no crime, whatever. I will make it warm for him for a few moments and "don't you forget it."

I shall ever remember how I enjoyed your grand reception at Chickering Hall. What was said there on that evening will liv and glow with increasing brightness in my memory, until I pass on to a brighter plain, beyond what is called death.

Bro. Bennett, be of good cheer; your imprisonment has added to the Liberal army of this country, and has shaken many of the old orthodox bastiles to their very center, and they are ready to fall never to rise again. They hav cursed the inhabitants of earth long enough. To-day thousands are suffering in jails and prisons on account of the lies that hav been hurled from the pulpits in all parts of the civilized world. Such men as Joe Cook, Crosby, and Comstock hav been teaching people that they could lie, steal, and murder, and all would be well if they only asked Jesus to forgive them and wash away every crime.

Again I say this doctrine was, and is, cursing all that are following in the train of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Anthony Comstock, Colgate, and President Hayes must learn, with the rest of the human family, that there is no power in heaven or on earth that ever forgave one sin, or ever will, but that they hav got to answer for every deed done on earth; as there is a penalty attached to every law throughout the universe, and every penalty must be paid.

Yours truly, H. A. LAMB, M.D.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: Just think of it for a moment—150,000 errors in God's Word, and yet Christians contend it is infallible. This is orthodox logic gone to seed. Instead of poring over the Pentateuch for ever, Christians should sometimes read D. M. Bennett's "Interrogatories to Jehovah," and also Messrs. Ingersoll's and Grave's publications.

Saints and sinners should alike possess these practical works and understand their most important and invaluable treasures of truth. Like THE TRUTH SEEKER, they are indeed very instructive and truly interesting from beginning to end. No real lover of truth can afford to be without them.

Dear sir, some time, perhaps, you may find a vacant place for this "One Mistake of Moses," without crowding out better matter:

ONE MISTAKE OF MOSES.

Holy Moses,
Keep our noses
From old Egypt's putrid land.
Suffocation
Killed that nation,
Thousands rotting in the sand
By Jehovah's good command.
High and low, and great and small,
God did kindly drown them all.

Moses flee, sir,
God did see, sir,
When you murdered Phar'oh's man.
Run for life, sir;
Get a wife, sir,
Holy Moses, wicked man!
God will kill you if he can.
If you're not prepared to die,
"Meekest man," from Egypt fly!

This a sample
Good and ample
Of the men who wrote God's Word.
Cruel being!
See him fleeing,
Did he write God's holy Word?
Nothing could be more absurd.
But we must believe it though,
Or to Hades we must go.

Old King David,
Too, is saved,
Pattern of Jehovah's heart;
Bible writer,
Holy fighter,
Slew a giant—he was smart—
Murdered thousands by his art.
Killed a man to get his wife—
Such King David's holy life.

All be jolly,
Bible folly,
Ingersoll has let it out
Very neatly,
And completely
Sent old Moses up the spout,
God himself can't get him out.
Ingersoll has spoiled his fame,
Left him in disgrace and shame.

Every creature,
Priest and preacher,
Should "Mistakes of Moses" read.
Most specific,
Scientific,
Philosophic truth indeed.
Just what all mankind do need.
Get those books and read them through.
That's what Christians all should do.

Very respectfully yours, E. N. K.

SHAWANO, WIS., April 26, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Herewith I inclose postal money order with the names of ten subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER. A few months ago you had no subscribers here. This to greet you on your return from imprisonment to gratify Christian bigotry and persecution for being a Freethinker or Liberal in your religious opinions, is the response of Liberals to the Christian raid on free speech, free thought, a free press, and free mails, in the effort to suppress the brave and fearless TRUTH SEEKER.

In times past it was said that the blood of martyrs was the seed of the church. So the Christian outrage committed on you for opinion's sake, to foster and uphold a rotten system of arrant hypocrisy and the seething hotbed of sin, rascality, and licentiousness, as manifested almost daily in the person and practice of some "reverend" seducer or murderer, has aroused the Liberal element of the country to the danger that threatens personal, civil, and religious liberty, and Liberal Leagues are being organized everywhere. And the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER, instead of being suppressed, as was intended, is doubling up; and if one-half the true Liberals hav done or will do their duty its circulation will reach fifty thousand by the Fourth of July. Let every Liberal in the country resolve to do his share—and do it too—toward pushing the circulation up to this point, and it will be done with little effort.

Then again as the result of Christian bigotry and superstition to intimidate free thought, muzzle the press, and capture the people's mails, see the increasing army of free speech and Liberal thought lecturers, both men and brave women, whom a growing Liberal sentiment calls into the field, and are eagerly listened to by large and increasing audiences everywhere.

And again, Liberal and Infidel books, pamphlets, and writings, including Paine's, Ingersoll's, Underwood's, and hundreds of others, are being published because there is a demand for them; and they are bought and sold, and circulated and discussed, three hundredfold more than before THE TRUTH SEEKER was established and began blowing Gabriel's horn of Freethought, and before you were sought to be silenced by the cohorts of bigotry and superstition.

From this outlook at the harvest thus far, it is a serious question whether Christian bigotry and intolerance in the attempt to revive the methods and spirit of the Spanish Inquisition has not been a bad investment, especially when limited in methods to simple imprisonment for thirteen months and a money fine of three hundred dollars. The spirit thus manifested is eager and willing to go further, but an enlightened public sentiment and the rapid spread of Liberalism and the love of liberty forbids the powers to enforce the old methods, such as gouging out eyes, pulling out tongues by the roots with red-hot pincers, or boring them through with red-hot irons, cutting off ears and noses, pulling out finger nails, drawing and quartering, or burning at the stake, besides numerous other mild ways of dispensing the gospel to heretics and unbelievers like you. It must be a source of solemn sorrow and regret to the professed followers of the "meek and lowly" that they are limited to so poor a use of you as vulgar imprisonment and a fine, to help build up, perpetuate, illustrate, and make beautiful the gospel of "believe or be damned."

There is a rapidly growing crowd that don't believe all the humbuggery and inventions of priestcraft, and they object to being even imprisoned for not believing them, to say nothing of the burning and the eye-gouging that would as surely follow the power to inflict them now as soul saving inventions and methods, as in the past. The patent fact, visible to the naked eye, that the craft is losing its grip on the people, is what makes it desperate; and such tools as the pure and undefiled Comstock, Crosby Colgate, and a bigoted and corrupt judge that would make the infamous Jefferies blush himself out of countenance in his palmiest days of shameless infamy, are employed to suppress free speech, free thought, and a free press, and steal the freedom of the United States mails for the exclusive propagation of sectarian intolerance and bigotry.

When they get the Constitution amended, with God and the Bible recognized as the highest authorities in civil offices, with proper laws adopted to enforce the decrees of modern Christianity that imprisoned you for opinion's sake, and when they segregate—as in Mexico and France at one time—one-third or more of the property from taxation, in churches, then they will make it more lively for all Freethinkers and others who refuse to bow down and worship the gods and devils and myths they set up. It has ever been so where Christianity ran the state, and ever will be.

CAMDEN, ME., May 13, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav read your first volume of "The Gods," etc., and like it very much, and with this you will find two dollars for the second volume.

Yours truly, J. W. SIMPSON.

ROCKFORD, May 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT: Allow me to congratulate you sincerely on your release from the unjust imprisonment you hav suffered. I hope your life may be spared many years to fight the enemies of liberty. I hav enjoyed reading your excellent paper for five years, and shall as long as I can pay for it. I am a Liberal in every sense of the word, and only wish I had it in my power to do more for the cause than just to take the paper. I am surprised that so few people know anything about the Comstock postal law. I hardly find a person that knows anything about it, and cannot believe when I tell them that people are imprisoned for opinion's sake and especially your case. Intelligent people who are well posted on all other subjects hav never heard of it. There was a Liberal Convention held here early in April. I was speaking to a Universalist minister about your case; he said he had never heard of it; had heard something about the postal law; had paid no attention to it; thought it was all right, but said he would inquire into it and try to understand it better. Now in my opinion if those who go through the country lecturing would lay it before the people more would hear of it than could in any other way. Very many people will go to hear a lecture that do not hav a chance to read a Liberal paper, or would not if they had the paper take the time to read it. Excuse me for offering my opinion, but I know how ignorant the people are here on the subject. I presume this is not the only place; and the only way people will ever become enlightened on the subject is for those who lecture through the country to explain the workings of the postal laws.

Respectfully yours, S. B. MILLER.

Errata.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Errata are usually annoying and few readers look back to make good sense of mistakes; but when several that giv the appearance of clumsy thinking occur in a brief article, it is well to note them. In the piece, the "Bennett Reception," near the close of the second paragraph, "teachings" should be "teachers;" in first line of fifth paragraph, "responsibility" should be "respectability;" in fifth line of sixth paragraph, "wakened" should be "weakened."

Gods of the Present.

BY WM. ALLEN SMITH.

How silent nature moves for ages on,
As did she in her smiling natal morn.
While sink the heroes, sages, and the rest,
To lasting slumbers on earth's peaceful breast!

In never-varying order moves along
The march of centuries; the changeless song
Of birth, of life, of rosy mirth and glee,
Soon to be hushed in death successively.

Meantime hath man in battling for a God
(Sprung from his brain, that brain from earthly sod),
With eye uplifted and with arm upraised,
Struck down in death the young, the fair, and brave.

O monstrous myth, deep-rooted in the gloom
Of dark suspicions of this life's sweet boon!
A dreaded maker—still withal a friend;
Loving father—yet devil to offend.

From out the strata of the cunning thought
Of vagrant idlers has this God been brought,
Molded to suit each age as time hath sped,
A menace living, and a horror dead.

O yielding earth! O light, sweet-scented morn!
Arch-sinners thou! through thee all things were born;
O sun and moon, ye stars, thou raging sea,
Progenitors of life, what shall become of thee?

By holy wars, and wars of conquest too,
Hav millions bled to raise a favored few
Secure and firm upon a blood-bought throne,
Rulers divine their meaner subjects spurn.

What but "the fear of something after death"
And awed divinity of the kingly breath
Doth stay the hands that saved the royal breed
Who strangle freedom in the church's creed?

"Obey thy masters," says the biblic rake;
Yea, starve and rot, still giv to church and state
Its "rightful" tribute from thy slender store,
Else be ye damned e'en now and evermore.

"[illegible]olights of hell—a God, an earthly king;
The first to approve, the second to bring
Such nameless horrors on the human race
As would the lowest fiend in hell disgrace.

The church absolves the nation's bloody crime,
While millions perish ere they reach their prime;
The widow's moan, the orphan's startled cry,
Hushed in the victor's "Praise to God most high."

Monarchial rule thus re-asserted, rears
More proud its crest, though bathed in blood and tears.
"Te Deum's" ring out, the anointed church is gay
Mid countless corpses festering to decay.

America, my country, are thou not free
From all such evils of a monarchy?
Are not all welcome to thy fragrant shores
And unearthed riches of dear nature's stores?

Come, weary plebeian of another clime,
A royal welcome waits thee—thee and thine.
Our teeming West will well repay thy toil—
Be master there and monarch of the soil.

Our Christian grabbers of the public land
Mayhap hav left a narrow strip of sand.
Dig deep and wide—work like the very devil,
But if you swear we'll teach you to be civil.

For mark ye, strangers, we are Christians here
And hold our God in awe and trembling fear;
And next to him our moneyocrasy,
Which, in your land, is aristocracy.

'Tis true, our ancestors were sharp and shrewd,
And oft their hands in native blood imbrued;
Drove the poor Indian from his hunting-ground,
But thanked their God in holy prayers profound.

And more, 'tis true, we hold in fierce derision
All nations who withhold a fair division
Of suffrage votes (anent the public plunder)
To those who pay the best the largest number.

That elfin devil money has so charmed us,
And conscience quite asleep has not alarmed us,
We grind the poor man to the lowest ebb.
Yet chant our prayers ere we retire to bed.

But God is good, and ere our days be done
We'll make amends through Christ his only son;
Endow a church or school with princely sum,
Though from our half-fed toilers it be wrung.

God of the rich! "a double health to thee,"
Thou settest a troubled conscience quickly free,
And all the darker memories of the past
Deep in the shades of sweet oblivion cast.

God of the poor! alack 'tis said not here
He cheers thy heart or dries the bitter tear;
But in a world, another world to come,
Where heavenly splendors strike beholders dumb.

There shall thy virtues all resplendent shine,
There shall earth's tyrants trembling, abject, whine
For mercy—which they cannot buy or sell,
And get it—in a whirlabout to hell.

Thus saith the Book, and thus the parson cries;
I wonder now if these be truths or lies.
Truths? Some Christian hides will get a baking.
Lies? Why naught but old historic faking.

God of the priest! thine anointed flatter;
Bow, crawl, kneel, in Greek and Latin chatter
Their servile mouthings o'er and o'er again.
Art thou not tired of the dull refrain?

That thou, the maker of this earth and sea,
Of all that is, or has been, is to be,
Should seek such homage from thy human brood
Is something not quite clearly understood,

A man may smile at kings and queens in state,
For fools they are, from fools obesience take
They're something human in their puff and toggery
And love of praise, which last is mostly forgery.

Petitions, prayers, in humble suppliance tended
In awful awe on bended knee extended
To earthly rulers. A degrading task—
Crawling before a king or queenly mask.

Small business for a God who doubtless holds
Within his palm unknown and countless worlds,
This forcing men to play the cringing knave,
To fawn and flatter, thus their souls to save.

God of the kings, divine they say thou art,
And yet in kings find living counterpart.
Thou hast a throne around which subjects wheel,
And countless angels at thy foot-stool kneel.

A few short years (two thousand, more or less)
Ago, seeing the world in great distress,
You wrote a book anent the great creation,
Of future bliss, and specified damnation.

The language was not plain, interpretation
Resolved itself in acrid asservation,
Till each had thought the other better go
To seek for truth in Hade's shades below.

Then commenced a carnage that was fearful:
Burnings and atrocities most tearful.
Each faction called on God for heavenly aid:
Each swore 'twas given to their bloody trade.

And to this day that book is but a riddle,
Resembling Nero's old historic fiddle.
Upon which can be played a thousand airs,
All pointing upward to the heavenly stairs.

Some doubted Christ, and now I can't see why
He kept his godly qualities so shy,
When at his fiat all breathing on earth's sod
Might then hav seen and now hav owned a God.

He said 'twas true our Father was enraged
And quite ashamed that e'er he was engaged
Creating such a perverse generation,
And so he came—the great propitiation—

"To save us from the wrath to come," O Lord,
No man ere lived but with determined sword,
His been the chance, old Adam would hav ripped
Ere Eve and he that juicy apple sipped.

Old Adam, too, was doubtless unaware
That all posterity with him would share
The awful condemnation and confusion
Made by the devil in the snake's protrusion.

I've something mixed. God made this devil, too—
This very devil that his work o'erthrew,
And was angered to that high degree
Himself came down to die upon a tree,

That through his death we might defy the devil,
That master and concocter of all evil,
And to a pardon for a crime not done
To this forgiving grace most freely come.

That devil's still at large—a useful fellow,
Attends to business, never becomes "mellow,"
You'll find him in the synod in convention
Raising bile and fostering hot contention.

Church without a devil—life without a breath,
The devil gone would be the church's death.
How the parsons pound, abuse, and hate him!
And yet they'll not thank you to abate him.

A thoughtful man might smile at senseless creeds,
And deem them harmless and fictitious needs,
Did not their followers in their churchly mail
Reflect the devil which they all assail,

Scourge of the earth! though quenched thy fires of old,
And gone thy honors, still truth doth now unfold
Thy richest clans combined in stern array
To make the toiler poorer every day.

These rich men will not, dare not look and see
The human hives that reek with misery,
And dark abodes of want, of dulled despair,
The scenes of horror ever acting there.

They'd rather send a Cowley, ad factotam,
To teach them grace or mayhap to choke 'em,
Should they survive too long his gen'rous diet,
Which in most cases makes them wondrous quiet.

Thou polished thieves! religion guards thy treasure,
The laws protect, and men march to the measure
Of ingrained falsehood from their very birth,
Else were ye driven from the face of earth.

Thy churches and thy gods alike are vain,
To hide thy brutal acts, thy deeds of shame,
Trade in the life blood of the human race
That stains each dollar which is thine by grace.

There is a power made by evolution,
Of growing wrongs, and 'tis revolution.
Beware the falling ruins of the day
When justice banishes thy gods away!

Book Notice.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav just finished reading "Christian and Deist and the Prophets—a Business Man's Views Upon Religious and Social Matters," and find it a pleasant, sensible, and readable book. It contains within its lids strong, forcible, and reasonable arguments, sufficient to demolish every vestige of belief in the divine inspiration of the "sacred school book" in the mind of any one who really wishes for the truth and is willing to find it on Christian or on heathen ground.

If the practical humanitarian and socialistic views of the writer could generally prevail on earth we would hav no need for the fabled heaven of the Christian, but every individual who treads the soil of our dear old beautiful world would realize here a newer, fuller, and more blest enjoyment of perfected physical, intellectual, and moral happiness, such as imagination has never yet been able to conceive of. You, who think we hav more Liberal books than there is a demand for, should reflect for a moment upon the vast and almost boundless flood of holy, Christian literature that deluges every part of the so-called Christian world. It meets us everywhere from the country newspaper, school book, and almanac, to the penny tract or fifty-dollar Bible on the center-table. We hav need to keep every brain busy in thinking and every tongue in talking, every pen in writing, and every press in printing sound common sense, plain, practical truths, and a high, pure morality, to oppose all this accumulated myth, superstition, error, and fable of the ages.

This little volume is filled with so much that is sound, practical, and good that I hope it will find its way into hundreds of Liberal homes and in the libraries of Liberal Leagues and every place where it can sow good seed. The reading of good books helps to make us good men and women. Published by D. M. Bennett, No. 141 Eighth street, New York. Price, $1. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE,

Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address and the famous articles of

Prof. Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson

ON PRAYER.

With Portrait and Biographical Sketch of Prof. Tyndall. And opinions of his services by the eminent scientist, Prof.

H. HELMHOLTZ.

Paper, 12mo, 105pp., 25 cts.; cloth, heavy tinted paper, 50 cts. Inaugural and portrait only, 12mo, paper, 69pp., 10 cts.

Prof. Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world. —N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Prof. Tyndall Crosses the Rubicon.—It is the opening address of the president of the most important convention of scientific men in th world. Every line of it breathes thought, power, eloquence. It is in many respects one of the most extraordinary utterance of our time.—N. Y. Tribune.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 206pp. Price $1.

The author's conception of a possible future life on this earth is really eloquent and beautiful, and will enlist attention. A curiosity to see what a philanthropic business man has to say upon the social problem, from a poor man's standpoint, will doubtless alone induce many to buy the book. The bold and trenchant blows which he deals "Society" in all its ramifications of corruption and inhumanity; his earnest and manly plea for the social regeneration of the lower classes—will, unless we are much mistaken, make the book the best-abused and best-liked production of the day by these two classes respectively.—Critical Review.

The Best on this Theme Yet.

"AN ESSAY ON THE BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION."

By Augustus R. Grote, A.M.

The Boston Commonwealth says: It is a rationalistic examination of the scripture account, with a conclusion that the literal teaching of the theory is injurious to the mind, as it proves an impediment to intellectual advancement.

The Boston Traveler says: He has given a clear, yet condensed, criticism from the literary and scientific points of view. An eloquent and forcible protest against the tyranny of dogma. He endeavors to show that all efforts to reconcile science with a literal interpretation of the account of Genesis must only end in confusion.

The Popular Science Monthly says: The discrepancies between the two accounts are very fully indicated, and the different points of view from which they were written explained. . . . Interesting chapters follow on the myths of the old world, which resemble those of Genesis. . . The book is characterized by directness of argument, and the best material has been diligently used. . . . The archæologist and philologist will find many new points in the book, which is noteworthy for its additions to science as well as for its distinctive literary merits. Paper 40 cents. For sale by D. # STANDARD WORKS.

Published by D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. By D. M. BENNETT, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Octavo; second edition; enlarged and revised. Being the biographies and important doctrines of the most distinguished teachers, philosophers, reformers, innovators, founders of new schools of thought and religion, disbelievers in current theology, and the deepest thinkers and most active humanitarians of the world, from Menu down through the succeeding three thousand years to our own time. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church: Their Crimes and Persecutions. By D. M. BENNETT. Biographical sketches of eminent Christians, from the time of the reputed founder of Christianity to the present. A companion book to "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers." Containing a correct history of the distinguished ornaments and diabolical characters of the church. A full account is given of the bloody wars which Christianity has inhumanly waged to spread its rule. It also gives a history of Jesuitism for three centuries. The whole is based upon Christian authorities. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of Lord John Russell, who was twice Premier of England. Complete, from the London edition. This remarkable work has attracted unusual attention in England. It is the work of a brilliant young lord of Christian parents, who was brought up in the Christian faith, but who, upon investigation and reflection, became a decided unbeliever; the result of which is the elaborate work here named, the preparation of which occupied him several years. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine, Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Contains Life of Paine; his theological writings—the Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams, Letter to Camille Jordan, Of the Religion of Deism; his political Writings—Common Sense, The Crisis (Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive), and The Rights of Man. All in one octavo volume, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt, $4.50.

Supernatural Religion: An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Decidedly the ablest work in this line ever published. Probably no work printed in England excited greater interest than this. It was issued anonymously, and the great inquiry was, "Who is the author?" It is most damaging to the claims of Christianity, and its positions and statements have never been refuted by the clergy. It is very scholarly, and enters into the examination of the original Greek in detail and with great exactness. Three 8vo volumes in one, revised and corrected, and accurately reproduced from the latest London edition, which sells at $15.00. The London Times, in speaking of this great work, uses this language: "No book published in the world, at any time or in any age, has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition, than any other book." Published complete in a volume of 1,000 pages, with a full index, at the following low prices: Cloth, $4; leather, $5; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or, Physiognomy Illustrated. Being the moral and volitive dispositions of mankind as manifested in the human form and countenance. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. This work is the fruit of twenty years' diligent observation of nature, and presents a new and complete analysis and classification of the powers of the human mind and body, together with the physiognomical signs by which every faculty is disclosed. In one volume of 650 8vo pp.; illustrated by 260 cuts. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

Paine's Theological Works. In one volume, comprising Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Eskine, Essay on Dreams. Of the Religion of Deism, etc., with a Life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Political Works. In one volume, comprising Common Sense, The Crisis (Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive), The Rights of Man, and Life of Paine, with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. By THOMAS PAINE. Large type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and the Examination of Prophecies. By THOMAS PAINE. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. By THOMAS PAINE. His first and most important political work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

IF, as some suppose, Christianity is to be all summed up in any one doctrine, then the Bible is an unusually large book for so simple a purpose.—David Swing.

THE age of the confessional, of spiritual direction according to the sense which it bore during the Jesuit dominion over the human mind, is gone by.—Dean Milman.

ALL religion is the offspring of necessity, weakness, and fear. What God is—if, in truth, he be anything distinct from the world—it is beyond the power of man's understanding to know.—Pliny.

THE man scarce lives who is not more credulous than he ought to be; the natural disposition of man inclines him to believe; experience alone teaches incredulity, and seldom teaches it sufficiently.—Adam Smith.

IT is a most significant circumstance that no large society, of which the tongue is not Teutonic, has ever turned Protestant, and that wherever a language derived from that of ancient Rome is spoken, the religion of modern Rome to this day prevails.—Macaulay.

TO TURN away from the stony temples and petrified doctrines of supernaturalism, and read Bacon understandingly and know Kant and walk hand in hand with Spenser, is like coming out of some diabolical grave of sacrifice into the pure air and lightsome day, for which we were made.—Waters.

IF you cannot, or think you cannot, believe in God or immortality, then in God's name say that you cannot frankly and fearlessly. Your frankness and your fearlessness are open doors through which the lacking faith may come some day to your heart. But insincerity is a flaming sword which keeps out such a faith forever. Honesty, sincerity, first, last, and always.—J. W. Chadwick.

ST. PAUL cites, as an example of faith, the conduct of Abraham when a son was promised to him in his old age. Our version of Scripture represents Abraham as irreverently laughing and openly expressing his distrust of Almighty power. The history is, however, altogether incoherent, because, at a latter period, Abraham, marries another wife, Keturah, by whom, without divine intervention, he has six sons.—The Duke of Somerset.

NOTHING is more notorious than the fact that a man may carry the whole scheme of Christian truth in his mind from boyhood to old age without the slightest effect upon his character and aims. It is there, but it fructifies nothing. It has less influence than the multiplication table. A community may be, and often is, thoroughly intelligent in everything relating to the facts and claims of Christianity, and, at the same time, almost hopelessly frivolous or vicious.—Holland's "Every-Day Topics."

AND may, at last, my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth show,
And every herb that sips the dew;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain—
These pleasures melancholy giv
And I with thee will choose to liv.
—Milton.

MEN who hav been carefully trained to distrust authority and to rely for acquisition of knowledge upon experiment, analysis, and patient research, cannot subsequently divest themselves of a habit of mind which has become a part of their nature. They must either suppress and relinquish all religious thought, or they must apply to the records of revealed religion the same spirit of investigation which has already reopened the sources of history and extended the domain of science.—Duke of Somerset

THOSE people who believe in a devil, were they convinced that there were no such being, would lose half of their faith in God. It is strange how much of what is called Christianity hangs upon so slender a thread as the existence of a personal devil. Nearly all the dramatic power of the gospels would be lost without Satan. Orthodoxy has probably frightened half the people into its churches by picturing this imaginary individual. Half the Christian religion depends upon just such nonsense as the notion of a personal devil.—L. K. Washburn.

THERE are no such two tyrants in the world as fashion and authority, and yet fashion is only what certain people wear and authority only what certain people say. Let people change their clothes and fashion changes. Let them change their opinions and authority changes. How cheaply do we surrender our independence! If our thought is true, it needs no indorsement. If our action is right, it requires no sanction. Let us no longer follow the false teaching of the church, but the truer teaching of reason and conscience.—L. K. Washburn.

ST. PAUL, so far as we can judge from his epistles, had not more knowledge in this matter [he is speaking of the doctrine of Protestantism] than other Pharisees. He, however, reproduces their philosophy and gives to their inconsistent theories his apostolic sanction. Thus at one time he cites the metaphorical illustration of the potter and his clay, justifies a capricious selection, and says that he himself was chosen from his birth for his appointed task. At another time he proclaims, "Glory, honor, and peace to every man that worketh good, for there is no respect of persons with God.—Duke of Somerset.

Odds and Ends.

APPEARANCES are not always to be depended upon. You can't tell by the front door of a house whether the kitchen chimney smokes or not.

THE simpler a girl dresses the better she looks, says an exchange. This properly explains why ballet dancers hav so many admirers.

WHICH is the most delicate of the senses? The touch. Prove it. When you sit on a tack you don't hear it, you can't see it, you can't taste it, you can't smell it, but it's there.

DID it ever occur to you why a lawyer who is conducting a disputed will case is like a trapeze performer in a circus? It is because he flies through the heir with the greatest of fees.

A WASHINGTON correspondent writes that both Rhode Island Senators "are single men and childless." In view of the fact that they are single, their being childless is a grand idea.

WHY is a woman's switch in flames like a certain musical instrument? Because a woman's switch in flames is a falsifier, and a falsifier is a liar, and lyre is an ancient musical instrument.

A CLERGYMAN named Hoyle was so indiscreet as to register his name at a hotel in Omaha. Within half an hour no fewer than fourteen persons sent their cards to his room to ascertain if a flush royal couldn't beat four aces.

"MISSER CHAIRMAN, I has been residin' on dis yearth for ober fifty-six y'ars, an' eber since I was fo' y'ars old I has been pained to obsarve dat, no matter how fast de boys of dis kentry increase, de number of bumble-bees am allus about ten bees to one boy on the average."

"UNC' AA'ON, you is a schollar an' a gemmen; 'sides dat you is a hones' man," said a young buck to the aged darkey, as a compliment for a favor. "Phinnus," said Unc' Aa'on," "I spec' I kin turn some er dat comp'ment, all cep'n de 'sides,' cause I seed yer wen yer fell off'n dat hen-roos' and bus' yer bran new britches;" and the old man hobbled along with his rag-bag.

JOHNNY wanted to go to the circus, and his father said: "Johnny, I'd rather you'd go to school and study, and maybe you'll be President some day." Said Johnny: "Father, there's about one million boys in the United States, isn't there?" "Yes." "And every one of them stands a chance of being President?" "Yes." "Well, dad, I'll sell out my chance for a circus ticket."

WHEN a man looks back into the dim vista of bygone years, about the only things he can remember are his mother's slipper, his first pair of boots, the old schoolmaster, and the little rosy-cheeked school-girl who used to make his heart flutter whenever she asked him for a bite of his chewing-gum. Life was worth living for in those days, even though there wasn't much money.

"I DEAL," remarks the merchant; "I cut," adds the carpenter: "I turnip spades," says the gardener; "I pass," observes the railroad superintendent; "I lead hearts," adds the beau; "I follow suit," chirps the tailor with his little bill; "I trumpet," chimes the cornet player; "You cur," shouts the butcher, as the dog ran off with a two-pound steak. Thus many classes seem to be made a game of.

AUNT DINAH VISITS THE CIRCUS.

Now what's you doin', Ca'line, and whar's you bin to-day?
You habn't seen the 'nagery nor heard de music play?
Well, dis is all I'se got to say, you sholy missed a sight!
An' to tell you what I seed to-day 'twould take me half de night.
I seed do liun an' de tagger, an' de anacondy too,
Sides de awful-lookin' pottymous and ugly kangaroo;
But de smartis of de animilies I foun' in all de gang,
Es I walked amongst de cages, was de funny rangertang—
He was sittin' on a bar'l an' a chawin' on a cake.
An' I heard de niggers sayin' how he 'sembled Parson Jake—
'Cause he had a mighty schemin' way o' squelchin' up his eye,
An' hangin' down his under jaw, an' sightin' at de sky.
Well, I 'lows he rudder got me wid his manish sort o' way,
An' here's de sort o' talkin' that I knows he meant to say,
"Well, ole 'ooman, how-de-do, marm, an' what you tinks o' me?
I trabbles on de sleepin' car and gets my eatin free;
I habs de fines' vittles eberywhar I goes,
An' nebber has no trouble in patchin' up my cloes;
Now, wouldn't you like to shift yourself, jest like de tadpoles do?
An' shuffle off de nigger skin, an' be a monkey too?"
Now dat's what he was tinkin,' 'case I seen it in his face,
Dar's a heap o' schemin' Ca'line, in dis here monkey race!
An' I radder spec's he understands de shubble an' de hoe,
But de little feller's heap too keen to let de people know;
'Cause he hab to git his libbin in a mighty diffunt way,
An' dey'd hab him in de cotton patch at fifty cents a day,

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

THE Rev. Dr. Van Dyke, of Brooklyn, says, "there is no end of lying in the Talmage case." The reverend gentlemen are doing all this lying.

THE wife of the Rev. Schneider, a Presbyterian clergyman has brought suit for divorce against her husband upon a charge of extreme cruelty towards herself and being too familiar with other women.

DR. JACKSON'S arguments in favor of but two meals per day, are in brief, that this plan give both the women who do the cooking and the stomachs a chance to obtain the rest they need. The doctor's arguments are sound.

THE Rev. Joe Cook is not the only man who complains of the wines and liquors of the St. Botolph Club of Boston. The Rev. Edward Everett Hale has withdrawn his name from the list of members on that very account.

"Do you think a man can run a circus and be a Christian?" asked the serious man. "Well, I don't know—yes." "Do you think Barnum, for instance, can go to heaven?" "I think he has a good show," was the rather equivocal reply.

IT used to be a common thing for sailors to refuse to go to sea on a Friday. We hear nothing of this in these steamboat days. Steam has made all days alike. Wherever steamboats and steam engines appear superstitions disappear.

COLLETTE, the Comstock of the English Vice-Society, has been prosecuted "on the charge of appropriating trust-moneys with intent to defraud." It probably would be unsafe for much "trust-money" to be intrusted to the Collette of America.

TO ALL letters soliciting subscriptions, Lord Erskine had a regular form of reply, namely: "Sir, I feel very much honored by your application to me, and beg to subscribe [here the reader had to turn over the leaf] myself your very obedient servant," etc.

TO THOSE suffering from obstinate sleeplessness from over excitement of the brain, this suggestion is offered: Wet half a towel, apply it to the back of the neck, pressing it upwards towards the base of the brain, and fasten the dry half of the towel over so as to prevent too rapid evaporation.

THE Rev. Webster Hazlewood, of Roxbury, Mass., told his wife that he was tired of her, and wished she could get a divorce, so that he could marry a more congenial woman. She did as he requested, he providing the evidence of his own criminality. He is now free, but was compelled to retire from the ministry.

THE demand for holy images having lately decreased in Russia, some of the manufacturers changed their business and resorted to forging Russian bank notes, which gave them a handsome profit. But this occupation having been broken up by the police, the forgers hav taken up another business—that of digging in the Siberian mines.

THE Rev. Theodore Augustus Schintzler, bishop, through Mr. Cameron of Wisconsin has petitioned Congress for compensation for prayers offered up in behalf of the Union in time of the rebellion. Before this compensation is extended to him will the reverend gentleman please giv some proof that his prayers had the slightest effect upon the imaginary being to whom they were offered?

A DEACON in a Massachusetts town has a wife who is so deaf that all she can hear of his family prayer is its final "Amen." On a recent morning he was suddenly called away during prayer to look after a troublesome cow. His wife, not knowing that he had slipped out, continued kneeling. He fixed the cow, and in about half an hour came back to the room in which he had been holding his household devotions. To his astonishment, he found the good woman still on her knees. He stepped up behind her and said "Amen!" Then she arose and went about the day's duties as if nothing extraordinary had happened.

THE Puritans settled New England, which was the worst blow that region ever received. The Puritans came over to this country bent on the propagation of religious liberty and beans. They wanted freedom of thought, they did, those high-toned old immigrants; they wanted to be let alone to worship God their own way; to roast witches and other dissenters, and indulge in various other little amusements, untrammeled by the tyranny of a bigoted, superstitious, and arrogant papacy.

THE Rev. Aleck Carraway is one of the most eloquent of North Carolina's colored preachers. His exhortations at camp-meetings are wonderfully effective, and he is able to move his audiences at will. But when, on being convicted of stealing a pair of trousers, at Charlotte, he made the greatest effort of his life to convince the magistrate that the devil alone was responsible for the crime, he found that he had a hard hearer to move. "You say that you were possessed by the devil when you took the pants?" the justice said. "Yes, sah," was the reply; "it wan't me, but be debble dat was in me." "Well, then, in order to punish that devil, I will send you to prison for three months."

OF the Ober-Ammergau Passion Play, the correspondent of the London Daily News, on the spot, writes: "As far as the acting is concerned, and the arrangement and taste of the tableaux, there is nothing to be wished for. The latter, especially, are simply perfect. The tableaux representing the Lord giving manna to the people of Israel, in which over 400 persons take part, is unique and wonderful. The crowd of little children, who stand in their appointed positions without flinching or moving, is, even when regarded from a theatrical point of view, quite marvelous. George Lachner, who played the part of Judas, is almost as good an actor as Joseph Mayer, who represented Christ."

THE English Palestine Exploration Society has determined to spend from five to ten thousand dollars a year in prosecuting its researches in the Holy Land. They may explore as long as they please, they can find no proofs that there ever were such men as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Joshua, Saul, David, Samson, or that there was ever a Solomon's temple, or a rich nation under his reign. They will find instead a miserable, broken, arid, sterile country of mountains and ravines, less than forty miles wide and one hundred and forty miles long, fit only for the residence of robbers and brigands—the class of people who occupied it less than two thousand years, and then were driven to the four winds of the earth.

THE Methodist makes a statement which, if generally accepted as correct, would put an end to most of the foreign missionary effort in the world: "The notion that a heathen can, by any possibility, be damned for the lack of faith in a Christ of whom he never heard, is too barbarous and too plainly contradicted by the spirit and teachings of the gospel to deserve serious attention. But what must he do to be saved? In the absence of the gospel he can do nothing better than he is doing." The Rev. Dr. Whedon, one of the most eminent of Methodists, says: "He is a saved heathen who lives as nearly up to the light he has as does the Christian who is saved to the light he has." The Rev. Whedon did well, but if he had gone further and stated the whole truth, that the only way we can be lost is in the fog and darkness, errors, superstitions of theology and false religion, and the unchecked passions of our own natures, he would hav done still better.

THE Rev. Dr. King has thrown a bombshell into the Methodist General Conference in the shape of a preamble and resolution. The preamble first cites that passage in the address of the bishops in which a sharp condemnation is hurled at those Methodist preachers who disseminate doctrines contrary to the standards of the church. It then sets forth the fact that one of the bishops whose names appear at the bottom of this address has, since the General Conference of 1876 published a book, entitled "Beyond the Grave," which "contains things hard to be understood," and which has been criticised by several church publications as contradicting the Holy Scriptures, the Apostle's Creed, and the Articles of Religion. The resolution calls upon the Committee on the Episcopacy to examine the book and report to the General Conference. Of course it was referred without debate. The first impulse of the members of the committee will probably be to smother it, or at least to hold back the report until the last moment, when there will be no time left for discussion, and to then "draw it mild"—as mild as possible. Yet if a bishop has been teaching heresy, it is a serious business.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK'S name will probably be in all the newspapers again for some time to come, a luckless bookseller having fallen into his grip. Of late the special agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice has been anything but successful in his endeavors to annihilate his victims, and from more than one jury-box has he received a well-merited snubbing. This was not all; even his most ardent followers began to lose faith in him when he quietly left "Nana" unmolested till a million copies of that work had found their way into thousands of homes, and then only stopped its sale by the minor book venders. These successive humiliations having probably exasperated Tony, he has, in a fit of despair, pounced upon Sabin & Son, as a drowning man grasps at a floating plank. Latest accounts state that this new measure on Comstock's part is more justified by circumstances than any preceding ones, but right or wrong, the man has sinned so often against the public sense of justice that in the present instance, like the lying shepherd in the fable, he has but little sympathy to expect from any one.

MAYOR KALLOCH, of San Francisco, lately made an address to the Baptist congregation of which he is pastor, in reply to those Baptist churches which had proposed to put him on trial. He was remarkably defiant. Envy, he said, was the cause of the attacks on him. He had built up a church larger than all the others of the same denomination in San Francisco combined, and his fellow-clergymen hated him for that. Of the Baptist Convention, which had voted to take up his case, he said: "Formerly, when I looked around the Convention, I was pleased to see friends. Judge, then, of my surprise when I found those places occupied by every man who had any grievance or grudge against me. Every mean specimen of a minister was there; every man I ran against for an office in the Convention and beat and made sore was there. Why, there were men in silk hats and swallow-tails who never had any money, and where they got it from, who can tell? Yes, here were gathered the limps and panderers to do me a little harm, and for some time it looked as if they would do it; but the Lord delivered me from the mouth of the lion, and he will do it and free me from their persecutions, and prepare me for his heavenly kingdom."

MR. MOODY says that the mother of sin is unbelief; that there would be no drunkard or harlot but for unbelief. This proposition suggests interrogation points by the boxful. What unbelief is it that breeds sin? Is it the unbelief in Mohammed, in Judaism, in Christianity, or in Moody? Was there no sin in the world before these creeds existed or were assailed by unbelief? Was there none in Rome or Greece when they were unknown there? How is it, if there would be neither drunkenness nor harlotry but for unbelief, that drunkards and harlots are almost without exception among the most servile believers? Why should a rational exercise of the reason produce immorality? Did Mr. Moody ever know of an Infidel executed for murder? How many inmates of our state prisons are Infidels? How often do they stand in the docks of our criminal courts? How is it that the Jews, who, in Mr. Moody's estimation are unbelievers, are, as a class, the most law-abiding in the community? Finally, why does he single out drunkenness, often a disease, and harlotry, most often produced by misfortune, deception, or oppression, as typical sins, omitting murder, arson, theft, rape, and deliberate rascality generally? Why select for special condemnation victims of misfortune and disease as wicked sinners, and ignore deliberate criminals? The ideas of a professional evangelist are truly sublime, and he becames ridiculous only when, as Moody did, he aims at dramatic effect by inviting people in his audience to rise and be prayed for, carefully counting noses aloud before he begins.—Truth.

Sermon by George Chainey.

ECCLESIASTICAL LYNCH LAW; OR, THE INTERESTING PROBLEM OF "HOW CAN ONE OUTGROW A CREEDLESS OR NON-SECTARIAN CHURCH?"

I hav unexpectedly stumbled upon the most interesting experience of my life. I hav been arraigned virtually before the ecclesiastical bar of a creedless church, tried without judge or jury or any chance of defense, and summarily executed. The boast of Unitarians hitherto has been that they hav no creed, and hence no possible way of calling any one to account for their opinions. This is perfectly true, and hence they hav no system of ecclesiastical law like other churches. But the old spirit of orthodoxy, that claims to hav reached the end of human thought, has crept into it, and so we hav exhibited to the world the greater injustice of condemning and executing those who happen to extend the hospitality of their brains to a new idea after the barbarous and uncivilized method of what is known as lynching.

While I hav no fears myself in regard to this, still I intend to show you why I hold it in deserved contempt.

My text, which I will now read, is taken from the Christian Register, the organ of conservative Unitarianism:

"The Unitarians, both East and West, hav had another lesson of human instability—and perhaps several other valuable lessons—in the defection of Mr. George Chainey, who for three years has been minister of the church at Evansville, Indiana. On the 18th of April, after an address in which he committed himself fully to the position of agnosticism, proclaimed his acceptance of science as a substitute for religion, and denied, with a good deal of sentiment, the value and validity of what is called spiritual sentiment, he offered his resignation in a letter, in which he disclaims belief in God, calls hymns of praise 'meaningless compliments offered to infinite silence and nothingness,' and declares that to him 'the rite of prayer' is a 'hideous mockery.'

"A curious part of the proceeding is that, having taken this leap into the abyss, he reminds his congregation of their right of independent action as a Unitarian church, and beckons them to follow. As a matter of 'common honesty,' he tenders his resignation because he sees that a man who cannot call himself a Christian has no business to be a minister of a Christian church. But, as a matter of uncommon honesty, he makes this resignation take effect June 1, 1880, and proceeds to announce a series of six Sunday lectures on 'The New Gospel.' Imagine Robert E. Lee announcing that his sense of honor and loyalty to Virginia would compel him to go over to the Southern Confederacy, but that he would hold his place and commission in the army of the United States six weeks longer to carry on a short campaign in the interest of secession!

"How could it happen that the building dedicated to the worship of the Ever-living by a society organized on the basis of 'love to God and man,' and aided by the contributions of Christian people, should thus be deliberately held and used for six weeks by an avowedly antichristian teacher and non-believer in God? Probably the explanation appears in the pamphlet which contains the 'copyrighted' sermon and letter of Mr. Chainey, viz.: 'The congregation having been gradually prepared for this step by Mr. Chainey's previous discourses, almost unanimously supported him.' There is room for comment, but no need of it.

"So far we had seen solely in the light of Mr. Chainey's pamphlet. But here come Evansville papers, reporting lively proceedings at a meeting of the Unitarian society. A question was raised as to the lawfulness of using church property for a purpose contrary to the original intent. A minority wished Mr. Chainey's resignation to take effect at once; but the prevailing voice was for letting him go on. A number of new members wished to vote; they all appeared to be his partisans. Did they join a religious society in order to help pervert the organization and the property to the use of Atheism?

"Mr. Chainey, who was formerly a Methodist, had won favor and confidence by his apparent devotion to the spirit and work of religion. Only a few weeks ago he accepted for his support an installment from a fund raised 'to promote a pure Christianity.' And the course he has now taken will cause the more surprise and sorrow, because it looks like the betrayal of a trust."

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" I never dreamed that the attempt to burn up a little rubbish heap here in our church would kindle such a wide-spread conflagration. Such is life. The visitors we do not expect come, and others take us by surprise. I hav been much interested in the various and contradictory motives charged to me. I hav been honest and dishonest; sensible and foolish; selfish and unselfish. Every day brings me letters of compliment, inquiry, or condemnation. Joy and sorrow hav striven constantly together for the mastery. I am quite free to confess that I was as ignorant of what the consequences of telling the truth would be as my complainants seem to be. Some say that I hav ruined this church. If I hav, I wish that I could do the same for every other church in the land. A church that cannot giv hospitality to the ever-increasing light of truth ought to perish. But I hav no fears whatever for any good influence we may hav exerted.

The most precious reward of my toil has come to me in many a grateful acknowledgment by those who hav heard or read my sermons that I had opened for them the meaning of life and made them feel that it was a grand and glorious thing to liv. Since doing what many assure me is an act of destruction, I hav received more assurances of good done than hav come to me during the past three years. I am satisfied that this will endure.

The enemy may sow again the thorns of superstition, but enough hav seen the beauty of the flowers of liberty, love, and law to insure their future cultivation. Together we hav often roamed the broad, bright, breezy common of the universe, gathering the sweet wild flowers of nature with which to weave garlands to adorn our homes, and no one can ever again confine us in the gloomy chambers of superstition. In all that I hav done I appeal to the future, and though when the full justification comes, for ought I know, I may be hushed into the dreamless sleep of eternal rest, still it is enough if, as George Eliot sings:

> I may but join the choir invisible
> Of those immortal dead who liv again
> In lives made better by their presence. So
> To liv is heaven.
> To make undying music in the world,
> Breathing us beauteous order that controls
> With growing sway the growing life of man.
> So we inherit that sweet purity
> For which we struggled, groaned, and agonized
> With widening retrospect that bred despair,
> That better self shall liv till human time
> Shall fold its eyelids, and the human sky
> Be gathered, like a scroll within the tomb,
> Unread forever.

But to go back, though as already said, I did not know the consequences that would follow this step, I quite readily confess to a feeling of capability of doing some honest work for which the world will be willing to pay me. And when the brave and tender companion, who has journeyed by my side over the path of life uncomplainingly, whether her feet pressed the cruel thorns of adversity or the sweet flowers of prosperity, said that she would share a crust rather than hav me quench one ray of truth that had come to gladden our lives, it was quite easy to dare any fate. If I had known you as well as I do now before I had taken this step, I should hav had no reason whatever to fear the result. While I knew that many had always responded to every forward-looking word, still one of the most pleasant surprises of life came to me when I felt the warm clasp of many a hand and received your hearty and sincere approval, and found that you, too, had suffered from the same inconsistency between the sentiments of my sermons and the form of prayer and praise associated with them. I hav no desire and no intention to engage in any quarrel. Life is far too short and too valuable to spend in trying to catch the water of justice through the seive of a law court, where, through the unjust barbarism of the past, that can still be enforced, we cannot speak in our own defense unless we take an oath that would sully our honor. I will surrender any right before bowing for one moment the knee at the blood-stained altars of superstition.

I sympathize deeply with any who unwittingly hav been caught in the snare of orthodoxy and bound at last to the barren rock of a dogmatic assertion that has no foundation in nature or reason. I know how hard it is to escape from the bondage of the past. The shadow of fear, too faint to observe, often obscures the free vision. A cut on the finger in childhood leaves a scar which we bear to the grave. So the gashes inflicted upon the mind by our early theological training produces a scar that is ample apology for the mental obliquity of many a professed Liberal. I want it understood that while I will not yield one inch of right to express my freest thought, I at the same time hold in fullest respect those who look upon my course as a defection from the true orbit of life.

A dear friend in the ministry writes me, saying: "I honor the manly integrity which prompted your steps; I well understand the centrifugal force that for a long time has been the stronger power tugging at you and leading you out of the common orbit. I also believe in the value of this force, but, dear brother, while yielding, I trust not one whit more than you to any conservative expediency, I can but think that there is a beauty and significance in the centripetal force that bends the straight lines of our individualism into the circle of human helpfulness and co-operation." I am sure that he does not see and feel this any more than I do. I long as much as any one for the sweet harmonies of a true and helpful fellowship. I shall slight no power that draws me near to any other earnest and truthful soul, but we must each one be true to self, and then it must follow as the night the day we cannot then be false to any man. We can only work with those whose orbit is in harmony with our own. If one choose to wander away from the ever-shining truth that is the common attraction to us all, we cannot forsake our course to follow him into the darkness. Our path is onward. It may be as often through the gloom of night as the light of day, still it is ever onward into light. The sun hastes to its setting, but we know that it will also rise again; the winter of doubt spreads its bleak mantle around us, but we know that it will be followed with a new spring-time of life and beauty; and so in these delicious days of spring, while the air is filled with the perfume of countless flowers, while on every side we behold the promise of new life, we go forward rejoicing in the higher joys of awakening thought and brighter visions of moral beauty that enchant our every sense.

Still, life is not perfect. In the heart of many a beautiful bud lurks the worm that will smite and destroy its beauty before it has gladdened the world. Many a butterfly that adorns the common air and delights a child with its gorgeous hues will carry trouble to some honest market woman who toils beneath the scorching sun to earn a scant support for herself and orphan children. Beneath the lushful green on many a waving field of wheat there works an enemy that will blight the farmer's hope and snatch from his hands the reward of his toil. So beneath this spring-time of thought lurks many a hidden evil. While our duty becomes clearer and life grows richer and stronger with knowing the worst and seeing the ground on which we must build the temple of the future, still the mystery and complexity of it is not all solved. We still hav abundant room for patience with those who think us wrong. Life to us, instead of being always a choice between right and wrong, is at the best often only a choice between two wrongs. This is the position of many a free mind to-day.

To be true to thought is to pain and offend one's dearest friends, while to be true to our friends is to quench in the darkness of silence the light of truth on which the deliverance of humanity from the gloomy caverns of superstition depends. Which shall it be? I think, as you know, that the head should rule the heart, while many still honestly think that the heart should sway the head. Before I left the Methodist church I fought with this problem for nearly three years. To be true to the vision of hope and progress that lured me with its unspeakable beauty, I had to disappoint the hopes and ambitions of my dearest friends, and pierce my own mother's heart as with a sword. No words can describe this conflict of heart and mind as time after time I accepted for the sake of love the work of a hypocrite.

It was not, however, as bad as I feared, for the influence that had broken my fetters had not entirely been powerless on them. I know that in this step I hav pained some of my good friends. Still, from the past I take comfort, for I know that it is but a thin veil that hangs between me and any one who has applauded the sermons preached in this church for the last three years. Before I took this step I weighed as carefully as I could all the conflicting claims in the scales of justice. No course was open to me entirely free of objection. I could only resolve to be first true to self and right, at any cost. The advice I gave this congregation, grounded on the independence of every Unitarian church, was free from every selfish interest. I gave it in good faith, as the product of all I hav learned about Unitarianism, both East and West.

When I came into its ministry I was told by Robert Collyer, whose kindness and generous help I can never hope to fully repay, that it was a place where I could always enjoy a free wing. I knew that Theodore Parker had been scouted as a heretic and cut off from almost all of its fellowship for being in his life a little in advance of the rest, still I saw that he was looked up to now by almost all as a prophet and leader.

In the first sermon I preached in this pulpit I declared that I would never preach any gospel but which accorded with my own reason and experience. I showed how that individuality is the saving power of the world. That sermon has gone, with a number of others of like character, in a volume as my representative into many Unitarian homes. For it I never received anything but praise. Last summer, at a conference gathering of Unitarians on the beautiful banks of Lake Winnipiseogee, I preached a sermon in which the central thought was that the head must ever rule the heart; that religion was loyalty to no creed but absolute mental sincerity. Though criticised and disapproved by the secretary of the association and one or two others, it was heartily indorsed by almost every one else present.

I was never more surprised than I was at that time to hear the secretary of the A. U. A. confess that he was in the habit of advising orthodox ministers no longer believing in their doctrines and wishing to find a Unitarian pulpit to remain as they were and seek to reform the church on the inside.

The administrator of the interests of a church whose whole history is a fraud and a farce, if religion be not absolute sincerity to one's thought, counseling men to play the role of hypocrite—to take their hearts in their hands and squeeze from them the last drop of moral purity for the sake of making more hypocrites.

But in this article I hav met with a still greater surprise to find it claimed that in carrying out the principle which I hav always supposed to be the heart and meaning of Unitarianism, I hav become to Unitarians East and West a lesson of human instability. When and where was the creed of the Unitarian church written with which I must clip the wings of my free thought? Where are its traditions that represent the be-all and end-all of religion? How long is it since it became stable like any other orthodox rock about which the restless waves of life beat in the ceaseless ebb and flow of the tides of thought until it shall all be washed away? When did its ship of discovery cast anchor to lie and rot by some moldy theological wharf? When did the command go forth from it, "Think no more, ye earnest, aspiring minds who hav sought our fellowship to escape the imprisonment of orthodoxy and to sail forever the swelling waves of life and being in quest of new islands of beauty, for we hav reached the end of the voyage; we hav explored and marked out the spot on which we must rest forevermore?" Is Unitarianism, like every other orthodox church, to become a graveyard where we are to spend all our time trying to decipher the half-defaced inscriptions on the tombstones of the dead? Are we, who thought at last we had found a place to liv and grow in, to put on the shroud of religious conformity, and to lie down and be buried alive in the coffin of a creed? Has the future no surprises? With art, science, civilization, all bending their eyes forward, expecting that all the achievements of the past are but a few trees felled in the forest—a line or two blazed that marks where the highways of future improvement shall yet be crowded with happier, freer, and nobler generations—is religion to remain stationary—to forever rotate in a circle going always back to the dim and shadowy year, one that is buried and lost to sight beneath eighteen hundred and eighty others, each one of which was better than the former? I thought that Unitarianism was the star of liberty keeping watch above the cradle of the future; a banner about which every brave and earnest soldier of nature might rally and bear it forward on their conquering arms until it should float victorious above the last dismantled fortress of superstition. But according to the writer of this article it is a "will o' the wisp" that has led me blindly through the darkness of unbelief over the abyss of eternal ruin. I supposed that I was to be free forever to roam over all the broad prairies of truth, but, if this article is to be believed, I hav followed it until it has landed me in a morass. I came to it gladly, lured by its promise of a free wing, and lo, I find that I am taken in a net, and, unless I escape, must hereafter be shut up in a cage. Is it possible that the declarations heard all around the orthodox circles, that Unitarianism has outlived its usefulness, are true? I begin to think they are in part. I am sure that they are true of that part of Unitarians who think that the end of truth was reached by Channing or Parker, or that the interests of humanity are served by forever looking backwards. I am sure that they are inexorably true of those who at present control the policy of the association. I am sure that it is true of all Unitarians who think that so-called liberal Christianity is the stopping place for the Car of Progress. This is felt by more than me. One of the most prominent Unitarian ministers in the East writes me: "I am heartily sick of the miserably impotent attitude of Unitarianism. It is without the sort of dignity that comes with antiquity and largeness, and it balks at the step needed to make itself squarely and consistently rational. It is neither the exponent of reason and science nor of tradition and authority, but now the one and now the other, neither long enough to get a right to respect itself nor to command the respect of others. Unitarian bigotry is the most petty and aggravating of all bigotry, and in the most absurd and glaring contradiction to the claims made by the body to represent reason. But the world at large cares precious little about any of the sects. Brains hav done with them—modern brains—and the race turns its attention to other things." Another prominent minister, settled in the West, on visiting the annual meeting of the association in Boston, wrote me a description of it, in which he says: "Each morning at eight o'clock was a prayer-meeting. And such things! As much like our Western orthodox prayer-meetings as two beans are alike. Ministers in gowns. Praying in Jesus' name. Addressing him as Lord and Savior. Proving things by the Bible. Talking against Infidelity. Exalting Channing as the only man that ever lived since Jesus. Singing coronation. Celebrating the Lord's supper with all the pomp of a Catholic. They looked to me like ministerial lemon peels out of which the juice had been squeezed. Not one ringing word for the people. Not one burst of prophecy. Not one burning thought for freedom. Not one attitude for leadership. But a halting quibble; an impracticable hair-splitting; a learned description of nothing, and a spiritless eulogy upon the vanishing points of obsolete absurdities. It is like a giant's struggling to lift a fly. It is simply ridiculous."

While both the letters show the kind of Unitarianism that inspired this article in the Christian Register, they also, in the writers, show that there is quite another kind of Unitarianism. We hav just been celebrating the centennial anniversary of Channing's birthday. All around the land words of praise hav been woven into a laurel wreath of glory about his memory. But if Channing were alive to-day, he, of all men, would most condemn the present tendency to make him the spiritual leader of all the centuries. He never dreamed he had floated level, on outstretched wing, with all the hights of thought Whatever he believed in himself, he was always young for liberty—he was always asking for more light and room for the souls of men. He said: "This Unitarianism which so many seem to think is the last word of the human mind, is only the vestibule. We hav everything to learn. I hav little or no interest in Unitarians as a sect; I hav hardly anything to do with them. I can endure no sectarian bonds."

He objected to the covenant of a Unitarian church at Newport because it contained the dogmatical expression, "Believing in one God the Father," though that was the dearest faith of his life, yet he saw that it was wrong to turn it into a creed and so arrest the growth of thought. In the position I hav taken I appeal confidently for my justification to the principles, not the doctrines, of both Channing and Parker. If I had time I could find in Unitarian literature acknowledgments that would build about me an impregnable tower of defense. It is because of these things that I believe in the future of Unitarianism, but the prophecies of many hopeful hearts will only be fulfilled when it plants itself squarely upon reason, substitutes theology with science, and Christianity with humanity.

In the first part of this remarkable article I am recognized as an agnostic, and in the last virtually as an Atheist. These two things are contradictory. I am an Atheist, which is to know that there is no God, and at the same time an agnostic, which is not to know. I invite no name. I cannot say to-day what I shall be to-morrow. I confess readily that I do not know about God. I am glad that I hav escaped that infinite conceit that quenches all wonder in omnipotence. I am one solitary being among one billion and seventy-five millions of people who are swept away on the average of every twenty-five or thirty years to giv place to another billion and seventy-five millions. Such is the importance of man on this globe. But this globe is but one, not among one billion and seventy-five millions, but one among an infinite number of worlds. As space is eternal, so must worlds be eternal. From any point from which we gaze we look out toward shoreless infinitude. Every point in space is as much at the center of the universe as any other. If we should start off in a direct line with the swiftness of lightning, we should forever pass new worlds. There are probably worlds so far off from us that light always traveling from them to us can yet never reach us. Can you conceive of a personal creator in such a universe? Does it help you in the least to go back of nature to a first cause? Is it not easier to believe in the eternity of nature, in quality of time, as well as quantity, than to believe that there was ever a time when all this was created from nothing? Do you know all about this? Are you sure you understand it? Think, feel, and be honest about it. I know there was a time in the history of the race when all men thought they understood it. The savage always knows or thinks he knows more about these things than the civilized man. To the earliest men the skies were only a sort of upper story to the earth—a jeweled chamber in which they thought the gods lived, which they believed they could reach if they could only build a ladder long enough. This was the reason Jacob dreamed of such a ladder. Now these gods were supposed to come down to earth in the form of men, select wives from the daughters of men, tell fortunes, avenge the wrongs of their worshipers, and work miracles to assist them in the perpetration of the most infamous atrocities that stain the pages of human history. Though rejecting these stories as myths that grew up out of the ignorance of the past, many still believe that God was the father of Jesus, and the Christian Unitarian that he was in some mysterious and special measure incarnated in him, filling him with grace and wisdom, so that to submit to the teaching of Jesus is to know and understand God. To me, this last conception is but the vanishing shadow of this earlier superstition.

Looking out upon the infinity of the universe, touched and humbled before its incomprehensible vastness, we find it impossible to conceive of any personal God or of any power more eternal than the universe; and so standing before this unknown, shoreless vast, we reverently bow our heads and say we don't know. We look about us and behold evil and good; evil independent of the good, and good independent of the evil, for on every hand we see pain, want, hunger, sorrow, and death, unrelated to any life or good, because only destructive of the joy and bliss of life, until, as to Buddha:

> The woeful cry
> Of life and all flesh living cometh up
> Into my ears, and all my soul is full
> Of pity for the sickness of the world.
> And which of all the greater or lesser gods
> Hav power or pity? Who hath seen them?—who?
> What hav they wrought to help their worshipers?
> How hath it steadied man to play and pay
> Tithes of the corn and oil to chant the chorus,
> To slay the shrinking sacrifice, to rear
> The stately fane, to feed the priest, and call
> On Vishnu Shiva Surya, who save? None.

No more has it steadied us to pray to Jehovah, Christ, the Ever-living, or the All-Father. Things daily happen that would call forth the sympathy and deliverance of an almighty fiend, if there is one, say nothing of an All-Father.

A short time since, near Chicago, a pair of betrothed lovers were wandering one moonlight night by the lake shore, listening to the solemn music of the waves and painting bright dreams of a cottage home, where they would train vines and honeysuckles about the doors and make it within and without a picture of the everlasting beauty of their love, that gave a brighter radiance to the stars, a sweeter charm to the melody of the waves, and a nobler meaning to life, when there rushed upon them three ruffians, who beat senseless with a club the young man, and, after having satiated their savage lust, threw their victim into the lake.

This is but one of many such events, and yet there is no deliverance from the skies. Do you wonder that we say theology and prayer are vain, and that our only hope is in science? Science could tame and render harmless such monsters. If as much time is ever devoted to the improvement of man through science as is wasted in trying to please some power in the skies, far the largest amount of the present misery of the world will be banished. If there is such a personal power as we are asked by most religionists to believe, who will punish us for doubting his existence, who can at any point cross the track of nature's laws, then, with such a world as this to explain his character, he must be an infinite fiend whom it is nobler to hate and despise than to love and honor. What there is that rises beyond personality; what this restless longing of our own hearts is to pierce and understand the infinite; what there is behind the matter which to science contains the promise and potency of all life, we do not pretend to know. There may be a spiritual essence more subtle than the odor of a flower that is built up into consciousness that shall liv after physical death, but we do not know. But some things we do know, and these we will do until we know more. For us the meaning of life is solved by doing the duty that lies nearest to hand. Meeting life in this fashion, we find that all the things about which any one can hav a doubt are for us meaningless—colored cobwebs spun out of the uneducated fancy of barbarians, which we soon brush away. We hav ceased gazing in the skies and turned to the earth. The stars, it is said, tell all their secrets to the flowers. In lowly duties that blossom by the hearthstone of home, and in the social and political duties of life, we find all the work that mind and heart can do.

I want next to call your attention to the charge of dishonesty, with the attempt to make it forcible, in the illustration of Robert E. Lee. I find that in this world it depends altogether upon whose ox is gored. If Lee had led his whole splendid army over to the service of the Union, he would hav been honored as the hero and savior of his country. If, in trying to carry this church property over into the service of larger liberty of thought, I hav been dishonest, the denomination who stole in the same way nearly all their church property from the Puritan Fathers should be the last to lisp a word on that subject. Now I beg leave to say that I am not laboring in the interest of secession, but of that all-comprehensive union that shall yet break the fetters of every slave. I am glad for this comparison between common honesty and uncommon honesty. The true and highest ethics of life are as yet very uncommon. They hav scarcely any relation to our ordinary business habits, and are often quite strangers to our courts of so-called justice. The most signal triumph, however, of uncommon honesty over common honesty is found in the history of Unitarianism. Many of its present churches are those that were planted here by the Puritan Fathers, who believed in the trinity, atonement, literal hell, predestination, and reprobation. To build and endow them they gave of the first fruits of their toil in the wilderness. They braved the dangers of the deep and of countless treacherous savages in order to enjoy the liberty of worshiping God according to the dictates of their own consciences. They never intended that any one else should enjoy the same privilege. They made the church a part of the state. They enforced uniformity of opinion with the whipping-post, public pillory, and gibbet. They made such strict laws about it that they never dreamed of securing by a deed of settlement their church property. If only one had suggested that the church planted on Plymouth Rock by the pilgrims who came over in the Mayflower would ever be used as it is to-day, they would hav imprisoned him for blasphemy. But in some way, in spite of their Blue laws and orthodox strait-jackets, some of their children took to thinking. The climate of New England is exceedingly favorable to intellectual development. Though about Boston society there is a strong flavor of provincialism, still, on the whole, New England has been the principal influence in the intellectual life of this continent.

Thought produced doubt, and doubt grew into rejection as false many of the doctrines of their fathers. The heretics became so numerous as to outvote the orthodox. The question arose, Whose is the property? Common honesty said it ought to be held in the interest of the original intent. Uncommon honesty said, No, it belongs to these men and women who hav been grand enough to grow; who believe that they are but yet mere wanderers on the shore of life, picking up here and there a pebble of truth. They are the legitimate children of the Pilgrim Fathers, who hav built better than they knew. The highest interests of humanity demand that they should hav it, and fortunately the state gave it to the majority. I stand by that verdict as the true one. It was hard on those men and women who knew that they represented the original interest of the church and yet had to go out and build a new church. I hav stood and looked upon these churches standing side by side, the old in the interest of the new, the new serving the old, so that the last is first and the first last, and tried to picture to myself the suffering of those poor people as they saw the churches that seemed to them the eternal property of their ideas go over into the service of what they looked upon as an infamous heresy and blasphemy. I could not but sympathize deeply with them. I shall not stop to moralize, only to say that our case is exactly parallel to these.

I am also charged with the betrayal of a trust, because last July the association gave me $200, which sum I immediately borrowed of a friend and spent in the interest of this church, though it is only a few weeks since a part of it was paid. I want to say that I hav made no promise to Unitarians that I hav not kept. I never was examined in doctrine, asked whether I was a Christian, or promised to preach anything about it. I hav made no secret of my views. I supposed that a Unitarian pulpit was a place in which I could preach each Sunday what I believed, without fearing that some one would step up at the close of the sermon with charges of heresy. If I had thought this possible, I would hav broken stones for bread, before I would hav run any such risk of enduring what I hav for the past three months. Some people think that I hav sought all this for a mere sensation. The worst wish I entertain toward them is that they might hav brains and heart enough given them for a short time to try it.

What I hav said first and last about religion in the West is that it is dying with the dry rot of insincerity, and that every orthodox church is honeycombed through and through with skepticism. Nor is this unbelief that which finds some new meaning for some old text. As I find it, it is the feeling that the whole system of supernatural theology is foundationless. A doctrinal Unitarian can do no good here. The people who can alone be got into a free church will look upon him with curiosity as a little different specimen of orthodoxy. They may acknowledge an improvement in them over those taught in the other churches, but with a few pungent facts and telling arguments they will soon knock the bottom out of all of it together.

Stress is also laid in this article on my refusing to pray. I do this because, without faith in one who hears and answers prayer, the act seems vain. If, as some claim, it is only valuable as a spiritual gymnastic exercise, I think all such benefits may be gained without making our outward action inconsistent with our inward thought.

I want as much as any one to inspire and uplift you into all the finer issues of life—to giv to you whatever of grace and beauty of soul that we hav associated with the devout spirit. But I am satisfied that the highest reverence never comes to the soul without that sense of wonder and mystery of life and nature that makes of all words a mockery.

Other stress is laid upon what I said about hymns of compliment to deity and the best use to which our hymn books may be put. I supposed every one would understand that I meant the hymn books that we hav hitherto used in this church. There are many hymns which I should be glad to hav sung here—hymns that would thrill us with the pathos of human sympathy, glorify the common duties of life and consecrate us to all that is true, beautiful, and good. Nor is it necessary to hav our music married to words. It is often most inspiring when its fine harmonies come to us without the distraction of words or thought. Music is the food of the heart:

> "It comes over the ear like the sweet sound
> That breathes upon a bank of violets,
> Stealing and giving odors."

Now it is like the winsome laughter of a child, then the cooing of a dove, the gurgle of a waterfall, the sighing of a summer breeze, or the passionate entreaties of love, or the wailings of a heart smitten with the loss of life's dearest treasures.

There is no voice of shining star or beautiful blossom that it cannot interpret better than words. It can fire the heart with courage, intoxicate it with joy, or melt it to tears.

It says also in this article that with a great deal of sentiment I denied the value of religious sentiment. This is intended to convey the idea that my own use of sentiment contradicts my opinion at this point. This is, however, a false and unwarranted inference. I believe in the rights of the heart as well as of the head. I simply contend in order to enjoy the strong tides of feeling and sentiment that it is not necessary to surrender the judgment of reason, and that whenever we do we endanger the highest interests of humanity. The religious sentiment I condemn is that which is pumped up from worn out dogmas by wilfully closing the eyes of the mind to their falsity. I believe in all the sentiments that soften and mellow our nature into finer grace and beauty; I believe in all the aspirations that yearn after moral excellence and in all the reverences that make manliness more manly, and would cherish all the hopes that can in any way giv courage and endurance to the heart of man. If my favor in the sight of Unitarians depends upon devotion to the spirit and work of true religion, there is no reason in the world why I should lose it. It is true I accept science as a substitute for theology—but science when rightfully understood in its relation to all the interests of humanity flames out into religion; it is warm and passionate with desire for the happiness of all; it is capable of as great and noble renunciations as any that were ever inspired by theology; it has room in it for an absolute sincerity; it seeks to balance the scales of justice and lay more firmly the foundations of righteousness. Though theology goes, religion remains. The reason that some think this means the destruction of religion is the mistake of supposing that religion and theology are one, when they are two quite different things. Theologies are many, but religion is always the same. To be religious is to be true to an ideal of life (no matter whether in itself it be true or false) that calls out all our heart's devotion, so that we do what it teaches us, not only because it so commands, but because it is that which above all things else we love to do. Religion is the blossom and perfume of the free heart and mind. It always withers and dies when the devotions of the heart are contradicted by the judgments of the head. Religion is the perfection and symmetry of life. It is music, poetry, passion, enthusiasm, reason, and conscience, all mingling together in one grand thrilling psalm of life. It is the science of sincerity and the unutterable joy of disinterested devotion to humanity. It is the heart thrilled with the mystic pleasure of its relationship to the infinite and eternal meanings of life. It is the kindly light of truth mingling with the warmth and tenderness of human love. It is the conscious sympathy of one heart with every other throbbing heart of the human race. It is the ideal that floats above us like a banner of victory, giving to life the inspiration of courage. It is the star of hope, shining above the future, promising the full and perfect redemption of humanity. It is that healthy and vital energy of life that keeps the heart young and buoyant through all the losses and disappointments of its career. It is that instinct of relation to nature that makes us reflect its moods of sunshine and cloud; that mingles the perfume of the heart with that of the flowers, and kindles in the soul an answering emotion of sublimity to every shining world of light. Having felt and enjoyed all this, we are content to say of the infinite, I don't know. The world will yet learn that it is the loftiest and most aspiring souls that denounce all creeds and definitions of God or religion, who bravely and truthfully say to the inquiry, What do you believe here? I don't know. I only know that the morning and evening hush, the splendor and glow of night, the first faint, delicious odors of spring, the summer's effulgence, the autumnal glory and splendor, the keen delight of winter, the myriad wonders and beauties of its snow and ice, the flow of a river like a stream of silver across the landscape of a peaceful valley, the uplifted majesty and beauty of a mountain, the solemn, mystic music of the ocean's roar, and more than all these, the mystery and wonder of human thought and love, subdue me and uplift me, fill me with gladness and oppress me with a sense of infinite littleness, make me tremble and weep with joy and delicious sadness before all this vastness and grandeur that makes of all human explanations a mockery and profanation. Confessing to this truth of our inward souls, courageously acknowledging that to us theology is, from beginning to the end, but the baseless fabric of a dream—a dream that paralyzes with fear the humanities of most of the dreamers—we must expect to be maligned and misunderstood by those who are still the slaves of its barbarous power. But we can still be of good courage. We know that the morn already gilds with splendor the horizon of the future. All things are pledged to the fulfilment of our cause. There is no rain falls that does not nourish it; no wind blows that does not whisper it; no flower blooms that does not adorn it; no river flows nor tide ebbs that do not follow it with fluid footsteps to bear it on its way on their swelling bosoms.

The Congress at Brussels.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: I drafted this letter very soon after receiving the French circulars, but thought prudent not to send it till I had heard from other members of the Board; and, if overruled by the Board, I shall, of course, not send it at all. However, after giving the fullest consideration to what you and Mr. Rawson hav said, I cannot see reason to change my expression. Moreover, I think, do all we could, the Congress would prove a decided failure. Failures are weakening, and the less we hav to do with them the better. If we stick doggedly to what we hav undertaken—stick together ourselves and split our enemies—we shall conquer without fail. Yours truly, ELIZUR WRIGHT.

THE LETTER.

TO MESSRS. V. ARNOULD, C. DE PAEPE, A. DUVERGER, E. STEENS, N. GOFFIN, AND A. VANAMBERG, Gentlemen: I hav had the honor to receive a printed circular bearing your names, addressed to me as "President of the Liberal League of America" (though that of which I am President prefixes the word National and does not affix America), proposing the formation of a "Federation Universalle de Libre-Penseurs," and counting the aforesaid League among the materials of which such a "Federation" is to be formed. This I conceive to be a misapprehension. Our organization, founded in Philadelphia in 1876, is by no means one of Freethinkers as such, but of persons of all shades of thought and creed, who combine to effect an entire separation of church and state. Doubtless a large part of its present members are not adherents of any religious faith or sect, but men and women of all religions and any church are cordially invited to join with us if they concede to the specific demands of our platform. Our League carries on no war with the creeds or religious observances of any of our fellow-citizens, but only with the use of public money and state patronage to support them or their adherents on their account. Whatever our present opinions or sympathies may be, it would not be acting in harmony with our constitutional pledges or in good faith toward the religionists we invite here at home to act with us to take part as a body in forming a universal federation whose object would apparently be to overthrow all religion. Happily, our Constitution does not preclude any individual member from doing so in his private capacity any more than from giving his money and his influence to Bible societies or foreign missions.

I am happy to say our National League, at its late Congress in Cincinnati, Ohio, expressed its sympathy with all movements in favor of liberty in Europe, from which I trust you will infer that it is not in favor of mental slavery anywhere. But it did not act on any proposition like the "Federation" you propose, and I conceive it will not be proper for the officers to take any such action till the matter has been submitted to the next Congress, which will not probably meet earlier than in September.

Assuring you of my most distinguished consideration, I am, gentlemen, Your most obedient servant,

ELIZUR WRIGHT,
President National Liberal League.

Boston, Mass, May 23, 1880.

[RESPONSE.—This seems a little like a wet blanket, but with all deference to the opinions of the venerable, esteemed, and worthy President of the National Liberal League, we are constrained to dissent somewhat from his views. We cannot see that it is in any wise in opposition to the spirit and objects of the National League to sympathize with and co-operate in council with Liberals and Freethinkers of other countries and everywhere. If it is too narrow and restricted for this, we hav been mistaken in it, and must frankly say it is not all we yearn for. If the object of the League is solely to secure the taxation of church property, it is not all we desire. We wish to see a Liberal organization in our country that can extend the right hand of fellowship to Liberals in all parts of the globe. If organization and co-operation is desirable and beneficial, we cannot see why we should be restricted or circumscribed by state or national lines. All men are our brothers, and all Liberals are in close affinity with us.

The Liberals of the different nations of Europe, after many years of talk and preparation, are about to hold an International Congress for the purpose of conferring together, comparing the progress of Liberalism in different countries, and devising practical means to expedite its growth. The call for this Congress virtually and explicitly says the societies represented there will be in no wise bound or hampered by the deliberations or actions of that body. The object is fraternal counsel and suggestions.

A few years ago the church held an Evangelical Alliance, in which all the Protestant sects were represented; and now it is proposed to hold a Liberal, or Freethinkers' Congress, and it seems but proper that the Liberal League should hav a representation there.

The Freethinkers of Europe hav sent to us greeting, and ask us to join with them in council and devise as to what can and shall be done to best spread light and truth among the sons and daughters of men. Shall we withdraw the right hand of fellowship from them and say we will not fraternize with them? We should say not. We should say, Let us meet with our brothers in Europe; let us learn what they are doing; let us tell them what we are doing, and let us advise together as to what should be done to make the cause of truth and mental liberty advance faster in the future.

It is to be hoped there is not too much of the spirit of Christianity in the League for this. It is doubtful if there are one per cent of Christians composing the League, and even if that moiety would be injured or outraged by a delegation being sent to the Congress at Brussels. If the League is more Christian than Liberal, then we hav wholly misunderstood its character and object. We hav supposed it to be the purpose of the League to free men and women from the domination of priestly rule and churchly superstition. Our brothers in Europe are working in this direction.

In enumerating the objects they hav in view, in the fourth they say it is the discussion of "the necessity of establishing a system of morals independent of religious ideas." Is this in opposition to the spirit of the League, and cannot the League properly join in the discussion? The great object of Liberals in all parts of the world is the liberation of thought everywhere and to be free from ecclesiastical domination in every respect.

Article 2, in the order of exercises, declares that "membership of the Congress does not imply membership of the federation," and it is virtually said that societies sending delegates to the Congress are by no means bound by the action of that body. What, then, has the League to fear? If the secular societies and unions of Great Britain, established by Bradlaugh and Holyoake, can meet and fraternize with the Brussels Congress, are there sound reasons why Liberal societies in America may not do the same?

We, however, do not feel like unduly urging the matter. We are simply a single individual. We assuredly shall not go as a delegate unless we are sent. Every auxiliary League has the right to speak in this matter, and every individual Liberal has the same right. An expression of opinion on this matter is desired. Prof. Rawson has something to say, as follows:—Ed. T. S.]

THE BRUSSELS CONGRESS OF FREETHINKERS.

The word "Freethinkers" is a large one just now, and so large that it overshadows some of our best friends in the matter of the coming Congress at Brussels. We here in the United States hav been working away quietly, pushing our peculiar enterprises in secularism, to a great extent unmindful of what our brothers and sisters in the cause of mental emancipation in other countries are doing. It is now proposed to send a few of our men and women to this Congress at Brussels who will strike hands with the other delegates there and assure them of our sympathy and good wishes, and to assist in their deliberations as to the best methods of educating the people to a knowledge of themselves and their surroundings for the uses of this present world—which after all is the best preparation for a future life if there is to be one.

As for myself, it may be well to say that several visits to Europe hav taken away the novelty of sight-seeing for me, and if I go, this will be a business trip, to gather information that will be useful to our cause, and report what Liberals in this country are doing. This is expected to take at least two months, or ten weeks perhaps, of time, which is worth something in my business. This time being given by me, it is not too much to expect that friends of the cause will pay the bare expenses of the trip. Besides the eight or ten weeks abroad, including the ocean passage, there must be some time given to preparation for the work at Brussels. I hav written to many Liberals, men and women, and published invitations, to send me essays on the topics suggested by the order of exercises of the Congress, to be presented there, and am receiving daily letters about the affair which will probably take a large part of my time during this month.

The delegation may be indorsed by the officers of the National Liberal League, but no such action can affect the League itself, which is not a Freethinkers' association, but a secular society that is working to free our public affairs from the grasp of the church, believing the church to be a costly and dangerous element in the government and the schools, and to insure for each and every person or society justice and equal rights, without privilege to any. The Congress at Brussels, although a Freethinkers' gathering, will not attack religion, and only indirectly the church—the discussion of the questions "On Free Will," and "On Morals," both of which subjects are well worthy of consideration by any body of thinkers, free or church-bound. Delegates will, therefore, not compromise the League nor any member of it by attendance. The call for the Brussels Congress expressly says (Art. XVI.) that its action is to be deliberative only, and not legislative, and its votes on the various topics will not be binding on the delegates.

One of the good results of the trip is expected to be a conference with Liberals in England and elsewhere who are managing "The Science Classes" with a view to establishing similar ones here.

I am sure that if Mr. Bennett goes he will sacrifice as much, if not more, than I, in time which might be given to his business to great advantage, considering his recent vacation. He will not be idle. His reports from here will be printed in the French language for distribution among the delegates at the Congress, and he will probably gather there a mass of material on the Liberal movement in Europe that will enrich The Truth Seeker for a year to come.

It would be the proper thing to do if the full delegation of ten good and true men and women should be sent to confer with the Liberals of Europe, exchange reports on the good work in each hemisphere, and to infuse new life into our work here by their reports on their return. The time is short for preparation. Those who wish to make it a success should send their contribution at once, that it may be known as soon as possible what can be done.

A. L. Rawson,
19 Lafayette Place, New York.

The following letter has been forwarded to Mr. O. B. Frothingham, now in Europe:

New York, May 25, 1880.

O. B. Frothingham, Esq., Dear Sir: We, the undersigned, cordially unite in requesting you to appear at the World's Convention of Freethinkers, to be held in Brussels, in the month of August, as one of the representatives of Liberal thought in the United States. We propose to hav associated with you at least two prominent gentlemen holding similar opinions. We, one and all, feel that to no one would we prefer to assign such a charge, and your presence abroad seems to make it very opportune. We make the request both as private individuals and also in the capacity several of us possess in connection with an official position in the National Liberal League and other organizations. To be sure, no vote has been taken, but it is an authority we gladly assume, feeling sure it would be ratified.

Trusting your journey has resulted in great good to your health, and hoping you will accept our proposal, we remain, dear sir, with great respect, Yours truly,

Toledo, O, May 30, 1880.

Esteemed Sir: The suggestion to hav about ten members of the National Liberal League represent us at the coming International Congress at Brussels pleases me very much. You certainly ought to be one of them. I hope the Liberals will all contribute a little to hav a good representation. I will pledge myself for $2.

The Spelling Reform.

On another page are given rules in the spelling reform as adopted by the Home Journal, than which there is no more able, cultured, high-toned family journal in the country. It has been a recognized organ in fashionable society in America for more than a third of a century. When such journals adopt the spelling reform, and it is approved by numerous other influential journals, as will be seen in the extracts given, it is an unmistakable indication that the reform must ultimately be a triumph and be generally adopted.

The object is to dispense with all silent and useless letters and to spell words as they are pronounced as nearly as possible and practicable. The objects to be gained by this reform, when fully utilized, are stated as follows:

1. Children and adults will learn to read and write in much less than half the time now required.

2. By this approved system people will easily acquire a uniform and correct pronunciation.

3. "Learning to spell" will be immensely simplified. The word only has to be pronounced slowly and it "spells itself."

4. The acquisition of reading and writing, with less than half the expense now employed, will be attainable to millions now deprived of it.

5. Provincialisms and local and incorrect pronunciations will entirely disappear.

6. By dropping useless letters at least one-tenth may be saved in space, time, and expense.

7. By this reform, the English language, fast becoming the universal language, can be learned much easier, and be introduced with greatly increased facilities.

It must not be forgotten that The Truth Seeker led all other journals in dropping the final e in have, live, and give, thus inaugurating this needed reform. We feel, now that this movement has been so ably seconded, that it is time to take another step in the forward march of progress, as our readers hav become fully familiar with this dispensing of the useless e in the words named and are prepared for something further. From this date The Truth Seeker will adopt the rules of improved spelling as taken from the Home Journal with the exception of the last. The printers may sometimes forget, but we will soon all become familiar with it and gladly bid adieu to the useless, cumbersome letters. In this connection, we would acknowledge a donation of $10 to aid the work from a warm friend of reform spelling in this city.

Book Notice.

BENNETT'S GODS.

Dear Truth Seekers: Once more I come to you with the verdict of sincere approval of a good book. I hav received and read "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," written by our beloved, respected, and honored leader and friend, D. M. Bennett, while behind prison bars, which, though confining the body, had no power to cramp, fetter, or control the mind, but rather tended to send it wandering off in quest of subjects more entertaining, pleasing, and instructive than those around him.

Judging from the contents of this large and beautiful volume, our friend Bennett has indeed usefully employed his few opportunities while a victim to a cruel and unjust imprisonment caused by priestly bigotry, tyranny, oppression, and revenge.

Though personally compelled to be associate of the lowest and most degraded specimens of humanity that the land affords, yet his soul has dwelt among the greatest and most powerful magnates of the universe, even the high and mighty gods themselves—

"Gods of wood and gods of stone,
Gods of iv'ry and gods of bone:
Gods of iron and gods of brass,
Gods of porcelain and gods of glass;
Gods with fins and gods with scales,
Gods with horns and gods with tails;
Gods drinking wine or eating grass,
Gods riding clouds, or on an ass;"
Gods of every shape and size,
Weak and feeble, great and wise,
But not a god among them all
Shall long the mind of man inthrall.
Bolts, locks, and bars chain not the soul,
Nor men like Bennett can control.

For see! he has given us a book we should think cheaply earned could any one of us become the author of it or one as good by spending a twelvemonth in jail.

When we consider the reading and research necessary to ferret out the facts concerning only one single god out of all the long list this large volume tells us of, we are astonished at the magnitude of the labor Mr. Bennett has performed, and performed so well too.

Here, in fine, large, clear type, and in a handy and convenient form, we hav the biography of gods enough to supply a universe. We hav a whole mythological library all in one volume, and written in the plain, sensible, easy-flowing style that marks everything that comes from the pen of Mr. Bennett.

It seems hardly possible that any one could read the history of all these gods, who hav been feared, loved, and hated, venerated, worshiped, and despised by turns, as the people who created them grew out of harmony with their own inventions and longed for something more worthy and better adapted to their own progressed condition—this book full of gods very appropriately givs more space to the description and analyzation of the gods of the Christian Bible and to the "inspired" volume itself than it does to any other deity, because we, as Liberals, are suffering more from the influence of a belief in these fetiches, who are crowding themselves into every possible nook and corner of our land wherever they can find an opening. Ostracism, imprisonment, and all manner of indignity is heaped upon every brave, wise, and noble person who dares to investigate their claims to belief, honor, or respect.

Where one church alone has monopolized a country or a community, there will you find the most blind and unquestioning faith and belief in creed, dogma, and doctrine; and it is the same with a bible or a god. And as many churches serve to weaken the power of them all by causing debate, argument, and questioning as to which is right and which wrong, so many gods, all brought together and compared as to character, power, and influence, will hav the effect to excite inquiry, and the "consensus of the competent" will doubtless decide against them all, and declare that

The only god they see
Is matter and its potency.

"O justice, virtue, goodness absolute!

. . . . . .

Thy deep foundation nothing can remove;
A million gods are but a mote's blind play
Against thy potent, everlasting sway."

Snowville, Va, May 24, 1880.

The fact that Mr. F. E. Abbot quoted in his Index, with his implied approval, the limitlessly false and foul aspersion of the Syracuse Evening Herald, regarding the ladies who took part in the Cnickering Hall reception to Mr. Bennett, stamps said Abbot as a dirty and lying blackguard, and shuts the door of Liberalism forever against him. Never let his name be again spoken, save with the deepest contempt and loathing. Lower than he has descended no man can go. He has touched the almost fathomless depths of infamy; and hereafter mark as a traitor to Freethought and Liberalism, as the sworn enemy of justice and truth, as a panderer to falsehood and cowardly defamation, as the would-be assassin of innocence and virtue, as the poltroon smiter of grey-haired women and tender girls, any man who lifts his voice or wields his pen in his defense. He has made himself an outlaw. Let the fate of outlaws be his. The man who will quote, without emphatic disapproval, such words concerning such women as Amy Post and Lucy N. Colman, is a scoundrel.

Concerning the Oneida Community.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Your correspondent, Mr. Hammond, seems to look upon my description and comments upon the Oneida Community as "ethereal," that is to say, "thin." With all due thankfulness for his information, and with especial gratitude for his advice, I desire once more to call attention to the subject. As to the whipping of Miss Hubbard nearly to death by them, I shall say but little, for I know nothing about the affair. In all the writing for and against this Community—and I hav read a good deal—I never saw even a hint of anything of the kind. It strikes me, however, if such an aggravated case as Mr. Hammond makes out had really occurred, the Christian papers would hav published and republished it until every man, woman, and child in the United States and Europe would hav heard it. If it occurred it only shows their undeveloped condition, not having had time to evolve much above the standard of the society from which they came. Such things are common occurrences in Christian society; newspapers are full of them daily; and if the Oneida Community hav had only one such case in forty years, we must score one for them.

I distinctly said in my last that I lay no claim to perfection for these people; that condition is not possible, in my humble opinion; but I do think society might be organized upon a plan that would at least not tend toward evil—that is, place men and women in a position where they would not be under the necessity of stealing to keep from starving. This Community do not make gewgaws and personal finery necessary to the happiness of themselves and their children. They satisfy themselves with the plain, practical, and useful. Mr. Hammond admits that the children "hav the best of care;" but he says the business enterprises of the community are "not large." They manufactured, in 1879, 527,000 steel traps, ranging from the size that will catch a rat to that large enough to catch and hold the black bear of the Rocky Mountains, and had orders for 75,000 more, and also manufactured 1,500 pounds of sewing silk; and it requires several hundred thousand feet of lumber to make the boxes to hold their canned fruit. "Not very large!" I don't know what he would call large, but they are certainly "flourishing," at any rate. He says they are "indolent." Can indolent men and women carry on such enterprises, and so successfully? Could indolent people accumulate such a property as they hav around them? They had a pretty fair weekly paper carried on by their own people. They hav besides written and printed a good many books and pamphlets.

Mr. Hammond seems to infer from the fact that their own people only "superintend" that they are indolent. A superintendent, my dear sir, is the most active person in any establishment; if not, the business does not prosper.

But enough of this. It is evident our friend did not think what he was saying, or otherwise he wilfully misrepresents. Indolence and penury go together, and we all know these people are not poor. Neither hav they had their money given to them; on the contrary, people took all kinds of advantage of them when they were poor. In the face of all opposition they hav climbed up financially, intellectually, and, I am inclined to think, morally.

I am told that there are few cities of fifty thousand inhabitants that hav a library equal to theirs, with all the principal periodicals published, so that the gentleman's assertion that they are ignorant of the "outside world" also falls to the ground. He says the young at least are very ignorant of the manners and customs of the outside world. They hav manners and customs of their own, and perhaps look upon our outside manners and customs as not wise or proper. I presume the young ladies of the Community do not hang five or six yards of silk to their skirts, with flounces, frills, and ribbons to suit, and from two to two and a half pounds of flax on the top of their heads; their waists inclosed in an iron basket drawn so tight that breathing becomes difficult; then parade the streets, winking and blinking to call attention to the fact that they are dressed a la mode.

Nor do the youths of the other sex make midnight hideous with screams and yells as they return from clubs where they hav spoiled large quantities of bad whisky by mixing it with gastric juice; nor do both sexes mingle in the heated ball room, whirling in that giddy and exciting pastime until every faculty becomes unnaturally excited, then at midnight swallowing large quantities of indigestible material in the shape of ice cream, lemonade, and champagne, together with plenty of the more solid foods, thus using up more vital force in one night than would be used in five years of normal life.

I cannot see but that the Oneida people show themselves the better philosophers of life to avoid some of the manners and customs of the outside world.

These people hav arranged their society so that they hav more leisure than we do, and can be more quiet, take life more normally. I presume my friend will admit that nine-tenths of the American people rush headlong from childhood to old age, constantly straining every nerve to gain a competency, and that a large majority of us do not in consequence liv out half our days. Now that is just where I claim the communal system has the advantage. People can hav more leisure; they do not feel that constant strain upon nerve and muscle which is felt by those in a competitive society. They need not lie awake nights thinking how fearfully the interest on that note is eating into their little earnings. They know nothing of the feeling of the father who knows that it is impossible for him to lift the mortgage, and that his wife and little ones will ere long be thrown into the streets to beg. Or, another view, they hav no necessity for that feeling which prompts Jones to study, plan, and lie awake nights thinking of some way to get a little nicer turn-out than Smith; or will make Smith deprive himself and family of actual necessities in order to go one story higher than Jones; or that will cause Mrs. Simpkins to rage because Madam Noodles got a new spring bonnet of the latest style, and say, as I actually did hear one lady say of another, "She need not hold her head so high about her horrid bonnet, for I saw her underwear on the line, and it was full of holes, and not so very clean either."

This constant, never-ending, but ever-varying strife is not felt in the communal plan of society. Does Mr. Hammond think that we hav attained perfection in our societary government? Does he think that methods of society are not subject to advancement the same as all other systems? Or perhaps he thinks our Christian system of society was gotten up by that old mythical being called Jehovah at the same time he tried his hand on mud balls. If he does I beg leave to differ with him.

I think that our social system and all others that I know anything about are capable of great improvement. I want a social system in which I can be social; one in which I can really get acquainted with the members; one in which I can freely let the members know who and what I am.

The Christian system that our friend seems to think so very perfect is an outgrowth from pagan Romans, a people that he no doubt would pronounce heathens; and to say that they understood social laws perfectly I think he would not dare.

But to return to the subject. Our informant says they do "tattle," that they hav a time on purpose to tattle. He says, "It is an evening meeting, where each one is required to tell what he has seen amiss in any other member during the day."

What I understand to be tattling is to tell something secretly to injure character. If they speak right out in "meetin'" it would hardly come under the head of tattling. It comes more nearly under the title of criticism, and appears to me a very effectual method of keeping people in a correct line of conduct. He says there is at least one complete idiot in the Oneida Community. A pretty good record for forty years among three hundred people. I hardly think any outside community can show a better.

The idea that any of the members desire to escape from the home, and cannot, is simply ridiculous, when it cannot be more than fifteen minutes' walk to a magistrate, who would be glad to giv them protection.

He says the women are "pale, weary-eyed," and are "forced to submit to every whim of their masters." Why, his description would hav drawn tears from the eyes of a wooden man; and had I not been acquainted with persons well known to me who hav been there, I would most certainly hav felt that "my idol was shattered, my earth-star fled."

I must, however, accept the testimony of those personally known to me rather than a stranger's who shows a disposition to become a swift witness against them, and to make the better cause appear the worse. A lady of my acquaintance who spent some months with them, and was admitted to all of their meetings during that time, says: "Women could not hav more freedom, and in place of 'pale and weary eyed' they are as plump, rosy, and full of life as it seemed possible for women to be;" and this is the testimony of all that I have talked with, and some were anything else but friendly to the system.

I am of opinion that the paleness and "weary-eyedness" is all in Mr. Hammond's mind.

He brands them all as "public harlots" too. "This was the most unkindest cut of all." Mr. Hammond, do you really believe the abracadabra of a priest is all that prevents your wife from being a harlot?

Where free, pure, and true love exists, there can be no prostitution; where there is none, not all the vows that hav been uttered from the time of the first pope to the present can make that relation other than prostitution. You must claim omnipotent power if you can enter the minds of those people and pronounce them unloving or, in your own words, public harlots. My dear sir, for the sake of humanity, for the sake of your own manhood, for the sake of truth, take back that unmanly and, I might say, contemptible assertion. If you, sir, choose to take upon yourself vows for a lifetime that you know not that you can liv up to, do not, for the sake of common decency, try to force others who think they ought not to or cannot to do the same. You are free to do as you please, and I hope no one will interfere with that freedom. I am also as earnest that the Oneida Community shall hav the same freedom.

I am going to quote for you from an idealist of over a century ago, and show you how the poet of the past reaches away beyond and above the present upon this very subject of love. He was a good Christian, too, and that I hope will giv his beautiful words more weight:

"How oft, when pressed to marriage, hav I said,
Curse on all laws but those which love has made!
Love, free as air, at sight of human ties,
Spreads his light wings, and in a moment flies.
Let wealth, let honor, wait the wedded dame,
August her deed and sacred be her fame!
Before true passion all those vows remove,
Fame, wealth, and honor! what are you to love?
The jealous god, when we profane his fires,
Those restless passions in revenge inspires,
And bids them make mistaken mortals groan,
Who seek in love for aught but love alone.
Should at my feet the world's great master fall,
Himself, his throne, his world, I'd scorn them all.
Not Cæsar's empress would I prove;
No, make me mistress of the man I love.
If there be yet another name more free,
More fond than mistress, make me that to thee.
Oh, happy state! when souls each other draw,
When love is liberty, and nature law.
All then is full, possessing and possessed,
No craving void left aching in the breast.
E'en thought meets thought ere from the lips it part,
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart."

Those Criticisms.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I shall never tire of studying the great book of human nature. Its revelations are more wonderful than those of any Bible the world has ever known. In the chapter on genius and its practical application we find that all men and women hav somewhat of it; but few, however, hav the right kind, and enough of that to distinguish themselves as philosophers or benefactors of the race. Sometimes it manifests itself through the stomach, as in the gormand, and again through the muscles, as in the athlete; but generally through the brain, as in the musician, artist, philosopher, etc.

We also find that people should follow the bent of their genius, or that for which they are best adapted, if such a course would be consistent with usefulness and true manhood. Some of the greatest evils in life arise from the fact that people hav a genius for doing that which they ought not to do, or that for which they are utterly unfitted. This, I think, is the trouble with some, at least, who hav criticised the article, "Does Death End All?" as published in The Truth Seeker of March 27th. In my judgment, the world has too many critics. I think criticism as an art should, like medicine, be taught in schools and colleges, and then the quacks in criticism, the constitutional grumblers, gossips, scandal mongers, and bigoted Liberals could be got rid of in a legitimate way as critics. As I see it, only those who hav broad views of humanity and life, who are honest and true to all, and under all circumstances, who are free from bigotry and prejudice, who do not love popularity more than the truth, and whose sympathies do not run away with their reason, should enter the field of criticism. The opinions of those who do not possess the above qualifications are worth no more than the opinions of those who are tied up to and forced in by the dogmas and creeds of superstition.

To-day the world demands a higher standard of criticism than mere fault finding based on bigotry and conceit. Criticisms that do not harmonize with truth, that are not made in a spirit of charity and with some show of justice, are not worth the name, and should not be given to the public, except as an illustration of a certain phase of genius.

Now, of those who hav criticised "Does Death End All?" only one has done it fairly, and that one I am glad, though ashamed to say, was a woman—Mrs. Elmina Drake Slenker. Her criticism plainly shows that she has self-respect as well as respect for those who hav honest opinions differing from her own. Her points of difference, however, are evidently clearer to her mind than to my own. Once she misunderstands. Where I say, "from sphere to sphere," alluding to the evolution of intelligent beings and the destiny of the race. I did not mean planetary worlds, but conditions of usefulness, intelligence, and love. I believe this earth is the abiding-place of both mortal and immortal, that death is but a thin veil or open door, through which we shall pass to a life equally as natural and more beautiful than this. I believe, however, that in the infinite and endless progression of the ages to come we shall be able to change our abiding-place to higher and more advanced worlds. I believe people of earth, now in spirit life, hav already visited distant planets, as we shall be able to do when we hav attained to the degree of intelligence and power they hav. Let us be careful how we fix the limit to progression. The world has already done too much of that. The world is centuries behind what it would hav been had priesthood and the church never been known. The glorious era of reason and progression rises as the night of superstition recedes, giving to the race an inspiration pregnant with hope and happiness, such as a nonprogressive church never dared to dream of.

I think Mrs. Slenker makes a serious mistake when she places the misfortunes and accidents of life equal to the blessings, in trying to controvert my statement that nature is a kind mother, that she does not mock us by following up her promises with failures and cruel deceptions. I still think her mills are grinding for a mighty purpose, and that the grist she grinds will be pepetuated. If we harmonize with nature's laws we shall find she is kind and loving. It is not just to charge her with treachery by attributing to her all the ills and misfortunes of life. Nearly all the misfortunes may be attributed to violations of nature's laws. To wrong parental conditions especially may we look for the cause of the sadder phases of human life. Humanity is terribly diseased; so much so that its power of resistance in times of pestilence is inadequate to the task of resisting and throwing off disease. People who are absolutely healthy, as all should be, may defy all diseases, both contagious and otherwise, provided they continue to harmonize with every law of their being, not only physical but mental and spiritual. Cripples are cripples because laws hav been violated. When I say a law has been violated I mean that the wrong law has been harmonized with. There are always two laws, the wrong and the right, and generally we can take our choice. If nature is treacherous, I can not see it. With such a stupendous machine it would not be surprising if now and then there was a little hitch, such as a whirlwind, a stroke of lightning, an avalanche, or an earthquake. Such things do occur many times, accompanied with loss of life and property, but we should be thankful that they are the exception. The wonder to me is that things run as smoothly as they do. Let us remember that the burnt child dreads the fire. We learn by experience that obstacles are friends in disguise.

The difference between Mrs. Slenker and myself is, as I see it, she looks at the dark side; I, at the silver lining. I do not see how it could very well be otherwise, for she draws her inspiration from materialism, I from Spiritualism. I sincerely thank Mrs. Slenker for her very fair criticism.

Mr. Audley does me the injustice at the outset—and repeats it again and again—of attributing to me, by the use of quotation marks, a sentence which I did not and would not use. I did not say, "Mesmerism is the key*note* or key*stone* to Spiritualism." The words note and stone are his own children, born with a purpose; and if all his offspring are such contemptible frauds, I dare not think of what the father is capable. He says I threw down the gauntlet in gallant style. Indeed, I was not aware that in trying to prove that man is immortal I was fluttering a red rag in the breeze. I can not possibly see any reason why Mr. Audley or anybody else should be offended at the idea of a future life, or at proof of it. I thought I was exercising an inalienable right, but if I was infringing on other people's rights, I certainly will make the amende honorable as soon as I can be made to see it. Perhaps I am not so combative as Mr. Audley imagines. When certain animals bellow and paw the ground, I am very careful to keep at a safe distance.

Mr. Audley tells us he practiced mesmerism a number of years, and then discovered it was either a delusion or insanity. Now, to my mind, such testimony is absolutely worthless. So far as he was concerned it probably was a delusion. I could even believe it was insanity. When he pronounces himself a fraud, when he tells us he practiced it for years without knowing it to be a delusion or insanity, and makes such unheard-of and ridiculous statements concerning this almost universally accepted law, we must conclude, so far as we are concerned at least, Mr. Audley is not good authority on mesmerism.

Mr. Purdy is conscientiously opposed to my displaying so much ignorance on the subject of physiology, and fails absolutely to point out a single statement that does not harmonize with physiology. He is resolved that the world shall know that "gray matter" of the brain accounts for all the attributes of the soul.

He tells us comparative anatomy teaches that intelligence is manifested just in proportion to the quantity and quality of the brain, which nobody will dispute; and that a preponderance of gray matter physiologically and materialistically accounts for all those mysterious attributes and manifestations which to us prove that we are spiritual beings dwelling in houses of flesh.

This does not change nor affect my argument that the brain is the instrument of the mind. I might hav said "gray matter," but I chose to speak of the brain as a whole. It would not hav made the slightest difference. Mr. Purdy should certainly hav given the last analysis of gray matter, and shown how gray matter generates ideas and soul elements; and while he was about it he might hav explained how magnetism and electricity are generated. He undoubtedly intended to say that the soul is generated from the brain, in fragments, little by little, as we hav use for it, just as magnetism and electricity are generated from magnets, zinc, etc. He states that the system of nerves, with their uses, is what I call spirituality; that the nerves carry the sensations or impressions to the brain, and there they are converted into ideas or knowledge. So simple and plain! The wonder is we had not thought of it before! I stated that spirituality was independent of sensation, therefore the nerves can hav nothing to do with this mysterious gift. Now, if Mr. Purdy will carefully explain how impressions are converted into ideas or knowledge he will giv the world the grandest revelation it has ever received. But right here is where he has utterly failed, and where materialism has and always will fail. If the world ever receives this wonderful revelation, so that man can comprehend this great mystery, it will be by and through the glorious gift of Spiritualism. But not yet has Spiritualism accomplished this mighty task. Can it be true that Mr. Purdy understands this thing? that to him man is no mystery? If so, then let us bow down and worship him, for he speaks as never man spoke before.

He says, "A specimen of brain from the head of an Australian savage, placed under a microscope alongside a specimen from the head of Daniel Webster and Wendell Phillips, we could detect no difference."

If this is true his theory that a preponderance of gray matter accounts for intelligence and spiritual attributes does not account for the difference in intelligence of those parties. Mr. Webster's and Mr. Phillips's superior intelligence must be accounted for on some other basis. It is not wise to elaborate a fine argument, in theory, and then make the next sentence refute or destroy it. Mr. Purdy's illustration certainly does not sustain his theory.

I am somewhat skeptical about the statement that Mr. Purdy has ever examined a specimen of the brain of either of those distinguished gentlemen. Mr. Phillips, I understand, yet dwells in the flesh. If true, then I will giv Mr. Phillips the credit of being the most accommodating gentleman I ever heard of.

In regard to evolution Mr. Purdy also thinks I am unjust. He makes evolution do infinitely more than I or anybody else ever dared claim. He says animals also possess the capacity for unlimited growth, intellectual and spiritual. I will quote from his criticism the most extraordinary sentence it has ever been my privilege to read: "And the capacity for the growth of intelligence in animals I consider just as unlimited as in man, but they will never advance to such an extent as to make man unnecessary, for the very reason that man will never stop long enough to allow the animals to catch up. Evolution don't do things in that way. All things move together, and man and the animal kingdom will always hold the same relative position they now do."

I hav often heard the expression, "Go the whole hog or none," but this is a little the finest application of it I ever knew. Of course the hog is included. It may be Mr. Purdy is right. If so, then I am wrong. When I am convinced of it I shall hav more respect for hogs "and sich" than ever. I presume this is the evolution of materialism. It is altogether too strong for Spiritualism. Try again, Mr. Purdy.

Mr. Herbold's last effusion is not worthy of notice. It was neither criticism nor argument.

I will say to materialists, if coarse ridicule and unmanly sneers are all the arguments they hav left, then their cause is not worth championing. I cannot descend with Mr. Herbold to the level of his last article; and until he adopts a higher standard he must not expect me to follow him. I will simply say to him, Come up higher. Materialists, and especially my critics, should remember that though all the world should protest against Spiritualism and immortality, and should ridicule the idea with every breath, it would not make the slightest difference. "Evolution don't do things in that way." Facts are stubborn things, and the sooner we accept them as such, the better it will be for all concerned.

Humanity's Outlook.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I feel like complimenting you for the spirit of fairness with which you conduct your valuable paper. I hav been purchaser, subscriber, and extensive reader of most of the progressive journals from long before the persecuted and venerated Abner Kneeland established his Boston Investigator down to the present period. So you will admit I ought to be able to note their prevailing crotchets as instructors and directors of public thought in the line of Liberalism. In short, I hav found among them all a general effort to be fair to their dissenting correspondents, which is very pleasant to behold. But permit me to remark, without flattery, that, as a deluded Spiritualist, I like THE TRUTH SEEKER—an avowed hardpan, Materialistic, Infidel sheet—better than any exclusively Spiritual paper now being published. I like it because its leading editorials are fair and free from scurrility or dogmatic, pseudo-scientific, unmeaning cant. To Spiritualists and "eternal sleepers" you giv an equal hearing. We, your contributors, are like playful children aiming to climb the "tree of liberty." The higher the elevation, the better the spectators can observe and judge of the delicacy and vigor of our farms. This augmentative sparring is the more enjoyable, as between Materialism and Spiritualism we hav extinguished the flames of an orthodox hell.

As an old Liberal (well verging on four-score), I cannot refrain, but from my point of sight, reflecting soberly on the future earthly outlook of humanity. In fact, I hav so accustomed myself to this species of reflection, that from taking a somber and discouraging glance at the refined barbarities of what is called civilized life—the doctrine of atonement on the one hand, and the hopelessness of cold Materialism on the other—the subject, to me, has become a source of amusement and pleasure. When I say pleasure, do not for a moment suppose I hav become heartless or insensible to the daily and hourly miseries of mankind, or, like Nero, feel like capering or fiddling while Rome is in flames. Far from it. But viewed from a rational standpoint, and strengthened by the demonstrating proofs of Spiritualism, I cannot but see that the great body of religionists and believers in natural depravity, a burning hell, in the fall of man, and the necessity of atonement and religious faiths in all their fantastic phases, are just as reasonable as that of the ultra-skeptic who rejects all faiths, all testimony, and tries to find happiness in the idea of annihilation or blank oblivion. I absolutely feel apologetical for those saints who "suffer" in purple and white linen for the cause of Christ. I cannot but observe, in viewing the past and the present contentious condition of the organic and inorganic elements of nature, that there always has been enough ever-present misery in the world to excuse our progenitors from cunningly originating the astounding fiction of man's fallen condition from a state of blessedness, of an offended and enraged God, and the necessity of atonement. On all this immoral scheme, predicated upon man's ignorance of himself, hang all the "law and the profits" and the long catalogue of saints and holy aristocratic reverends. Now, irrational as is this fiction, and profitably as the priesthood manipulate it, still it satisfies in man a spontaneous longing hope for a continued existence after death.

I look around and behold nature in her elementary state, from the minutest condition of atomic life up to reasoning (so-called), godlike man, now, as she ever has been, antagonistic, tumultuous, and sometimes desolating. Winter's frosts and summer's scorching heat continue the same. Tempests beat and rage as pitilessly as ever. The billows of the turbulent ocean swell and toss the bewildered navigator as unfeelingly as ever.

We talk of refinement, progress, and civilization in the human family. Here I behold godlike Christian man as warlike and cruel as of yore, who butchers his fellow-man as mercilessly and on as hollow pretenses.

On closer observation I see that the priesthood hav elevated the false and pernicious doctrine of atonement to the exactitude of a cultured, classic science.

I observe in no condition of life immunity against sickness, pain, and casual misery; misery in its vast variety of agonizing forms; miseries arising from birth, accident, parentage, and untoward, uncontrolable circumstances. I listen to much intelligent talk about the happiness of living in harmony with the laws of our being. But the question will naturally arise, How many thousands of generations must pass away under this unavoidable endurance of misery ere the great mass of mankind will become philosophers enough to get the mastery and bring into subjection these contentious elements and make this tempestuous earth a grand Utopia? or will man ever?

I continue my thinking, and observe that a universal principle of antagonism is running throughout all the activities of nature, both mind and matter, and without its restless and disturbing action there could be no advance; no progression onward to a higher plane of development; no unfoldment of new beauties, new wonders, new comforts; higher aspirations to cherish our existence, or hope for a better; but also, alas, new and keener sources of grief, misery, and suffering, calling loudly upon our sympathies for our suffering fellow-man.

From this apparent confusion throughout all nature, the "everlasting sleeper," he who livs only in the sensuous plane of existence, received no hint of design, of ulterior purpose; but when any of these overwhelming, unavoidable miseries force themselves unbearably upon him individually, his only avenue of retreat lies in the desperation of self-destruction. And who can blame him for coming to such a resolve from his befogged and limited standpoint of thought?

Equally with the annihilationist, the Spiritualist observes throughout all nature this universal antagonism, at times totally distressing and appalling, which, without the sustaining influence of hope of a happier future after death, he could well conceive human existence from the cradle to the grave—to many—a well-devised demoniac hell. But possessed with a fair share of the element of ever-present hope, and strengthened by the positive personal evidences of spirit-assurances, no matter how, he learns to estimate this contentious world as a vast academy or laboratory for the formation of our individuality; our selfhood; the important, imperishable me.

The schooling of experience is essential. Hence the question is readily answered. What kind of an arithmetician could a person be expected to be who merely carried around on his person a never-opened copy of Dilworth, or nightly slept with a volume of Euclid under his pillow?

To the advanced spiritual thinker, he sees his existence is a part of a vast incomprehensible system of creation, at least to finite man. It therefore becomes a duty to himself, like a pupil in nature's boundless university, to await patiently the honest and well-deserved diploma of experience, and patiently graduate through the portals of death.

Mistakes Corrected.

Editor Utica Daily Observer, Sir: In your article of the 20th on "Reformers, and Their Mistakes," you recounted at length the history of the National Liberal League. Now historians are usually careful not to get different events mixed—not to hav the right events come off in the wrong time—not to write down upon the historic page heroes who never appeared upon the actual scene—not to end the historic narrative before it gets through. Please permit an "observer" who was on the spot to giv a little coherence to the story.

1. Last year's meeting was not held at Syracuse, but at Cincinnati. The annual meeting of 1878 was held at Syracuse, but the "bone of contention" was not D. M. Bennett's arrest and conviction, because at that time he had neither been arrested or convicted for mailing "Cupid's Yokes." That did not take place till after the Syracuse meeting. The contention was over the Comstock laws, and the arrest and imprisonment of E. H. Heywood of Massachusetts, the author of the pamphlet.

2. Of course, then, it forces to the grouud that "they showed by the man's own mouth that he (Bennett) was a disreputable adventurer."

3. Elizur Wright was not at the Syracuse Convention, and had nothing to do with "leading the majority of the leaguers," and did not "insist upon a complete indorsement of Bennett and his book." Mr. Wright was a prominent stockholder in the Index Association, and a personal friend of its editor, Mr. Abbot. To conciliate Mr. Abbot, the League refrained from any expression, officially or by resolution, on the Comstock laws, and elected his friend Wright President of the League. Abbot however would not be conciliated. He bolted because he was not re-elected, and for no other reason, carrying his friends with him.

4. The meeting at Syracuse was held in October, 1878, and "the League lasted" not only "until September," but is alive and flourishing to-day, and the public will hear of it again this year through its Fourth Annual Congress, which will meet in September. Sixty-two local Leagues sent delegates to the Second Annual Congress at Syracuse. Of these local Leagues Abbot's bolt drew off eight, but never increased this number.

The old League, however, under the presidency of Elizur Wright, went on increasing, more than doubling its constituency the following year, as 121 local Leagues sent delegates to Cincinnati in September 1879.

This year the League has already nearly doubled again, and its friends confidently expect to meet delegates from 250 locals at its next Congress.

5. The platform is precisely the same to-day as that adopted at the organization in Philadelphia in 1876. Not a plank has been added, nor a principle taken out.

6. And finally, the League never assumed the title of the "National Liberal Party," and never "elected as President the Gen. Morton who was the other day arrested for forgery at St. Louis." The Hon. Elizur Wright is still President, and will continue to be as long as he will permit himself to be a candidate for re-election.

Judaism.

[Taken from the article on Judaism in Volume II. of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," which we wrote in prison, and which is now rapidly being put in type, and in a few weeks will be ready for our readers. By these extracts some idea of the entire work may be formed.]

In point of chronology this system of religion should hav preceded the last two treated, but the chronological order has not been strictly followed, and as it seemed desirable to hav the Jewish system and the two other systems which hav grown out of it, or are founded upon it, stand in contiguity, this order was decided upon.

The religion of the Jews, like very many of the religions which preceded it, and which hav been treated in the foregoing pages, claims to hav been founded by Deity himself, that its origin is strictly divine or supernatural, and that it was not the production of man. As almost every family in the land has the Jewish scriptures in its possession, and is more or less familiar with its ancient story of the rise and career of the Jewish people and religion, of God's remarkable dealings with them, and as those scriptures are the only record or authority we hav to depend upon for information upon the subject, it is not necessary here to dwell minutely upon the details of the legendary story. So, after the general points are stated, the remarks that follow will be more of the nature of a criticism than otherwise.

According to the Jewish account referred to it appears that about 1920 B. C., or 3,800 years ago, from the present year, 1880, of the Christian era, God, whom we will assume was Jahveh, or Jehovah—though he was not known by that name till several hundred years afterward—appeared unto Abram, the son of Terah, a resident of Haran in Chaldea and commanded him to get out of that country into one he would show him, where he would make him a great nation, where he would bless him and make his name widely known, etc. So Abram, being then seventy-five years old, took his wife Sarai and his nephew Lot, with what property they had accumulated, and journeyed to the land of Canaan. Here Jahveh appeared to him again and promised to giv the land to his seed, whereupon Abram built an altar to Jahveh and pitched his tent on the east of Bethel. But there being a grievous famine in the land which Jahveh made a present of to Abram, the latter, finding the present not worth the possessing, there being little or nothing there for him to eat, was glad to take a journey into Egypt, where Jahveh was unknown, and where eatables were in abundance. Here, however, Abram resorted to the pitiful subterfuge of passing his wife Sarai off for his sister lest he should be killed if it was known she was his wife instead of sister. As Sarai was at that time sixty-five years of age the falsehood would hardly seem necessary; but we are nevertheless led to infer that Pharaoh cohabited with the somewhat antiquated Sarai, by which he became cursed with a certain plague which is not definitely described, but may be conjectured, whereupon the king upbraided Abram for his deception and sent him away. Abram, however, made well by the duplicity and falsehood he had practiced, for he left very rich in cattle, silver, and gold. The account says he went from Egypt "into the south, even unto Bethel," where he built an altar; but how he could reach the land of Canaan from Egypt by going south is indeed marvelous, inasmuch as it lies in a northeast direction from Egypt.

It seems Jahveh appeared unto Abram on several different occasions and renewed the promises and covenant he had previously made, pledging that though Sarai was far advanced in life she should hav a son who would become the father of a great people. He changed the name of Abram to Abraham, and Sarai to Sarah. He promised that the seed of Abraham should be like the stars of heaven, the dust of the earth, and the sands of the sea-shore for multitude, and that they should possess the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, even forever, and that they should possess all the country between the river of Egypt (the Nile) and the great river of Euphrates. As Sarah bore Abraham no child she gave him her bondwoman Hager, who conceived by him, but before the child was born Sarah was so oppressive upon her that she was fain to run away. Jahveh, however, told her as she was only a servant she had better return and humble herself to Sarah, and this she did. But she did not hav a pleasant time with her jealous mistress. After the child Ishmael was born and pretty well grown, Sarah became so jealous and vindictive toward the bondwoman that she induced Abraham to drive her out into the wilderness, where she inevitably would hav perished had not Jahveh interfered and provided for the mother and child.

Several years after this Abraham removed to the land of Gerar, ruled over by King Abimelech, where Abraham repeated the duplicity he had practiced in Egypt about Sarah being his sister, although she had then come to be nearly ninety years of age. She must hav been attractive, nevertheless, for the king was tempted to take her as wife, and would hav done so had not Jahveh timely interfered. But for the will the king had to do so Abraham was presented by Abimelech with numerous sheep, oxen, men-servants, and women-servants. In this way the "Father of the Faithful" seemed to make the attractions of his aged wife very profitable to himself, thus adding largely to his wealth.

When Sarah was ninety years of age and Abraham a hundred, Isaac, the child of promise, was born; some time after which Abraham moved into the land of the Philistines. When Isaac was twenty-five years of age Jahveh commanded Abraham to get himself and the young man to the land of Moriah and then offer his son, through whom so much was to be accomplished, as a burnt-offering to God. This command from Jahveh was either prompted by the thought that the odor of Isaac's burning body would smell agreeably to his olfactories, or because he wished to ascertain how Abraham would conduct himself under the circumstances, and to test his obedience. We are told it was the latter, but this view so dwarfs the omniscience of an all-wise, all-knowing God that the first supposition would seem the more creditable to him. Abraham, seeming to deem it all right that he should thus slay his own son, and the young man offering no objection, they performed the journey to the place of sacrifice.

The falseness of Abraham's nature was conspicuous here. When he was about setting out for Mount Moriah, and when he had no expectation that Isaac would return with him, his servants inquired where they were going. He replied they were going to make a sacrifice to God, when they would soon return. And also when Isaac inquired relative to the victim for sacrifice he misled his own son.

Abraham, on arriving at the place of sacrifice, built an altar, gathered the necessary fuel for the purpose, bound his son upon the altar, stretched forth his right hand, holding the knife, to giv the deadly blow to his son. At this juncture Jahveh fortunately interfered and prevented the unnatural murder, and provided a ram as a substitute.

At the age of one hundred and twenty-seven years Sarah departed this life, after which Abraham felt somewhat lonely, and when a little over one hundred and forty years of age, he took Keturah to his bosom, who bore him six sons, thus showing his ability, when one hundred and forty years of age, to do by himself six times as much as he had been able to accomplish with God's help at one hundred years of age. But as Abraham was the "Friend of God," he might hav received some assistance in his later exploits. He died at the age of one hundred and seventy-five years.

When forty years old Isaac was married to his kinswoman Rebekah; but she was barren for an indefinite period, until Isaac entreated Jahveh to change the state of things. After this Rebekah conceived, and bore a pair of twins, Esau and Jacob. But the latter seemed to be the favorite both with Jahveh and the mother, and by a dishonest device perpetrated between the mother and son, the first-born—Esau—was cheated out of the blessing which justly belonged to him, and Jacob was the recipient of it. Isaac did not greatly distinguish himself, except by telling the people of the plain the same kind of falsehood about his wife being his sister which his father had twice told before him. It seemed easy for both father and son to dissimulate, and Jahveh was not at all displeased thereat. He renewed to Isaac the covenant he had made with Abraham about the immense number of his progeny and their inheritance of the land of Canaan.

When Jacob arrived at the age of about thirty-eight years he and his mother became fearful of injury that might be inflicted upon him from the hands of Esau, who was much exasperated in consequence of the great injustice that had been done him in the matter of the paternal blessing which he failed to receive. The mother directed her favorite son to go to her brother Laban, in Haran, in Padan-aram, and the now aged Isaac also enjoined him in the same direction, and directed the son to take a wife of his own kindred, and not of the daughters of Canaan. Jacob was a prudent man, and at once acted upon parental advice. On his route, and while asleep at night, he dreamed of seeing a ladder reach from the earth up into heaven, with the angels ascending and descending upon it. Jahveh stood at the head of the ladder and renewed to Jacob the brilliant promise he had before made to Abraham and Isaac, that his seed should be as the dust of the earth for multitude and spreading to the four quarters of the earth. Jacob arrived safely at his uncle Laban's house, who had two daughters, Leah and Rachel. He seemed to fall in love with his youngest cousin, Rachel, at once, for she was fair to look upon, while Leah was somewhat blear-eyed and unattractive. He proposed to his uncle to work for him seven years for Rachel, and the proposition was accepted; but at the end of that time his uncle played as sharp a trick upon him as Jacob had formerly played upon his brother Esau. Leah was palmed off upon him in place of Rachel, whom he contracted for. It would seem that Jacob was not as sharp in this transaction as in most other instances, for he did not discover the cheat that had been perpetrated upon him till the next morning. This was, perhaps, owing to the wine which Jacob had imbibed before he retired, for Laban gav a feast on the occasion, and it is presumable that Jaboo got pretty mellow. In the morning he complained bitterly to Laban, who took the position that in that country the youngest daughter must not be given in marriage before the first-born. The matter was easily compromised, however, by Laban's promise that after a week Rachel should be given him also, and for whom he should serve still another seven years. After this second term Jacob served still six years more, and operated in the stocks pretty extensively; and by virtue of a bargain he made with his father-in-law—by peeling rods, ringed, streaked, and speckled, and setting them up where the cattle went for water—with the Lord's aid he became possessor of the larger and better share of Laban's herds.

Between Jacob's two wives and their two handmaids he became the father of twelve sons; but the details pertaining to it all need not be entered into. Jahveh was with him and prospered him greatly. At the expiration of twenty years Jacob thought it was time for him to return to the land of his father, and Jahveh was of the same opinion, so while Laban and his sons were away at sheep-shearing, Jacob, his wives, and children packed up and left rather stealthily, with his cattle and all his possessions, without saying a word to Laban about it. The uncle very naturally felt aggrieved at this, especially as his gods had been taken. He accordingly, with his brethren, pursued Jacob seven days, and overtook him at Mount Gilead. He undoubtedly would hav done serious injury to his son-in-law had not God prevented it by a timely notification to Laban that he had better do Jacob no harm. Laban, however, wanted his gods, and he looked through Jacob's tents for them; but Rachel hid them, and sat upon them, telling her father a falsehood, whereby she retained the stolen gods.

Jacob had great fears as to how his brother Esau would receive him, in consequence of the wrongs done him twenty years before, and to insure his good will he sent him a valuable present of cattle, sheep, etc. Esau, however, proved a generous brother, and bore himself more magnanimously than Jacob had good reason to expect. It was at this point that Jacob held his remarkable wrestling-match with God, or one of his angels, for the better part of a night, and in which the contest seemed very equal between the two athletes until God seems to hav taken an unfair advantage of Jacob and put his hip out of joint, after which, of course, his wrestling abilities were greatly lessened, and he was compelled to "throw up the sponge."

The sons of Jacob were not entirely loving to each other. They hated Joseph because of their father's partiality to him, and still more because his dreams did not suit them. One fine day they sought to kill him, but finally sold him into slavery to a company of Ishmaelites and Midianites for twenty pieces of silver, and they took him into Egypt, whither they were journeying, where they sold him to Potiphar, a captain of Pharaoh's guard. The eleven sons caused the father to believe that Joseph had been killed by a wild beast, and the old man grieved sorely. The selling of Joseph and his being taken into Egypt proved to be a very fortunate circumstance, for the young man was advanced wonderfully in the land of the pyramids; being able to interpret Pharaoh's dreams he was greatly promoted, and from a slave became the second in command in the kingdom. The dreams pointed out that there were to be seven years of plenty followed by seven years of famine. This information being acted upon, Joseph gathered up the prolific crops of the seven plenteous years and safely stored the same, so that it was impossible to compute the amount. This was fortunate, indeed, not only for Egypt but all the other nations, for during the seven succeeding years of famine all people were obliged to go to Egypt to procure corn to sustain life. Jacob, also, had to send his ten sons into Egypt to buy corn. They were obliged to buy it of Joseph, whom twenty years before they had sold into slavery. They knew him not, but he recognized them. He spoke harshly unto them and imprisoned them three days as spies. He affected not to believe their story, and demanded that one should be bound and retained as a hostage while they returned home with the corn and brought back with them their youngest brother, Benjamin, who remained with his father. Simeon was accordingly retained. When the corn was eaten up Jacob said unto the sons that they must go for more; but they would not unless he would send the lad Benjamin with them. He did this with great reluctance. Joseph took his brethren to his own house, gave them a dinner, made himself known to them, and wept upon their necks. He sent for his father to remove into Egypt with all his children, his children's children, with all they possessed. This was complied with, and thus the children of Israel became dwellers in the land of Egypt, Goshen being given them for a residence.

Is It Correct or Incorrect?

BOSTON, MASS., May 31, 1880.

MR BENNETT, Dear Sir: Will you do me the favor of correcting in your next TRUTH SEEKER one of several errors I noticed in your "Personal" of May 15, 1880. You say in article 6 that on September 21, 1879, Underwood and Ellis met in my house in Greenwood to read those letters, &c., which is not true, as I spent the entire day in Boston. Neither is the following quotation from the same article true: That the above statement "is based on information direct from Savage."

Very truly yours,
THEO. L. SAVAGE.

[REPLY.—We readily giv place to the above, though we think Mr. Savage asks for the correction of an error which was not made. We did not say Savage spent the day with Underwood and Ellis, nor did we say that Savage did not pass that day in Boston. In fact, we were aware that he was in Boston when the other two had not yet arrived, for that was the day on the evening of which George Jacob Holyoake delivered a lecture in Parker Memorial Hall. Savage was on hand in time, but was somewhat nervous lest Ellis and Underwood had missed the train and would fail to arrive. His anxiety, however, was timely ended, for the two men named entered the hall together.

As for the "information direct from Savage," upon which the statement was based, we hav only this to say: The information was conveyed to us by as truthful a man as resides in Massachusetts, whom we believe to be incapable of falsehood, and he obtained it from Mr. Savage. We consider that tolerably "direct." The name of the party can be given if necessary. He will hardly object to his name being used if needful.

All that remains to be said in the matter of those private letters is that all that was required was that they remained in the privacy for which they were intended. They had injured nobody, and were not at all dangerous. It is hard to decide which were the most mean and contemptible—the woman without principle or character, who made merchandise of them, or the men without principle or character who equally co-operated with her and who bought them, and, in a distorted and exaggerated form, spread them before the world.—ED. T. S.]

Letter from a Western Friend.

WOLCOTTVILLE, IND., May 27, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Sir: I am glad that you are out of the Christian bastile and once more at the head of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am truly sorry that you ever had anything to do with "Cupid's Yokes," the teachings and doctrines of which I abhor. Sociology and the questions relating to the marriage obligation should be fairly discussed; but to substitute Freelove, or the promiscuous intermingling of the sexes, for monogamic marriage is, in my judgment, baneful, and destructive to the best interests of society—relegating us to communal savagery and barbarism. I regret very much that the fight for Freethought, free speech, and free mails could not have been made on some scientific or anti-theological publication in lieu of the one in question. Instead of dividing our ranks, a fight on such tenable grounds would have cemented the Liberals of this country, of all shades of opinion, into one indissoluble brotherhood, and in the struggle our escutcheons would hav been kept pure and clean, except from the taint of blood drawn from our pharisaical persecutors. But I suppose it is useless to kick against the pricks. It may all be for the best. It may all be for the worst. Let us hope that it will not be the latter. However pure THE TRUTH SEEKER may have been in the past, Mr. Bennett, as one who desires the success of your paper and the cause it advocates, let me urge you to guard its morals well. Be radical as you will, immoral, never! GEO. F. ROCKWELL, M. D.

REPLY.—We join in hearty accord with what friend Rockwell urges as to the morality of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There can be no person in the country who feels a greater interest in its columns being kept free from wrongs of all kind than ourselves. We do not intend to advocate any species of immorality, and if we hav ever done so in these columns we certainly are unaware of it. It is our purpose to fearlessly uphold truth and true morality and oppose falsehood and immorality. If we fail in doing this it will be an error of judgment rather than a defect of the heart.

But in connection with this subject three questions arise: What is morality? What does it consist in? Is it any part of the system of the Christian religion? May not a man be truly moral and oppose every dogma in the Christian faith? To answer all these queries in full would require far more room than we propose to occupy at present. We will content ourselves by saying we find there is a great diversity of opinion, even among Liberals, as to what constitutes true morality—a difference as great as exists as to the character of "Cupid's Yokes." Friend Rockwell says he abhors its doctrines. We believe him strictly honest in his position. But on the other hand we know many people for whom we entertain great respect, and whom we believe to be as pure and moral as a great majority of mankind, who think highly of the little pamphlet and consider its propositions unanswerable. When there are such a diversity of opinions, even in the Liberal ranks, it shows how needful it is for us to cultivate charity and forbearance.

As for ourselves, we occupy a medium sort of ground. Mr. Heywood's pamphlet does not strike us as particularly abhorrent, nor are we strongly in favor of its positions and arguments. We think, while it is very radical and almost revolutionary, that it contains very good suggestions, worthy the attention of all who feel an interest in natural and proper relations of the sexes.

Although we hav suffered far more inconvenience than anybody else, and more than all others put together—excepting, of course, our wife, who was left alone with a business upon her hands which she little understood—we hardly regret selling Mr. Heywood's pamphlet. We are most confident that our customers had a perfect right to buy it and read it, and that we possessed the perfect right to sell it. We had the same right to sell it that we had to sell any other book in our stock, or that any bookseller has to sell Shakspere, Byron, Burns, Swift, Sterne, Fielding, Chaucer, Montaigne, Rabelais, Boccaccio, or the Bible. We sold it, not because we particularly favored it, but because our customers wished it, and because we had a perfect right to sell it. We seldom grieve for doing what we hav a perfect right to do, and when we injure no person by so doing. As bad as our brother considers "Cupid's Yokes" to be, we cannot think it has ever injured a single person in the entire country, while we know of many who think they hav derived much valuable information from it. We know the author well, and we are very sure he wrote it with good motives and that he has no desire to injure any one.

True, Mr. Heywood is radical, as every person has a right to be, in the direction where he thinks truth lies. He may be mistaken in some of his views. We are all liable to be mistaken. Many think him immoral because he holds radical views upon the social question. Others think our friend and ourselves immoral because we entertain radical views upon theological questions. Possibly one opinion is as incorrect as the other. Mankind, Liberals included, are very liable to condemn all who differ from them, and to charge them with inculcating immorality. Our Christian opponents think it far more immoral to deny the divinity of Jesus and the remarkable efficacy of his blood than to doubt the sacredness and divinity of the marriage ceremony. Many of them would deem it far more wicked to destroy the recognized dogmas of Christianity than to indulge in polygamy or even promiscuity. No man, radical or conservative, whether Infidel or Christian, can be permitted to set up a standard of morals or a system of faith for all others to come to, nolens volens. There must be interminable differences of opinion upon all conceivable subjects, and he is the true Liberal who concedes to all the same liberty of opinion he claims for himself. We deem it perfectly right to enjoy for ourselves the liberty of our own convictions, and we should feel the same tolerance toward others though they cannot accept all our views. Assuredly, we should all make the effort to be tolerant to those who cannot see through the same lenses we do. Some are near-sighted, some are far-sighted; but let us not be intolerant toward those who hav not the same kind of eyes as our own.

The current system of marriage and the belief in the sacredness of the ceremony pronounced by a priest—by virtue of which it is believed that a man and woman are indissolubly joined in one—is a part of the theological system under which we are living, as really as is faith in the Trinity, the infallibility of the Bible, and the eternal tortures of hell fire. One man may honestly be an unbeliever in a part of this theological institution, while another man may conscientiously repudiate the whole of it. A man can as easily be orthodox and bigoted in one part of the system as in another. It is the better way for us all to believe what seems right and best to us, and to hold ourseives open to conviction and further light, and to not condemn and send to hell those who cannot believe as we do.

For ourselves, we regard monogamy as the best and most happy system of the sexual relation yet practiced by the human race. We regard it as the most preservative of the home, which is the basis of civilization and good society. The union of one man to one woman is far better than the union of one man to ten women, or that of ten men to one woman. But still the world is not as happy, sexually, as it ought to be. There is a great amount of wretchedness existing under the Christian, orthodox, moral, monogamic system of matrimony. Hundred of thousands of both sexes in this country are dragging out most dismal lives as victims to the current system. There is a wrong connected with it somewhere. Light is needed upon the subject, and suggestions should be in order. We are in favor of letting Heywood be heard, and every other man who thinks he has valuable thoughts to advance. Let us reason together and calmly hear all sides. It cannot be right to send men to prison because they are a little before or a little behind their fellow-men. Let us bear in mind that however sincere we may be, it is possible we are further from the truth than those we believe to be most in error.

That man is moral who does nothing to interfere with the rights and happiness of his fellow-beings. A man may be as honest in being unorthodox on social or sexual questions as on theological or religious topics. Let us be fair; let us be tolerant; let us be liberal. Let us shun vice; let us shun excesses; let us shun intemperance; let us shun everything that makes ourselves or our fellow-beings unhappy.

However inconvenient, oppressive, and outrageous our imprisonment was, good has come of it, and will continue to grow out of it. It has caused thousands to giv attention to Liberal thought who never did so before. It has awakened thousands to a realization of the fact that Christians still possess the spirit of persecution, and that to find equal rights for all in matters of opinion and practice the world is compelled to seek further than the church, and to look outside of theology, ecclesiasticism, and religious tyranny.

BILLS hav been sent to many of our patrons who are in arrears. We particularly request that all such will duly respond. Our expenses are over $350 per week, and we need every dollar due us. Those who do not wish to take the paper and pay for it are requested to notify us and "square up" for the time they hav taken it. Anything less than this is not honorable, and not becoming a true Liberal.

Comstock's Late Work.

This factotum of the Obscene Society of this city, wishing to show the men who contribute to his salary of $4,000 a year that he is doing something to earn the money, occasionally makes an extra effort to seize some poor hapless victim and cast him into prison. His wont is to take obscure and friendless persons, who are unable to make a strong defense against him; but of late he has grappled with persons of some standing and influence. T. B. Peterson & Brothers, of Philadelphia, extensive publishers of assorted literature, lately brought out a translation of Emile Zola's novel called "Nana," which, by some, is pronounced immoral and indecent, and, by others, moral and instructive. It is said to be the life and adventures of a Parisian courtesan. The principal effect that Comstock's intermeddling with it has been to largely increase the sales, tens of thousands of copies of the work having been sold that otherwise would never hav been called for. The Petersons are rich, and it is not all likely they will ever be brought to punishment.

Another case is the recent arrest of Messrs. Sabin & Son, respectable booksellers, at 64 Nassau street. The arrest was made upon the affidavit of Comstock's disreputable deputy and aid, Joseph A. Britton, who swore that he purchased certain improper pictures of defendants. It is said they deny ever having had in their store the pictures which Britton swore he bought of them. If the trial turns upon Britton's credibility, Comstock's case will be a weak one, for there are several persons ready to testify that Britton is not to be believed and that he has perjured himself in various cases. Sabin & Son will not go to prison without making a determined defense. If they hav really sold obscene pictures, they should be duly punished; but if it is a case of heartless persecution, that should be made to clearly appear.

Ingersoll's Recent Lectures.

The two late lectures which Col. Ingersoll delivered at Booth's Theater on Sunday evenings, May 16th aud 23d, are most cheering indications of the rapid spread of Freethought. On both of these memorable occasions the capacious building was filled to overflowing with intelligent and respectable people, hundreds being unable to obtain admission, while those who were fortunate enough to get inside were held intranced considerably over two hours each time. The oft repeated applause evinced the pleasure of the audiences, and the approbation that was accorded to the very radical and anti-theological utterances made. The Colonel's humor and sharp hits make him extremely popular, and constitute him the greatest orator living. The anxiety to read the lecture that the portion of the public felt who had not the privilege of hearing it is evinced by the great demand upon the city daily Truth, which advertised that it would report the last lecture on "The Gods" in full. Besides its regular edition of 40,000 it was enabled to sell fully 10,000 extra copies, and many were not able to procure copies.

There was some deception used in the lecture as reported. While Truth reprinted the original lecture as delivered nearly ten years ago, the lecture as delivered at Booth's Theater was virtually a new one, containing but a few of the best passages in the original, the balance being new material and most excellent. But as both lectures are unexcelled, the public were not cheated in obtaining the original for one cent.

A very perceptible effect of these lectures is the fluttering which has taken place among the clergy in many churches in many cities and towns. Feeling the earth giv way beneath their feet they very naturally feel alarmed lest their standing is overthrown and their support is taken from them. They see the handwriting on the wall, and their knees smite together in trepidation. Many of them that see their institution—made up of the myths and fables of paganism—is falling are reiterating the cry, "What shall we do to be saved?" The replies to Ingersoll are numerous in all parts of the city and country. Almost every preacher of any note is trying to answer Ingersoll. The churches are alarmed at the inroads being made, and they call upon their pastors to do something to stem the tide which is so unmercifully bearing down upon them. The clergymen are becoming panic-stricken and are striking out as wildly already as a defeated pugilist when knocked out of time. Their attempts to answer Ingersoll are pitiful failures. Not one has answered him effectually. Not one can remove him from any of the positions he has taken.

It is amusing to witness the frantic efforts thus made. Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, and even Universalists, are trying to meet Ingersoll and ward off his strong blows; and it awakens the risibilities to see what childish work they make of it. It is like the misguided ram trying to butt the locomotive from the track. About all they can do is to expose the weakness of their own creeds and the great want of proofs which their system labors under. More and more are the truths of Rationalism, science, and reason made clear to the common comprehension, and more the weakness and falseness of ecclesiasticism and mythology are exposed.

Every ambitious clergyman who wishes to come into public notice, and every nearly defunct one who desires to be galvanized into life again, now wants to challenge Ingersoll to a debate or discussion. But he takes about as much notice of them as an elephant would take of a score of June bugs. He has altogether too much to do to regard the barking of whiffets or curs. We are perhaps less employed; and if any clergymen of recognized ability wish to discuss the merits or truth of Christianity, the divinity of the Jewish and Christian scriptures, just let them "petition;" we will giv them room to be heard and read weekly by 50,000 readers, and will reply to the best arguments they can bring in defense of their shaky institution, the discussion to be conducted under fair and equitable rules. Thus, ye teachers of ancient fables, if Ingersoll will not attend to you, we will. You shall not spoil for want of dressing.

Courtlandt Palmer on Our New Book.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Although a temporary inflammation of the eyes has prevented me from giving your new work, "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" (perhaps I hav not the title quite correct), the complete examination I should like to bestow upon it, still I do not like to delay longer to assure you that from the cursory glance I hav been able to cast upon it, I am convinced that it is a most valuable work, valuable both to read and to refer to. Your diligence as a writer strikes me as most wonderful. Your time in prison has certainly been well spent, and when, hereafter, charges are brought against your purity of character I would refer your traducers to your noble invocation to the universe at the close of Volume I., just as the bigots themselves gladly overlook David's shortcomings in view of his inimitable Psalms.

Yours truly, C. PALMER.

New York, May 29, 1880.

[A comparison with David is perhaps a doubtful compliment. Our offense consisted in writing certain letters of questionable taste, but without evil intent, to a person of questionable character. David went further than that. He was, however, a man after God's own heart. We are not. —ED. T. S.]

Remember the camp-meeting at Belvidere, Ill., June 16.

Free Speech.

A contributor to Truth got off the following in that sprightly and outspoken daily:

Dear Truth: Have you quite made up your mind that Robert G. Ingersoll is right as against three-quarters of the civilized world?

I see that you take his part, and, privately, I am rather inclined to take your side of the question. But you know it isn't the respectable thing to take that view of it. Going to church has, after all, resolved itself not into a matter of belief, but into one of social exigency. Ask the oldest school Presbyterian that livs whether he believes in everlasting fire and brimstone, and he will quietly smile. But he will, nevertheless, go to the church that preaches it if he moves in good society. For, in nine cases out of ten, the practice is less indulged in as a palliative to God than to satisfy some notion of decorum that exists in his immediate circle of acquaintance.

For instance, I know a paying teller who never misses morning service at Dr. Hall's. During the week he drinks, swears, and comports himself as would any man of the world, who thought Dr. Hall just the sort of humbug I do.

I met him the other day just after hearing Ingersoll's lecture, and asked him why it was he went to church at all.

"Do you believe in Presbyterianism?" I asked.

"No."

"Do you think Dr. Hall an elequent man?"

"I think he's a damned fool."

"Do you believe in God?"

"I hav my doubts about him."

"Then why do you go to church?"

"Because the President of my bank is there, and if I didn't attend church he'd suspect me of stealing from the till."

"Your President is, then, a devout Christian?"

"He doesn't believe a word of the whole thing. But he has a good many depositors in the congregation who'd withdraw their funds if he proclaimed himself a heathen. Five of the Directors, too, are firm believers in hell fire. So we all go to church. I look on it as a part of my work, and make up for it by getting down half an hour late every day."

Christianity is a mere fashion, but I notice that lately a good many very staid and respectable people are turning the other way.

I am very much inclined to look upon things as Col. Bob does. I can't make up my mind that there's a God above complacently looking down upon so much scoundrelism in this world and letting it go on without interference.

I can't believe that there's a God who permits so much injustice, so much suffering, so much inequality. I can't believe there's a God who creates a Bennett rich and able to enjoy every luxury of this world, while he sends to the gallows a poor devil who from his childhood up has known nothing but theft, murder, and misery—men who are born apparently to hell in this world and hell in the next.

I do not believe there is a God who strikes so unequally, and, permit me to say, theughtlessly.

I am thinking, for example, of a good and just man that I know, who has suffered one blow after another until he is almost dead with grief. Nearly all those he loved best hav died around him.

But he had a wife left. In the love he bore her he found compensation for his miseries. He could say: "God has taken all these, but he has left me a devoted wife, and I can still be happy."

Yesterday God took her.

Four days ago she was a young, pretty, gentle woman, full of life and spirits, and wrapped up in the man for whose happiness she seemed to hav been born.

To-day she lies a corpse.

If a God did this, it would be enough to curse him for. What wise purpose can be subserved by a death like this, when we think of the multitudes whose passing away would be a blessing?

How much better, in place of calling this the act of God and cursing him therefor, to put such a God as this out of the question, and simply make up our mind that all these things are the indiscriminate work of nature, which does not choose her subjects as a conscious God is supposed to do.

Believe me, people die of disease, and not by the hand of an eternal and all-watchful Deity.

And such a thought is decidedly a more comforting one than that absurd axiom (invented by some priest) that "whom God loveth he chasteneth."

My heart bleeds for the stricken husband who to-day mourns the severance of that alliance which alone, of all human partings, leaves an utter void. There is nothing more beautiful than married man and woman, where the love and the courtesy and the tenderness hav been undimmed for years; and there is nothing so sad as the severance of all this suddenly, unexpectedly, unaccountably.

A curious and suggestive scene occurred in a noted barroom in the city yesterday.

I will not attempt to dissemble. Sometimes I take a drink. Upon this occasion I went in with a few friends to take a glass of Apollinaris.

A little girl of twelve years was selling flowers to a party of men who had been drinking at the bar. She was a comely, sprightly little thing, and the men were buying bouquets for each other, joking, chucking her under the chin, getting her to pin the flowers to their coats, and so on.

In the midst of the scene the door opened, and an old woman appeared. Her utter poverty was told before she spoke a word—told in her dress; in the deep, cavernous lines of her face; in her halting step, and supplicating air.

The old woman came in to beg, but her eye lighted on the laughing girl of twelve who was coining money and eagerly drinking in the compliments of the men around the bar.

Those men, who had silver pieces for the girl, had not a cent for the withered woman. She knew it instinctively, and refrained from asking.

Suddenly she stopped in front of the laughing knot of men who surrounded the child, and the fire of womanly indignation came into her eyes.

"Do you know what you are bringing that girl up to?" she asked. "Ah! poor thing! When I was her age I sold flowers myself on this very spot. That was fifty years ago. But my mother was with me, and it was not until after she died that I went wrong."

With that this poor creature left, having asked nobody for alms.

I think there was the germ of right in what she said—perhaps, also, the germ of jealousy.

Old people must be pushed aside in this world, especially if they are beggars. Young and comely people may find markets for their wares, a listening audience for their anecdotes, and the fate which the old woman predicted.

This is rather a lugubrious letter, but I am not i' the mood, as Burns says, and so remain, Yours,

VALENTINE VOX.

Is Liberal Thought Worth Anything?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In view of the fact that I see and hear of so many Liberals who are publicly serving the cause which we all pretend to love so much, struggling daily for a poor subsistence, anxious beyond expression as to the future, I am constrained to ask the question, Is Liberal thought worth anything? Has truth any commercial value?

It is no doubt a fine thing to be permitted to die for the truth, but I conceive that it would be a much finer thing to live for it. I cannot wonder that ministers of the Christian religion hesitate and quibble, and finally evade the issue altogether, knowing as they do that if they renounce their religion they make a bid for poverty and suffering.

Nearly all the Liberal lecturers, who were formerly clergymen, are making mighty efforts to keep soul and body together, instead of living as they once did, in comparative comfort. They are not persons of mediocre talent either, They hav such ability as made their mark when preaching the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. They can entertain, interest, and instruct, if placed before the public; but no society, no individual, acknowledges the duty, or assumes the responsibility of sustaining meetings for the training of the people morally and scientifically.

True, a portion of the Spiritualistic community, who hav the philosophy of the unseen to feed upon, in many parts of the country do keep up meetings and support speakers; but where are the Infidel and Materialistic associations, with their salaried teachers stamping the thought, which they claim to value, upon the people?

I met an heroic ex-minister in San Francisco, who was once a bright and shining light in the Methodist church, a man of fine attainments and an excellent speaker, who was reduced to destitution by the stand which he took for liberty, and Liberal thought. Another, a cultivated and eloquent Presbyterian, seceded from the church, entered the Liberal field, was employed a short time, and finding the pay inadequate to the support of his family, took to the road as a canvasser—an occupation to achieve success in which requires little else than "cheek," and might well compel a sensitive and intellectual soul to suicide.

Question again: Is there nothing to teach after Christianity is dead? Is there no money value in moral and scientific truths? Are Liberals, Infidels, and Materialists incapable of enthusiasm, self-sacrifice, and labor for the advance of the race? If they are, I opine our capable Liberal workers and speakers will not go hungry, or begging for bread. If they are not, I predict that Infidelity will lose its power over the masses; that is, the churches will keep right on, because people will listen to public teaching of some kind, and if bread is not offered they will feed on husks.

I realize, forcibly, the fact that Infidels are generally poor; but the Materialistic classes, our German Freethinkers, and many others, are not; and I can see no reason for the lamentable condition in which many of our speakers and workers find themselves, except in difference and lack of self-denial and enthusiasm for truth.

From many of the chairmen of our state Leagues comes the cry that they "are not supported, they cannot work for nothing," and pray why should they? And good speakers are wandering over the country, making but a precarious living. Leagues and individuals alike cry continually, "O, we cannot support a speaker! We hav no time to work up interest in meetings," etc.

When Dennis Kearney wanted funds to put the "Open Letter" before the workingmen of San Francisco, I heard a poorly dressed woman say, "I will subscribe a dollar, if I sell a necessary garment to procure it."

Where shall we look for enthusiasm like this in the Infidel and Materialistic ranks? MRS. H. S. LAKE.

New Rules for Spelling.

The following are rules, and reasons why adopted, of the Home Journal, one of the best literary papers in the country, in the matter of reformed spelling. THE TRUTH SEEKER was the first paper of any note to drop useless vowels, but since then other papers hav gone far beyond us. Orthodox spelling, like orthodox religion, needs considerable reforming:

A perfect language is one that does the work of thought with the least burden of useless material and outlay of labor.

To bring English a step nearer this perfection is the purpose of the following changes, cutting off silent and useless elements.

The object is, of course, the good to come and not immediate pleasure, for all transition from old associations and fixed habits to strange ones is attended with pain. And the same, no matter how much better the new than the old.

But the gain from every useless letter dropped, multiplied by the infinite repetitions of the immense succession of writers, printers, and learners in the future, more than outweighs any considerations of mere present and temporary discomfort.

The present movement is but a continuation of that which already in the present century has discarded u from honour, odour, and similar words, and k from publick, musick, and words of the kind. Besides the clear gain these changes hav given us in economy of writing and printing, we now find music and odor decidedly sweeter than musick and odour, and we are ready to smile at the orthographic terror and nausea which took possession of many worthy people during the change. It will be the same with future generations, who will take filosifi and fisic pure and simple, and laugh at the old fogies who found delight in such antiquated crudities as "philosophy," "physick," and "phthisick."

For convenience we thus formulate our beginnings in getting rid of useless orthographic luggage:

1.—Drop ue at the end of words like dialogue, catalogue, where the preceding vowel is short. Thus spell demagog, pedagog, epilog, synagog, etc. Change tongue for tung. When the preceding vowel is long, as in prorogue, vogue, disembogue, rogue, retain final letters as at present.
2.—Drop final e in such words as definite, infinite, favorite, where the preceding vowel is short. Thus spell opposit, preterit, hypocrit, requisit, etc. When the preceding vowel is long, as in polite, finite, invite, unite, etc., retain present form unchanged.
3.—Drop final te in words like quartette, coquette, cigarette. Thus spell cigaret, roset, epaulet, vedet, gazet, etc.
4.—Drop final me in words like programme. Thus spell program, oriflam, gram, etc.
5.—Change ph for f in words like phantom, telegraph, phase. Thus spell alfabet, paragraf, filosofy, fonetic, fotograf, etc.

P. S.—No change in proper names.

OPINIONS OF EDUCATORS, AUTHORS, AND SCHOLARS.

The annexed letters, in the same journal, are from the highest literary authorities and philologists in the country. We select these from over a hundred published in the Home Journal of April 14, 1880:

From Prof. Solon Albee, of Middlebury (Vt.) College.

The economical argument in favor of the movement is manifest; and if usage, which is the final arbiter of all that relates to language, shall decide in its favor, no theoretical objections can prevail against it.

From Prof. Rasmus B. Anderson, of the University of Wisconsin, author of "Norse Mythology."

I wish good speed to the cause of phonetic spelling. When thoroughly perfected it will be one of the greatest labor saving devices ever invented. I am greatly tempted to adopt your five sensible rules in the next book I publish. The brave position the Home Journal has taken givs a timid author courage.

From Prof. Hiram Corson, of Cornell University.

The changes which hav been adopted by the Home Journal I am quite ready to accept. There is one other which might well be made, the substitution of t or d for the suffix ed of preterites and past participles, as in publisht, askt, faild, palmd. Mr. Furnival, the founder and secretary of the Chaucer Society and of the New Shakspere Society of London, follows this spelling in the publications of these societies, and so do some other English scholars. This mode of spelling is as old as the written language. The use of f for ph representing phi in Greek words has obtained in the Italian and Spanish for hundreds of years.

From Prof. Francis J. Child, of Harvard University.

The Home Journal is so agreeably made up and so pleasant to the eye that I should not mind any spelling in it. But I am glad to see the changes it has made. One of the most useful things just now is to break down the respect which a great foolish public has for the established spelling. Some hav a religious awe and some hav an earth-born passion for it. At present I don't much care how anybody spells, so he spells differently from what is established. Any particular individual spelling is more likely to be rational than the ordinary.

From Prof. John W. Draper, of the University of New York, author of "The Conflict Between Science and Religion," "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe."

I am very sensible of the imperfections of our present mode of spelling. No one would more gladly see a change. I am, therefore, greatly gratified with the attempt the Home Journal is making, and hope that it may find abundant success.

From John Greenleaf Whittier, the poet.

I can see no serious objection to the new rules adopted by the Home Journal, which seem to me the beginning of a needed reform.

In England even more than in America has dissatisfaction with the old spelling been developed among the scholars and thinkers. Some of the most distinguished men in the kingdom hav expressed themselves in favor of a reform. The following is from the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Ex-Prime Minister of England.

I often think that if I were a foreigner and had to set about learning English I should go mad. I honestly can say I cannot conceive how it is that he learns to pronounce English, when I take into account the total absence of rule, method, and system, and all the auxiliaries that people usually get when they hav to acquire something difficult of attainment. There is much that may be done with advantage in the reform of the spelling of our language. It is not in my power under present circumstances to offer to giv time to the undertaking which I recommend, and in which I should gladly hav found myself able to join.

Prof. Max Muller, of Oxford University, author of "The Science of Language," says:

An objection often made to spelling reform is that it would utterly destroy the historical or etymological character of the English language. Suppose it did; what then? Language is not made for scholars and etymologists; and if the whole race of English etymologists were really swept away by the introduction of spelling reform, I hope they would be the first to rejoice in sacrificing themselves in so good a cause. But is it really the case that the historical continuity of the English language would be broken by the adoption of phonetic spelling, and that the profession of the etymologist would be gone forever? I say No, most emphatically to both propositions. Because the Italians write filosofo, are they less aware than the English, who write philosopher, that they hav before them the Latin philosophus and the Greek filosofos? If we write f in fancy, why not in phantom? If in frenzy and frantic, why not in phrenology? A language which tolerates vial for phial need not shiver at filosofer. What people call the etymological consciousness of the speaker is strictly a matter of oratorical sentiment only. If anybody will tell me at what date etymological spelling is to begin, whether at A. D. 1560, or at A. D. 1000, or at A. D. 500, I am willing to discuss the question. Till then I beg to say that etymological spelling would play greater havoc in English than phonetic spelling, even if we are to draw a line not more than five hundred years ago.

Sydney Smith on Societies for the Suppression of Vice.

Beginning with the best intentions in the world, such societies must in all probability degenerate into a receptacle for every species of tittle-tattle, impertinence, and malice. Men whose trade is rat-catching love to catch rats; the bug-destroyer seizes on his bug with delight; and the suppressor is gratified by finding his vice. The last soon becomes a mere tradesman like the others; none of them moralize, or lament that their respective evils should exist in the world. The public feeling is swallowed up in the pursuit of a daily occupation, and in the display of a technical skill. Here, then, is a society of men, who invite accusation—who receive it (almost unknown to themselves) with pleasure—and who, if they hate dullness and inoccupation, can hav very little pleasure in the innocence of their fellow-creatures. The natural consequence of all this is, that (besides that portion of rumor which every member contributes at the weekly meeting) their table must be covered with anonymous lies against the characters of individuals. Every servant discharged from his master's service, every villain who hates the man whom he has injured, every cowardly assassin of character, now knows where his accusations will be received, and where they cannot fail to produce some portion of the mischievous effects which he wishes. The very first step of such a society should be to declare, in the plainest manner, that they would never receive any anonymous accusation. This would be the only security to the public that they were not degrading themselves into a receptacle for malice and falsehood. Such a declaration would inspire some species of confidence; and make us believe that their object was neither the love of power, nor the gratification of uncharitable feelings. The Society for the Suppression, however, hav done no such thing. They request, indeed, the signature of the informers whom they invite; but they do not (as they ought) make that signature an indispensable condition.

It is not true, as urged by the Society, that the vices of the poor are carried on in houses of public resort, and those of the rich in their own houses. The society cannot be ignorant of the innumerable gambling-houses resorted to by men of fashion. Is there one they hav suppressed, or attempted to suppress? Can anything be more despicable than such distinctions as these? Those who make them seem to hav for other persons' vices all the rigor of the ancient Puritans—without a particle of their honesty or their courage. To suppose that any society will ever attack the vices of people of fashion is wholly out of the question. If the Society consisted of tradesmen, they would infallibly be turned off by the vicious customers whose pleasures they interrupted; and what gentleman so fond of suppressing as to interfere with the vices of good company, and inform against persons who were really genteel? He knows very well that the consequence of such interference would be a complete exclusion from elegant society; that the upper classes could not and would not endure it; and that he must immediately lose his rank in the world, if his zeal subjected fashionable offenders to the slightest inconvenience from the law. Nothing, therefore, remains, but to rage against the Sunday dinners of the poor, and to prevent a bricklayer's laborer from losing, on the seventh day, that beard which has been augmenting the other six. We see at the head of this society the names of several noblemen, and of other persons moving in the fashionable world. Is it possible they can be ignorant of the innummerable offenses against the law and morality which are committed by their own acquaintances and connections? Is there one single instance where they hav directed the attention of the Society to this higher species of suppression, and sacrificed men of consideration to that zeal for virtue which watches so acutely over the vices of the poor? It would giv us very little pleasure to see a duchess sent to the poultry compter; but if we saw the Society flying at such high game, we should at least say they were honest and courageous, whatever judgment we might form of their good sense. At present they should denominate themselves a Society for suppressing the vices of persons whose income does not exceed £500 per annum; and then, to put all classes upon an equal footing, there must be another society of barbers, butchers, and bakers, to return to the higher classes that moral character, by which they are so highly benefited.

A Good Time in Indiana.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: We are trying to get up a series of grove meetings in Indiana, and want to hold one in every county in the state. And we want every Liberal in the state to aid in getting up these meetings. We will hav from two or three to a dozen speakers at every meeting. We are also going to hold a state Liberal Convention—a mass meeting to last two or three days. We will hav speakers there from other states and we will hav a good time. Now let every Liberal write at once to me and I will confer with the state committee relative to the time and place. It will probably come off in September or October. Where shall it be held? Liberalism is booming. Let us strike while the iron is hot. We can soon walk over the ruins of orthodoxy if we will work.

Richmond, Ind. KERSEY GRAVES.

Liberal League Notes.

DR. E. B. SHATTUCK, of Hornellsville, N. Y., offers the New York State Freethinkers' Association the use of his fine Opera House free of charge if it will hold the next annual convention there.

THE prospects are that the thirty-second annual meeting of the Friends of Human Progress, to be held near Waterloo, N. Y., the 5th and 6th of June, will be a large and interesting gathering of the Liberals of central and western New York.

IT has been surmised that some of the book publishers hav engaged Comstock to aid them in making sales of their books. The dullest publication in the market becomes very popular as soon as it is known that Comstock is "after" it.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., has just organized a live, working auxiliary Liberal League, so that the great Liberal movement now extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Bro. Byron Adonis, I learn, was instrumental in getting up this League. He writes, "The Liberals on the Pacific Coast are heart and soul with the Liberals of the East in this grand movement, and we promise to giv you a 'boom' in that direction."

CONSIDERABLE excitement has been caused in this vicinity recently by the "stepping down and out" of a leading orthodox "divine." For some time past he has been one of the brightest Christian lights in the great orthodox assembly at Fair Point, and was very much troubled last September for fear that Col. Ingersoll and the Liberals generally who assembled there at our Freethinkers' Convention would demoralize the country. It has come out that he has ruined a young and intelligent girl of Jamestown, and has been for some time on intimate terms with his hired girl and others. The next Sunday after the facts were known, bills were posted through the village, suggesting that the reverend gentleman had probably been viewing Comstock's "collection."

Letters from Friends.

DUTTON MANSION
DE WITT, IOWA, May 19, 1880.

MR. AND MRS. BENNETT, Dear Friends: I should hav acknowledged the receipt of your most excellent book ere this. I received it on Wednesday, the 12th instant, about 8 o'clock. Mr. Dutton and myself prize it most highly. It more than met our expectations. As we passed it around the household, they all exclaimed, "Oh, what a nice book!" All the lovers of Mr. Bennett should purchase a copy. Several hav spoken for this book, but they can't hav it. I think we will hav to send for an extra copy to lend. I shall keep the book as long as I liv as a token of remembrance. I prize the picture very much, and, when you hav time, I want you to get it enlarged for me, as I want to hang it by Mr. Bell's and Mr. Pomeroy's.

Mr. Dutton received your letter, and thought that he would not write until you got home.

You acknowledged the receipt of my letter by writing me a most excellent letter, which Mr. Dutton and I prize very highly, and many of your friends hav perused it and remarked that it was a very excellent letter.

As Mr. Dutton read of your release from prison, and the meeting with Mrs. Bennett, the emotion checked his utterance for a time, and I myself thought that I was not of this earth earthy. It was the first time in my life I thought there could be three in one, and I felt as if I was trespassing on the sacred rights of others, but as I had shared with you in your griefs and sorrows, I thought I might join with you in your happiness. I felt doubly repaid for all the battles I hav fought.

The greatest event that passed in Chickering Hall was when Mr. Wakeman led you forward and presented you to your friends. And was there a heart in that vast assemblage that did not swell with inward emotion? Well, I was not with you in person, but I was with you in spirit in Maquokela. We had a jubilee of our own. Mrs. H. S. Lake was speaker. We had a very good house and an attentive audience, which showed their appreciation of her in their frequent applause. Subject, "The Modern Inquisition."

Hav you heard from "Mercury" lately? When we received your letter in January stating that you could not sleep, your head was so bad, I little expected that you would come out of that living hell. I felt for a week that I wanted to go to Albany and put my hands on your head, but thought probably they wouldn't let me see you if I did go.

I am going to hav your letter transferred with ink, and am going to keep it as long as I liv.

I received a letter from W. S. Bell, from Angola. If he gets out as far as Dutton Hill I am going to hav him copy your letter. I hope he will hav calls to lecture in Iowa. He has proved himself to be a most worthy man.

Religiously, I am an Infidel Spiritualist, and Mr. Dutton a Materialistic Liberal, so you will hear from him soon in a more material way.

As you hav got home now, will you please write me a long letter on the subjects treated of in this letter?

I havn't visited the Albany Penitentiary since the 29th of April, and hope that I will never hav to visit it again. I particularly thank those two ladies for their kindness toward you. They did for you what the rest of us ladies could not, because we were not permitted to do so.

You will please accept Mr. Dutton's and my love always.

Fraternally yours, FLORA DUTTON.

EAST SAGINAW, MICH., May 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find one dollar, to continue my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. We need your services to fight for our rights. I hope others are better able to remunerate you than I am. I am glad you are once more free, and I hope free from persecution as well. There is one thing that I cannot fully comprehend. You wrote some letters which you were afterward sorry for. You sent them to one individual. Bundy, Abbot & Co., thought they were very bad letters, so they had thirty thousand copies printed and sent them broadcast over the land. What bothers me is to see where justice comes in. You sent one copy; Bundy and Abbot sent thousands. If it was wrong for you to send one copy, what punishment do Bundy and Abbot deserve for the thousands they distributed? Respectfully yours, L. C. WHITING.

TOM'S RIVER, N. J., May 25, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND OF TRUTH, D. M. BENNETT: I know your heart, as well as body, outward, rejoices in the free enjoyment of nature's blessings, which you so much needed. May angels ever protect and defend the noble man whose devotion to principle has done so much for human emancipation from all that degrades! A spirit said, while controlling Mrs. Bancroft a few months since, that D. M. Bennett's writings and teachings would in the future be looked to as the teacher or Nazarene of the nineteenth century. Blessings attend you! O. N. BANCROFT.

GALION, O., May 23, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I want to write you once more to let you know that I am still a "Liberal," and that you hav my sympathy, as in the past. The meanest trick that was ever served you was the circulating of that scurrilous circular by those infamous scoundrels at your reception. If Underwood had a hand in it, I never want to hear of him again. W. R. DAVIS.

SELBY, ONT., May 16, 1880.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: I beg to congratulate you upon your liberation from an unjust imprisonment. I used to think that the United States was more advanced in freedom than this country and that its citizens enjoyed more liberty, but I hav been compelled to alter this opinion in consequence of late occurrences in that country, chief among them your own farcical trial and unjust sentence and imprisonment. And our celebrated "Napanee Town Hall Case" has recently had its parallel in your country in the case of Mr. Underwood at Irwin's Station. The same musty statutes and obsolete laws and precedents were raked up and used as authoritative in each case.

I hope your health has not been permanently impaired in prison, and that your life may yet be long to fight for mental liberty. It was indeed a hard case for you to be cast in prison among criminals for no offense at all, and it will constitute a permanent blot upon the judiciary and Executive of the country of which you are a citizen.

Soon after your incarceration I took the liberty of writing an earnest and urgent remonstrance to your President, Mr. Hayes, on your behalf, as a citizen of another country. But, like the thousands of other appeals made to that weak functionary, mine also was futile.

Again, I congratulate you upon your release from durance and your reunion with family and friends.

Inclosed find $3, to be applied on the subscription of my friend, Olin Herring, Esq., of Napanee.

Very truly, ALLEN PRINGLE.

ADRIAN, MICH., May 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Friend, and Friend of Truth and the Right: I feel now to rejoice that thou hast been able, physically and mentally, to serve out your allotted time in the Christian bastile, where you were put for no crime but from Christian hate, by Christian knaves and Christian fools, through the help of corrupt administration of the general government. It was my intention to hav met you in Albany and gone with you down to your home in New York, and to hav been one from Michigan to hav taken my seat on the platform by your side, but circumstances prevented me from this pleasure. But as I now hav it in prospect to make my Longwood friends a visit this June, at their yearly meeting in Chester county, Pa., I shall most likely make New York a visit, when I will be most happy to take you by the hand and look you in the face and say, Blessed art thou, when men shall revile you and persecute you for righteousness' sake, even for the legacy that our Revolutionary fathers fought and bled for, in order that we, their children, might be a free people and hav a free government where all should be protected in their natural rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, but which we now find, and hav the demonstrative proof in your own case, that this Christian church is trying to sap its foundation by putting a censor on the freedom of speech, the press, and the mails, and woe to the free men or free women that dare to say that their soul is their own.

Inclosed I send you $1.50 in stamps, $1 of which you will please accept as a donation from L. Tabor, atterney-at-law, and 50 cents put to the credit of N. Delano for THE TRUTH SEEKER for three months. Yours truly,

SAMUEL D. MOORE.

NAPLES May 25, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I inclose $5 for your new books, one of which I hav received. This is the kind of reading the people need. When I first received your little paper I did not think it would create such a stir as it has. The church has been an immense loser by the course it has taken. There is such a thing as going too far, and I think they begin to see it now. The loss to them will be gain to the Liberal cause and yourself. And then it is worth something to find out who your friends are. I cannot find words to express the feelings of gratitude I hav for Mr. Macdonald and those men who took such good care of your business through your severe persecution. Yours respectfully,

J. W. PRICE.

ESCANABA, MICH., May 21, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Although an entire stranger to you, you will allow me to congratulate you upon your release. I am glad that you are permitted once more to preside in person over the pages of that valiant exponent of Freethought, THE TRUTH SEEKER. You are doing a great work, Bro. Bennett—a work that any man may well be proud of.

All belief in a supernatural religion is wrong. It makes men bigots, superstitious, and uncharitable to those of opposite beliefs; it enslaves the mind, and virtually closes the doors to knowledge that would be useful to men.

There is not the slightest evidence of any existence beyond the grave. This world is man's natural home. Here he livs, moves, and does his work, and when death steps on the scene, all is ended.

Christianity cannot make men any better. Water cannot rise higher than the fountain. The doctrine of Jesus runs counter to man's best interest. Jesus damned without reserve all that did not believe in him or the doctrine that he taught, and in this sense Anthony Comstock is a reflection of this mythical Jesus.

Your friends in Escanaba celebrated your release by a grand social party at the residence of J. N. Hillar. Accept our best wishes for your success. Light is breaking. The world moves. Superstition is crumbling. Truth will win.

CALVIN HOWARD.

WILSONVILLE, KY., May 14, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I received a circular marked Boston, headed, "These be Thy Gods O Israel," with a pair of fighting cocks at the top. I suppose you hav heard of these circulars, for no doubt they were sent all over the country. You can hav mine if you want it. They prove this: that you hav some damned mean enemies who are afraid to show themselves. Hoping that the freedom which is now due you may last forever, I close.

Yours in sympathy and fellowship,

SAMUEL B. CLARK.

WHITE ROCK, NEV., May 12, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: The entire Liberal force of White Rock wish, through me, to giv you a hearty welcome home, hoping that your enemies may see the error of their ways and try to do you as much good as they possibly can as a small recompense for the injury they hav done you. Find inclosed $5 for the two volumes of your new work.

I will ask you, as a favor, to note the following in THE TRUTH SEEKER: Liberals of Nevada, attention! I should like to hav the name and address of one live Liberal in sympathy with the aims and objects of the National Liberal League and desirous of assisting the Sub-Committee for the state in the establishment of local auxiliary Leagues in each of the following cities and towns: Alpha, Aurora, Austin, Battle Mountain, Belmont, Carson City, Carlin, Columbia, Cornucopia, Dayton, Deeth, Dun Glen, Eberhardt, Elko, Eureka, Galena, Genoa, Golconda, Gold Hill, Halleck, Hamilton, Mill City, Mineral Hill, Mountain City, Oreana, Palisade, Paradise Valley, Pioche, Reno, Rye Patch, Silver City, Stillwater, Sutro, Tecoma, Toano, Treasure City, Tuscarora, Tybo, Unionville, Verdi, Virginia City, Wadsworth, Ward, Washoe City, Wells, Winnemucca.

Friends, let me hear from you. There is nothing to prevent us having from thirty to forty auxiliary Leagues in this state if we will only work a little. I don't want to see Nevada behind every other state and territory.

Fraternally yours, V. J. BORRETTE.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 9, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND D. M. BENNETT: I hav been waiting to see what the Reception might develop before writing you. Our city papers hav not had one kind word to say of you; in fact, all of them hav done what little they could to convey to the public mind the idea that Chickering Hall was full of obscenity and blasphemy. The democratic paper headed their report, "The Insolence of Filth." Other papers were equally severe.

Mr. Bennett, I hav read the report of the New York Times, and while they speak pleasantly of you, they speak harshly of Hull and Heywood. I hav been talking with Liberals to-day, and all regret very much that anything of this kind should hav taken place at your Reception. We know that you take no stock in the little pamphlet called "Cupid's Yokes," and we had hoped that upon the occasion of your Reception nothing would be said which could in any sense lead the public to believe that you were in sympathy with nastiness in any degree. Those who are acquainted with you of course realize how impossible it was for you to know what might be said by certain speakers; and, knowing this, could not possibly blame you. You hav played an important part in history, and it is barely possible your name will yet outshine all your calumniators.

In defending you at our Farmers' Club the past winter, I made myself a little unpopular; and now that our city press all hit you so hard (or your Reception), I shall expect to have the matter touched upon often. I hav confidence in you, and you shall hav my full sympathy, come what may. Go on in the noble work. Let it be manly and gentle manly, and, above all, let us be truly charitable. Let us not forget that our dispositions are all different—that while we are Liberals others may be bigots from the fact that they can't be anything else.

Your Reception has demonstrated to all who were in doubt that you represent the views of a large body of the people, and that Comstockism is to be tolerated but a little longer. Doubtless all the suffering of imprisonment and persecution which you hav endured has been repaid in this grand Reception tendered you, and believe your persecutors (save Comstock himself) are heartily tired of it, and from this on you will not be molested.

Hoping you may enjoy health and prosperity in the full measure you so richly deserve, I am with you in all that is upright and manly in humanity. With best wishes,

IRVING C. TERRY.

MOLINE, ILL., May 29, 1880.

FRIEND D. M. BENNETT: Allow one of the aged (born in 1805) and humblest of your friends to add a mite to the flow of congratulations passing upon our captain on his gaining his liberty from unjust bondage. It givs assurance of many years to come of active warfare upon the mercenary, venal, confederate frauds that mislead the benighted hosts of superatition, likewise giving good hope that the cause of full and perfect freedom of thought, word, and deed will advance under proper caution. Having been pretty thoroughly ingrafted with Paine philosophy over fifty years ago, the senseless human excitement about superstition's unknowable future hav for years been looked upon by me with a sort of apathetic indifference.

I would express great satisfaction that so grand an array of able friends celebrated your Reception. Difficulties and want of means prevented my being one of the glad throng.

It strikes me sadly that there are some noted Liberals who either coldly stand back, or else, worse, forgetting the rule, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone," cruelly dart some uncharitable shaft, regardless that "To err is human; to forgive divine." F. PECK.

PATERSON, N. J., May 29 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: THE TRUTH SEEKER just arrived. In running over it my eye caught the heading, "Representation at Brussels," and want to say that I am most decidedly in favor of the Liberals of this country being represented there by at least three or four representatives; and if no one else contributes, our one hundred and ninety Liberal Leagues will neglect an important duty if they fail to send delegates to the International Congress of Freethinkers, to be held in Brussels in August next. I shall contribute one dollar toward defraying the necessary expenses. I presume that if each member would subscribe fifty or twenty-five cents each, there would be ample funds for the occasion.

I am in favor of the following for representatives: Yourself, for one. I think that you are well qualified, and the trip would, in my judgment, be highly beneficial to you in many ways. Next, Augusta C. Bristol, as I am most decidedly in favor of the fair sex being represented there, and I can think of no one in our ranks who is so well equipped as she, or who could do us or herself more credit. If her health will permit it, we should send her by all means. H. L. Green is my next choice, and Mr. A. L. Rawson fourth. If we could send all, and we ought to, this would be a splendid quartette. Now let the subscriptions flow in without delay, so that whoever goes will hav time to prepare for the journey. Sincerely yours, JOHN WARR.

LA CROSSE, WIS., May 22, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT: I hav just received the first volume of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" with thanks, and I inclose you a draft for six dollars which will pay for the two volumes—this one and the second one when out. I am so busy with the garden that I hav not had much time to look it over, but what I hav seen of it is a good deal better than I anticipated. The extra dollar is to pay for the twelve extra TRUTH SEEKERS I hav had and for the balance you can send a few extra papers with my article on "Obscenity" when published.

Now, Bro. Bennett, I hope you will excuse me for not writing to you when in the penitentiary, as others hav done for I felt so indignant at the proceedings of the Christian devils that I could not use words strong enough to express my pent up feelings. I hope you will liv long enough to pay them for it, principal and interest.

Your friend and well-wisher, J. PETTY.

VINTON, May 25, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: How we rejoice to know, Bro. Bennett, that you are once more safe at home with wife and friends, and that you didn't break down under the love the Christians hav for their enemies. Oh, what a benign set they are. What little good there is in their holy book they never practice, in fact, it's a dead letter so far as they are concerned, for they ignore them. Ever your friend,

M. BRANIN.

LEIPSIC, OHIO, May 19, 1880.

BROTHER BENNETT: I am glad you are free and at home again, and hope you may never be molested any more.

When the Republican and the Democratic parties hav made their nominations of candidates for president, let an effort be made by a committee of prominent Liberals to ascertain of both candidates whether they are in favor of protecting us from unjust arrest and imprisonment and persecution by prosecution. The one that will giv us solemn assurances that we Liberals, under his administration of the government, shall hav our legal and constitutional rights equal with the Christians, is the candidate we should support at the presidential election. If neither will giv us such assurances, let the Liberals of the United States as semble in convention, nominate a Liberal ticket, and make a vigorous campaign. I would like to see the question agitated. W. E. WOODELL.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav just finished reading in THE TRUTH SEEKER of your reception. It truly givs me pleasure to read the pages of your paper, and I only wish it was in my power to take it and pay you, but it is impossible for me to do so, as I am a poor widow with ill health. There is but one copy of this paper taken here, and the person who takes it is a noble woman. She lends her paper to me and to others besides. I should like much to take it myself, and if you feel that you can send it to me, when I hav any money to spare I will giv my word and honor as an honest woman—as I am—that I will send it to you.

If you do not feel that you can do so, I shall entertain the same respect for you that I now do.

You well know that in certain quarters THE TRUTH SEEKER is not popular. I am so situated that I know some of my friends who hav influence and money would read it.

I bid you good speed. Yours for truth and right,
N. E. C. N. MOSES.

[We will send you the paper.—ED. T. S.]

NEW EXCELSIOR, KAN., May 13, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your "Gods and Religions," for which I subscribed some time ago, came all right by last Tuesday's mail. When I subscribed for it I felt (notwithstanding I am a poor man) like doing something that might serve to encourage you a little while you were in prison. At that time I didn't think I could afford to invest five dollars in a work of the kind. If you had in the start announced the fact that five dollars would be the price for the two volumes, it is likely that I would not hav been in possession of either one to-day. I am very thankful that things hav turned out as they hav. I hav got the book, and I like it. It does me good to point to that picture in the front of the book, and say to my friends that he is the Thomas Paine of the age. Put me down for the other volume. I must hav it. Yours, W. H. PAYN.

AUBURN, N. Y., May 17, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find post-office order for $5 payable to you, for which please send to H. B. Day, 94 Clark street, Auburn, N. Y., first and second volume of the "Gods and Religions," etc. Possibly I may not be correct in naming the books, as I hav no paper or anything to inform me; but one of the books, I understand, is "just out," like its author, and the other volume will be forthcoming soon. You will probably understand what is wanted.

In closing, allow me, even at this late date, to congratulate you on your discharge from prison. Shortly after you went to Albany I wrote the authorities for permission to visit you in prison. My request was denied, hence no visit from Harter.

I send you by mail to-day a copy of Mrs. Harter's poems and also one of her Liberal songs, which you may use as you see fit.

Success to you in every good word and work. I hope soon to see you face to face. I am still a Spiritualist, and I hope you will, ere long, obtain more evidence so as also to believe in continued existence. This dim. infant sphere of earth life is all too short to sufficiently "flax out" such fellows as Comstock & Co. I demand a continued life.

Yours truly, J. H. HARTER.

GALT, ONT., May 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Allow me to congratulate you on your restoration to liberty. May you during the remainder of your life be blessed with all those means by which happiness is obtained. I think that not only are the Freethinkers of the United States and Canada, etc., indebted to you for your labors for the cause of man in the printing and dissemination of useful and important knowledge, etc., but the both nations are also under lasting obligations to you, you who hav suffered martyrdom for them, and not only for them, but also for their progeny. Again receive my congratulations and best wishes.

I hav been astonished and annoyed to hear of the position taken by Mr. Underwood by lending his powers to Abbot, Ellis, Comstock, etc., to crush you and your business, and thus be instrumental in rendering you and yours unhappy. I think your enemies took a position only worthy of cowards—the issuing of insinuations, slanders, and lies against one, at a time when the one against whom the attack was hurled had not an opportunity of disproving such an unmerited attack.

When the second volume of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" is ready, forward it, together with volume first, and one or two volumes of "Comstock's Life," to me. Send at the same time the amount of the bill and I will send you the sum by return of post. I hav a copy of "Comstock's Life" in your "Champions of the Church," but as that work is too voluminous for circulation, I want a life of that gentleman in a form that is suitable to hand to my Christian friends, in order to show them the character of the man whom their God chooses as his special agent. I am yours fraternally, JOS. BROWN.

ALLEGANY CITY, N. Y., May 18, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav just laid aside the "Ancient Gods" to drop you a line and a dollar, last instalment on Vol. I, which I find one of the most interesting books I hav ever had the pleasure of reading.

In my first note to Mr. Macdonald I inquired about terms to canvassers. I take this opportunity to recall that question and to say that I will procure as many subscribers as possible without any commission, as I do not think you can giv any at the present price. Hope to be able to send you some names soon. Send on the other volume as soon as ready; will send you the money before or as soon as the book comes.

The Liberals are with you, so don't waste any more of your few remaining days and valuable space in THE TRUTH SEEKER for the purpose of replying to the Index or R.-P. jealousy. Treat them with supreme contempt.

Yours truly, JAS. D. CRAFFT.

LYNDON, KAN., May 11, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: We are heartily glad you are again home and feel that you are a free man and now in your right place. My husband went for THE TRUTH SEEKER as soon as the hack came. We wanted to hear from you, and words cannot express our joy at reading your letter and knowing you were home and well. We are so poor or we would hav telegraphed right away. We hav been trying to save all we could spare at all to send for our paper this year, and also those books; we are anxiously waiting to see them. I want to see how an honest man looks in a prison garb. My husband wants to write to you; he dearly loves you; he gets so little time to write, as he works from early morn until late at night, he is so tired he can't sit up to read when night comes, so we go to bed and he reads aloud, so I, too, can enjoy THE TRUTH SEEKER. Then I must tell you our little DeRobigne Mortimer Bennett Pert (we giv him the whole name) takes our attention. Everybody that sees him says, What a bright boy! and we do hope you can see him this fall. You shall hav his photograph when we get them, and our greatest desire is that he will make as honest and noble a man as the one he is named after. We would love to hav been at your reception, but the working man gets such low wages in Kansas that our means are scarce. We came here poor, and cannot get enough ahead to get away. DeRobigne has awakened, so I will hav to say good-bye for this time. With love to you and wife, we remain your true friends,

J. M. AND R. A. PERT.

FROSTBURG, MD., May 24, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT Dear Sir: We like THE TRUTH SEEKER very much. Were sorry we did not get the paper giving the account of the reception on the 2d of May, but I see by your last paper that other subscribers were served the same trick, and a pretty piece of business it is. So much for our glorious Republican party. But work on, friend Bennett; you hav done nobly. Work on, and we shall see.

Very respectfully, GEO. H. HOCKING.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 22, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav not heretofore since your release sent my congratulations. I did not think it necessary. I well knew you would be overwhelmed with them without mine, as you deserved. Mine are due, nevertheless, as well as those of every lover of truth, freedom, and justice in the land, and are gladly tendered with the earnest hope that the enemies of progress will see the futility of persecution, and that you may be the last Galileo of history. You are not in the slightest degree disgraced, but the President is, and your prosecutors and persecutors are rendered infamous. Ever yours for truth and progress,

ALMOND OWEN.

MANTENO, ILL., May 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Allow me to congratulate you that your liberty is restored to you; that the Liberals all over the nation hav honored you with such a grand and well-deserved reception; that your health was maintained while in the hands of the Inquisition; that we hav our captain on board THE TRUTH SEEKER again; that the wrong done to you has served to awaken and agitate thought on the questions of such vital interest to humanity, and that now you'll be able to lead the Liberal hosts to victory, and that you may liv to represent the Liberals in the American Congress, where you will hav the pleasure of seeing the Comstock laws and all others enacted by orthodox bigotry expunged from the statute books of the nation.

I did not write you while in prison, being personally a stranger, but sent up some hundreds of names to the petition, procured subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and wrote to the President in your behalf in the early part of your imprisonment, and my sympathies were with you every day and hour of your confinement, and now I feel like saying, Rejoice, for the day is dawning, and the words of McKay come into my mouth,

"Ever the right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."

Your old personal friend, who lived near me, passed away while you were in prison. I refer to Wm. J. Dennis. I think the 18th of February.

With my best wishes that your health, wealth, and subscribers may increase ad infinitum,

I am, very truly, yours, O. W. BARNARD.

HORTON, MICH, May 17, 1880.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: I am some like the poor fellow that only arrived at the eleventh hour, and also the widow of olden times. I hav arrived late and only hav my mite to giv, yet I expect a blessing. Please find inclosed $1 cash for two trial subscribers. If your edition of May 8th is yet plentiful please send me one, for some Christian cuss, I fear, has stolen it; at least, I hav never received it. Well, I am glad if he only reads it. Perhaps one stray seed may fall where it can take root and bear him an hundredfold of truth.

I wish I could hav been in New York on the 2d inst., to take you by the hand and welcome you out of hell and back to your old post as general-in-chief of the regiment of sharpshooters in the already great army of Liberals. I think I can, in a small degree perhaps, appreciate some of your sufferings during your trial and imprisonment, for I am past three-score years.

There is a species of Liberalism here that is quite prevalent, and I still hope to see a League in this place, but the willing ones, like myself, are poor. But I am proud to call all Liberals my friends, and my work will be always for the truth and the right, as it has been for many years past.

Hoping for the success of the cause, permit me to write myself, Your friend, ISAAC SNYDER, M.D.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Upon a proposition recommended by the Committee of the District of Columbia, Mr. Henry S. Neal, of Ohio, said, a few days ago, in the House of Representatives: We hav exempted from taxation all property actually used for religious purposes, but inasmuch as the churches of this district own a great deal of property not used for religious purposes, we recommend the same to be taxed as any other property.

Mr. W. M. Springer, of Illinois, the same man who, as Chairman of the Committee on Elections but recently in the Washburn-Donnelly case, showed that it is better to take than to giv, offered an amendment to exempt all property owned and controlled by churches from taxation, which was adopted. I saw Judge Neal immediately afterwards, and asked him why his proposition, coming, as it did, from the Committee, was not adopted, when this is almost universally the case? He said, I could point out the church who defeated this matter.

Upon the proposition from the same Committee that children be compelled by law in this district to attend some school twelve weeks in the year (which has been the law here for years), Mr. Singleton, another Illinois worthy, objected seriously, being opposed to compulsory education. The matter was up at nights, when there were not so many present, and was only readopted because the Republicans happened to be in the majority.

J. H. Acklen, from Louisiana, who, from the report of S. S. Cox, did falsely and intentionally smuggle into the House a report purporting to be a report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which he was not a member, and which had not been authorized, is about to be exonerated from the charges submitted to the Judiciary Committee upon the ground that he had no dishonest motives. If he had not, why and for what purpose did he submit a false report?

In the Senate, Mr. Masey, from Texas, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, brought in a proposition to authorize the President to put upon the retired list all non-commissioned officers who, after thirty years' service, leave the army, on seventy-five per cent of their regular salary for life. The reason he givs for it is to put them on an equal footing with the commissioned officers, of which there are already four hundred upon the list, receiving about three-quarter million of dollars per year for life. Senator Beck correctly said it is simply an attempt to provide for a man in middle age (48 years) a life-pension to leave the service, engage in some other profitable occupation where there is no danger, making room for others in the army. It is to enlarge the support of a favored aristocratic class at the expense of the people. ISAAC COHEN.

WILLAMETTE, OR., April 19, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I send you by post money order $3, to pay my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER—the most intelligent paper in the world. I am a German, and consequently not very well at home in the English language.

Liberalism hasn't made much noise in this valley, yet the German population are the leading Freethinkers of this part of the Pacific Coast. Thomas Paine, Strauss, Voltaire, Hume, Humboldt, and hundreds of others of the grandest men that ever walked this terrestrial ball, are, by the multitude of this valley, only known by the name, because the good priest condemns them. I never heard a single candid man who had read the works of these or other great Infidels condemn them. Those who do are always men who don't know any more about these great lights and their works than an ass knows about astronomy.

"Webfooters" are in the tight grasp of the "black coats" yet, and they are only too anxious to augment the number of their stupidity-perpetuating institutions which they call churches. Heinrich Heine said rightly of those church-going people, in answer to a friend who had drawn his attention to the sound of the bells of a neighboring church:

"Aye, my friend, those are the bells
Of the oxen, of the cows,
Who, with bended heads, are moving
Towards their murky stalls."

I only wish I could liv long enough to take part in the work of tearing down those seats of ignorance and prejudice and erect schoolhouses. The millions that the beguiling clergy are swallowing at the present could be profitably used in establishing better teachers and seminaries, so that our pedagogy would be represented by instructors worthy of this country instead of our half-deranged schoolmarms. The clergy here monopolize the school superintending, therefore we find enough pretty schoolmarms, but their upper story wouldn't even pass a primary examination before an impartial judge. Liberals must make the improvement of our schools their point of view. When every scholar will become a mathematician and feel himself at home in natural history, the temples of mythology of the pseudo-Christians will go like chaff before the wind. But what will we do for moral instruction if the church and Bible is taken away from us? This is what Christians hav asked me on several occasions. Poor deluded human beings, looking at the depravity of their hypocritical priesthoood for moral instruction! How many of those priests, Catholic or Protestant, dare show their true colors? Every week one of those pious Joes givs us the proof that Freelove is a part of their creed. Can Christians point out such cancer-planters among the leaders of Liberalism? I defy the whole of Christendom to do it.

What amount of moral teaching is stored away in the Bible? It could all be written on one sheet of note paper. The bibles of the Hindoos, Persians, etc., furnish better moral doctrines—at least more rational—than the Christian Bible. The moral laws given by Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, and our Grecian philosophers are far superior to Jesus, yet these prejudiced Christians believe they are going to tell the Chinese, Hindoos, and others something new when they chatter to them about their crucified Savior and his teachings, not knowing that those Asiatic races were blessed with their crucified saviors and divine incarnations long before Christ. They don't know that the Chinese and the Persians read those moral laws the Christians are so proud of thousands of years before Christ in the original.

The writings of that cunning priest, Ezra, in the Old Testament, and the fraudulent writings of Origen, Sebastian, Augustine, and all the rest of that army of impostors, which are held in such high esteem by the Christians, will not be touched by a real moral man with bare hand. I, at least, always put on gloves, for fear my hands might get soiled by all the bloody crimes the book tells of. No wonder that the crimes the Bible tells us of are repeated in this Christian world daily. As Christians are compelled to believe in the Bible, they consequently are animated to imitate the examples their holy book givs them.

Right here, in this great church-going country, where every town of five or six hundred inhabitants hav from six to eight church steeples reaching out into the air for mercy, not a single session of the circuit court in either county of this valley will pass by without half a dozen divorce, rape, or seduction cases. This is what Christians call morality.

The city of Berlin, Prussia, for instance, with a population of over a million, had, when I left, forty-three churches—one church for every twenty-five thousand inhabitants, yet such crimes as seduction, rape, etc., are unknown in that city, yet everybody drinks in Berlin. An American traveler assures us he never saw a drunken man on the streets of Berlin. How does the moral example of Berlin speak for Infidelity?

Every one-horse town in Oregon has a blue-ribbon club, still they swarm with drunken men. The young men who are members of those clubs wear the blue ribbon "to catch the girls," and the older ones because they hav become accustomed to hypocrisy. It is common to see our heads of families go to the drug store to get the "vinegar jug" of the old woman's filled.

We also enjoy here that curse of the country—the Young Men's Christian Association. If Freethought and Liberalism of the day wouldn't prevent those Protestant Jesuits, we would hav the Inquisition in no time. I think that wretch, Comstock, the Protestant Inquisitor-General, would enjoy nothing better than to apply the fire-brand to the pyre of Mr. Bennett. Yours, FIZNER.

Herod and Mariamne.

BY ALHAZA.

"Herod, my love is free, wild as an evening zephyr.
Thy noblest thoughts, were my deep passion's rule
But the pale victim of thy darkest hour,
Must fly from death, and black corruption's pool."

'Woman, my love is not like gorgeous dreaming,
One fatal glance, and I was chained to thee.
Though the earth opened, I would clasp thee closer;
Nor heaven nor hell could tear thy form from me.

Love is the charm of life; its glorious blooming
From demons foul thy smile alone can save;
And the sweet spell that drives away all danger
Shall hold me still, within the silent grave.

If I must fall 'mid battle's roar and carnage,
Would not thy woman's love still closer cling?
Say, couldst thou hold another to thy bosom,
And leave my corpse a sad deserted thing?

Shrink not, adored one; I must be thy heaven;
My heart thy altar, where thy love shall glow;
For I would hunt thy shade through fiery torture,
Or haunted caves where demons lurk below.

I am a god. Death's starry gleaming angel
Shall lure the lightning from its wonted way.
Shall rend thy spirit from thy snowy bosom.
And thou be goddess of the realms of day.

Yet 'tis an earthly spell that gives me power,
As o'er the plain the maddened lion roves,
My rage is tenderness, my heart is burning;
The jealous, trembling bosom never loved."

"Herod, I faint! Behold yon silvery spirit!
He hides thy brow! With fond bewitching glee,
He seeks thy heart with sharp glittering dagger,
But soft, impassioned looks he casts on me.

He will not strike! O Herod, I hav loved thee;
But hav not strength to mount thy funeral pyre.
Oh, take this lovely spirit for thy minion,
And he will gently soothe thy bosom's ire."

"False woman, die! I am the great Messiah;
But fondly thou to traitor arms would fly.
Thy rosy blood shall cool my madness never;
For Mariamne's love I lived and die!"

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 206pp. Price $1.

The author's conception of a possible future life on this earth is really eloquent and beautiful, and will enlist attention. A curiosity to see what a philanthropic business man has to say upon the social problem, from a poor man's standpoint, will doubtless alone induce many to buy the book. The bold and trenchant blows which he deals "Society" in all its ramifications of corruption and inhumanity; his earnest and manly plea for the social regeneration of the lower classes—will, unless we are much mistaken, make the book the best-abused and best-liked production of the day by these two classes respectively.—Critical Review.

The Best on this Theme Yet.

"AN ESSAY ON THE BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION."

By Augustus R. Grote, A.M.

The Boston Commonwealth says: It is a rationalistic examination of the scripture account, with a conclusion that the literal teaching of the theory is injurious to the mind, as it proves an impediment to intellectual advancement.

The Boston Traveler says: He has given a clear, yet condensed, criticism from the literary and scientific points of view. An eloquent and forcible protest against the tyranny of dogma. He endeavors to show that all efforts to reconcile science with a literal interpretation of the account of Genesis must only end in confusion.

The Popular Science Monthly says: The discrepancies between the two accounts are very fully indicated, and the different points of view from which they were written explained. . . . Interesting chapters follow on the myths of the old world, which resemble those of Genesis. . . The book is characterized by directness of argument, and the best material has been diligently used. . . . The archæologist and philologist will find many new points in the book, which is noteworthy for its additions to science as well as for its distinctive literary merits. Paper 40 cents. For sale by

STANDARD WORKS.

Published by D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. By D. M. BENNETT, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Octavo; second edition; enlarged and revised. Being the biographies and important doctrines of the most distinguished teachers, philosophers, reformers, innovators, founders of new schools of thought and religion, disbelievers in current theology, and the deepest thinkers and most active humanitarians of the world, from Menu down through the succeeding three thousand years to our own time. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church: Their Crimes and Persecutions. By D. M. BENNETT. Biographical sketches of eminent Christians, from the time of the reputed founder of Christianity to the present. A companion book to "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers." Containing a correct history of the distinguished ornaments and diabolical characters of the church. A full account is given of the bloody wars which Christianity has inhumanly waged to spread its rule. It also gives a history of Jesuitism for three centuries. The whole is based upon Christian authorities. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of Lord John Russell, who was twice Premier of England. Complete, from the London edition. This remarkable work has attracted unusual attention in England. It is the work of a brilliant young lord of Christian parents, who was brought up in the Christian faith, but who, upon investigation and reflection, became a decided unbeliever; the result of which is the elaborate work here named, the preparation of which occupied him several years. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine, Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Contains Life of Paine; his theological writings—the Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams, Letter to Camille Jordan, Of the Religion of Deism; his political Writings—Common Sense, The Crisis (Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive), and The Right of Man. All in one octavo volume, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt, $4.50.

Supernatural Religion: An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Decidedly the ablest work in this line ever published. Probably no work printed in England excited greater interest than this. It was issued anonymously, and the great inquiry was, "Who is the author?" It is most damaging to the claims of Christianity, and its positions and statements have never been refuted by the clergy. It is very scholarly, and enters into the examination of the original Greek in detail and with great exactness. Three 8vo volumes in one, revised and corrected, and accurately reproduced from the latest London edition, which sells at $15.00. The London Times, in speaking of this great work, uses this language: "No book published in the world, at any time or in any age, has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition, than any other book." Published complete in a volume of 1,000 pages, with a full index, at the following low prices: Cloth, $4; leather, $5; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or, Physiognomy Illustrated. Being the moral and volitive dispositions of mankind as manifested in the human form and countenance. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. This work is the fruit of twenty years' diligent observation of nature, and presents a new and complete analysis and classification of the powers of the human mind and body, together with the physiognomical signs by which every faculty is disclosed. In one volume of 650 8vo pp.; illustrated by 260 cuts. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

Paine's Theological Works. In one volume, comprising Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Eskine, Essay on Dreams, Of the Religion of Deism, etc., with a Life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Political Works. In one volume, comprising Common Sense, The Crisis (Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive), The Rights of Man, and Life of Paine, with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

CONCERNING

Christ and Christianity.

"This volume gives us mountains of evidence that the Christ of the Bible was never born, never crucified, never died. . . . It contains more deep researches into the far back pages of antiquity than any volume I ever read ANTICHRIST proves from history that James Kepha (Cephas, alias Peter), and Paul, all lived before the Christian era, and so did Jesus Christ—indeed, many Christs and many by the name of Jesus. . . Were not the eye itself a sun, no sun for it could ever shine;
By nothing noble could the heart be won, were not the heart divine. —Goethe.

"What is the best remedy for an inattentive audience?" a preacher asked. The reply was: "Giv them something to attend to. Hungry sheep will look up to the rack if there is any hay in it."

The more we read of the history of past ages, the more we observe the signs of our own times, the more do we feel our hearts filled and swelled up by a hope for the future destinies of the human race.—Macaulay.

Truly a thinking man is the worst enemy the Prince of Darkness can hav; every time such a one announces himself I doubt not there runs a shudder through the nether empire, and new emissaries are trained, with new tactics, to, if possible, trap him and hoodwink and handcuff him.—Carlyle.

It argues a narrow and corrupt nature to lose sight of the general and lasting consequences of rare and virtuous energy in the brief accidents which accompany its first movements—to set lightly by the emancipation of human reason from a legion of devils, in our complaints and lamentations over the loss of a herd of swine.—Coleridge.

I hav no respect for that philosophy which ascribes all the world's follies or misbeliefs to the inventive genius of bad men, either in church or state. Priests did not invent religion: they did not fashion gods out of pure air; out of wanton ambition and lust of power they hav not constructed our enslaving theologies. —S. H. Morse.

Both Charles himself and his creature Laud while they abjured the innocent badges of popery, retained all its worst vices—a compete subjection of reason to authority, a weak preference of form to substance, a childish passion for mummeries, an idolatrous veneration for the priestly character, and above all merciless intolerance.—Macaulay.

Heretics must all be daft.
They dinna think as we dae;
Heretics mun all be blind.
They dinna see as we see.
In matters holy and divine
Inquiry's out of season;
Since faith is all the Lord demands,
It's foolishness to reason. —Burns.

Conscience is not to be followed because we consider it useful or conducive to our own happiness. Suppose we were transferred to some outpost of creation, where fiends reigned and where we could only be comfortable and happy by submitting to their wills and executing their behests, to rebel and bear the consequences would be nobler than to obey and liv.—Anon.

The fear o' hell's a hangman's whip.
To hold the wretch in order;
But where ye feel your honor grip,
Let that aye be your border;
Its slightest touches, instant pause.
Debar all side pretenses;
And resolutely keep its laws,
Uncaring consequences. —Burns.

For the structure that we raise,
Time is with materials filled;
Our to-days and yesterdays
Are the blocks with which we build.

Build to-day, then, strong and sure,
With a firm and ample base;
And ascending and secure
Shall to-morrow find its place,
—Longfellow.

Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or hav learned aught else, the least,
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!
What recks it them? what need they? they are sped;
And when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up and are not fed,
But swollen with wind and the rank mist they draw,
Rot inwardly and foul contagion spread.
—Milton.

Because a thing has objectionable features in it is no reason for its condemnation, but we should rather foster its good tendencies and work zealously for the elimination of the evil ones. We should not decry marriage, but seek to purify, ennoble, and elevate men and women so that they will love and practice the true and good in marriage and out of it. Teach them not from the false standpoint of imaginary good to be won hereafter, but from the sound foundation of here and now. Love, human, earthly, mortal, "dying" love, is the world's greatest boon. For this kingdoms hav been lost and won, and all man holds dear beside has been only too gladly sacrificed, and always will be.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

A Western paper publishes births, marriages, and deaths under the heading: "Hatched, Matched, Dispatched." It would take less type to say: Bred, Wed, Dead.

Eccentric old lawyer to new footman: "Now then, Patrick, call me a cab." Pat, who thinks this a dodge to try his sincerity: "Och, no, yer honor; it's not meself that'll be callin' ye names at all."

Thief before the severe judge: "What a disgrace! Are you not ashamed, an old man like you, to be brought here accused of theft?" "Pardon me, your honor; do not upbraid me undeservedly. I began stealing when I was very young."

"You will observe from this word pater," said a schoolmaster to his pupil, "the great flexibility of the Latin language. Pater is a father; and here we hav patruus, an uncle. Is there any way you can change father into uncle in English?" "I don't think of any," replied the pupil, "unless you get him to marry your aunt."

"Toctor, I feel sig all ofer, und de beebles dell me I petter dake your fissicks." Chemist: "All right, sir. Will you take a dose of salts or some pills?" "Vell, vat it costs for saulds?" "Three pence, sir." "Und how mooch for dem bills?" "I'll giv you a dose for the same price." "Toctor, you doud got no second-hand fisicking bills, ain't you?"

A jeweler hung a watch in his window and labeled it: "Look at this watch for ten dollars;" and the unsophisticated gentleman from Africa, who stared at the article, and then went in and wanted the ten dollars, had to get down on the floor with the jeweler, and roll over and under him a number of times, before he could be made to understand that he could not hav any ten dollars for looking at the watch.

"Gem'len," said the old man as he got his legs under him, "a pusson who labors under de ideah dat he am foolin' de world will sooner or later git de grand laff. A pusson can deceive de public for a few days or a few weeks, but as soon as de fraud am exposed he am a gone coon. You may stand yer hats ober on yer ears, hang out yer brass watch chains, an' puff away at yer cheap cigars, but de majority of men will see right frew you like a buzz saw choppin' up cheese. What we am we am, an' let us b'ar in mind de solemn fack dat while skim milk has its value an' its uses, it won't make ice cream nor deceive de babies."

The other day a lady, accompanied by her son, a very small boy, boarded a train at Little Rock. The woman had a careworn expression hanging over her face like a tattered veil, and many of the rapid questions asked by the boy were answered by unconscious sighs.

"Ma," said the boy, "that man's like a baby, ain't he?" pointing to a bald-headed man sitting just in front of them.

"Hush."

"Why must I hush?"

After a moment's silence: "Ma, what the matter with that man's head?"

"Hush, I tell you. He's bald."

"What's bald?"

"His head hasn't got any hair on it?"

"Did it come off?"

"I guess so."

"Will mine come off?"

"Sometime, maybe."

"Then I'll be bald, won't I?"

"Yes."

"Will you dare?"

"Don't ask so many questions."

After another silence the boy exclaimed: "Ma, look at that fly on that man's head."

"If you don't hush I'll whip you when we get home."

"Look! There's another fly. Look at 'em fight; look at 'em!"

"Madam," said the man, putting aside a newspaper and looking around, "what's the matter with that young hyena?"

The woman blushed, stammered out something, and attempted to smooth back the boy's hair.

"One fly, two flies, three flies," said the boy innocently, following with his eyes a basket of oranges carried by the newsboy.

"Here, you young hedge-hog," said the bald-headed man. "If you don't hush, I'll hav the conductor put you off the train."

The poor woman not knowing what else to do boxed the boy's ears and then gave him an orange to keep him from crying.

"Ma, hav I got red marks on my head?"

"I'll slap you again, if you don't hush."

"Mister," said the boy, after a short silence, "does it hurt to be bald-headed?"

"Youngster," said the man, "if you'll keep quiet I'll giv you a quarter."

The boy promised, and the money was paid over.

The man took up his paper and resumed his reading.

"This is my bald-headed money," said the boy. "When I get bald-headed I'm going to giv boys money. Mister, hav all bald-headed men got money?"

The annoyed man threw down the paper, arose and exclaimed: "Madam, hereafter when you travel leave that young gorilla at home. Hitherto I always thought that the old prophet was very cruel for calling the she-bears to kill children for making sport of his head, but now I am forced to believe he did a Christian act. If your boy had been there he would hav died first. If I can't get another seat on this train I'll ride on the cow-catcher rather than remain here."

"The bald-headed man is gone," said the boy, and the woman leaned back and blew a tired sigh from her lips.

Notes and Clippings.

MR. BEECHER discoursed on "Sincerity" on Sunday. Now let Mr. Talmage discourse on 'Modesty," and then let Barnum engage them both.

JEWS, Mussulmans, and Christians now liv in harmony in Palestine, and a non-Mussulman seldom suffers in any respect on account of his creed. The lion and the lamb lie down together.

AT THE BREAKFAST TABLE.—"Guess I'll take some more steak, as I hav to preach." "Guess I'll brace up a little, too," replied Jenvey, passing his plate for another section of meat; "I've got to listen."

A VASSAR College girl read a paper to prove that Phthologuyrrh spelled Turner. Her argument was that phth, as in phthisic, is T; olo, as in colonel, is ur; gn, as in gnat, is n; yrrh, as in myrrh, is er.

GARIBALDI, who is in excellent health, is at present repairing and enlarging his house on the island of Caprera. The enlargement is made in view of his recent marriage with the nurse of his children.

THE daily Truth would like to know whether the "trifling" difference between the religion of Hall, Beecher & Co. and that founded by the homeless Nazarene has really anything to do with the "alarming spread of Infidelity."

THE Rev. James M. Mason was sentenced in Floyd county, Virginia, to hav eleven lashes applied to his back and to be confined in the county jail until a fine of $26.88 is paid. His crime was obtaining goods under false pretenses.

Truth has a column of "What Truth would like to see." Here is a sample: Bob Ingersoll preach in Trinity church, and Dr. Dix lecture in a theater on Sunday evening. John Kelly dead, figurativly, Anthony Comstock, actually.

A DEMURE, diminutiv girl, aged eighteen, is under arrest in Philadelphia for bigamy. She has three living husbands, all of whom she has married within two years. When asked why she had done this, she said: "They were all good fellows, and they coaxed me so."

THE Rev. Mr. Bowden of the Reformed Presbyterian church, has been having, and is still, a serious quarrel, both in the civil and ecclesiastical courts, with his church brethren on matters spiritual. Great bitterness of feeling has been engendered. How these good saints do love one another, to be sure!

THERE is a man at Luray, Virginia, who became convinced, when young, that kissing was wicked, because Christ was betrayed with a kiss. He resolved never to kiss anybody. He has been married twenty years, and is the father of eleven children, but has never kissed his wife or one of his offspring.

SOME bounds should be prescribed for the action of Mr. Comstock as a public censor of literary fiction. His functions seem to be so ill-defined that it is impossible to hav them clearly designated. He is proceeding to extremities which may involve the necessity of suppressing the suppressor.—News.

THE Rev. James M. Sherwood, publisher of the Presbyterian Quarterly and Princeton Review, has been defeated in a suit brought by his daughter-in-law, Mahalia C. Sherwood. He is charged with breach of trust and peculation in conducting the business of his deceased son, by which the widow was deeply injured.

THE Rev. George B. Young, pastor of the Ray Methodist Episcopal church, Indianapolis, wrote to Brother Patterson as follows: "If you still keep coming to church, and continue your quarreling, you will hav to experience a process; namely, tar and feathers." Brother Patterson called a meeting to consider the matter, and before it was over the two men had a violent fight with chairs.

ONE of the withered, or nearly withered, sensations of the season is the British Salvation Army, which came over with a flourish of metaphorical trumpets, and terrible as an army with a banner. Its history is suggested in the typical fact that it abandoned New York for Newark. Possibly it might hav made a strike in some other than a presidential year; at all events, the Salvation Army is less a sensation now than the army worm.

THE Golos says that from April 23d to Sept. 3d, of last year there were sent from the Moscow Central Prison to Siberia over 11,000 prisoners. All of them went by the Nijny-Novgorod overland route. Over 10,000 were exiled for various terms, and 105 were condemned to hard labor in the Siberian mines. These prisoners were transported from Moscow by rail, the prisoners' train, carrying from 800 to 900 persons, leaving the city every Monday.

"LONG" JOHN WENTWORTH is one of the tallest men in America. Col. Ingersoll is also tall and large. They met at the Chicago Convention last Sunday, and the Colonel opened the conversation by saying, "Well, Mr. Wentworth, we are almost of a size." "Yes," replied Wentworth, "the only difference between us is that you are against God and Grant, and I'm for both." "That's true," said Ingersoll, "and I'll bet a hundred dollars that they are both beaten."

WILLIAM BRIDGES, of Greencastle, Ind., was asked to contribute towards building a Methodist church. He is a Universalist, and he said that he would giv $100 on condition that a Universalist clergyman should be allowed to preach three sermons in the new edifice. The offer was accepted and the money paid. The Rev. Mr. Curry preached the first of the Universalist discourses, and improved the opportunity to violently assail orthodox Christianity. The congregation was horrified, and on the following day the officers tried to compromise with Bridges by returning the $100, but he declared that the bargain must be consummated, and the two remaining sermons are to be given.

IN "what Truth would like to know," we hav: What special tortures will be invented for Bob Ingersoll in hell, if he should happen to be wrong and go there. Whether he will bear them with Christian fortitude. How much John Pyne would giv for a copy of the four gospels in the original MS—very rare. Which would get the biggest terms, Matthew, Mark, Luke or John. The size of Talmage's mouth in round numbers. The All-Wise purpose in inventing bedbugs. If Baxter street by any other name would smell as sweet. Why a "pious" parson, in administering to the sick, always labors under the misapprehension that the Lord is the sick man. If Methuselah took it as a personal allusion when anybody sang "I would not liv alway."

A PREACHER at Portland told his congregation that he had personally tested the efficacy of prayer. He was out on a lake in a boat, when by a mischance he lost both oars. The wind was rising, night was coming on, and he was in imminent danger of being swamped and finding a watery grave. What could he do? Evidently nothing himself; so he knelt down and prayed long and fervently for deliverance. He placed himself in the hands of the Lord, and so was saved. Capt. Swetsir listened to the story with breathless interest, and was manifestly disappointed by the climax. After waiting in vain until the end of the sermon for the details, he said, "Say, Mr. Preacher, I want you to tell me how you got ashore." The minister explained that a man saw him from the shore and put out in a boat to rescue him.

THE remark of Comstock recently, before Commissioner Shields, that he was acting conscientiously, was really ludicrous. He had caused the arrest of one man on four distinct warrants for sending lottery circulars through the mails; none of them had been tried, and apparently there was no other object in making the arrest except to enlarge the bail, and yet Comstock was acting conscientiously. The bail, at his demand, was made $1,000 in each case, when the extreme penalty of the law for the offense is a fine of $500. And yet he was acting conscientiously. If Stewart L. Woodford would take out of his pigeon-hole the complaints made against Comstock, and giv him an opportunity to furnish bail bonds for himself, the public would hav an opportunity to inquire into that tender conscience of his, and learn of what material it is composed.

THE PASSION PLAY.—Good, easy-going folks who still believe in the existence of an actual lake of fiery brimstone for the especial behoof of sinners, are very much exercised over the outspoken criticisms of Colonel Robert Ingersoll on the Christian religion. But what think these well-meaning people of the "Passion Play" produced some time ago before an audience of eight thousand persons at Ober Ammergau? The Herald in describing it uses such sentences as these: "In the scene where the Savior is represented carrying the cross, the spectacular effect was very fine." "Some laughter was created by the accidental breaking of a limb when Judas Iscariot was about to hang himself." "The part of the Savior was exceptionally well played," etc., etc. We are told that exciting struggles took place about the doors of the theater, that bands of music paraded the streets, and that the scene of the crucifixion created a painful and profound impression. Surely after such an exhibition as this for money, people in New York should hardly wonder at the audacity of Ingersoll. The "Passion Play" is sacrilegious because it is performed by professing Christians. Ingersoll's lectures are not sacrilegious because he has never professed to be a Christian, and at all events does not supplement the expression of his opinions by tawdry costumes and bands of music.—Truth.

SOME two months ago Viola Smith, a girl only 14 years old, living in Prattsburgh, N. Y., accused the Rev. N. B. Randall, a Methodist preacher, of whose Sunday school she was a member, of improper language and improper conduct toward her. At first the girl confided the matter to her parents only, but her father being very indignant, induced her to make a public accusation. This caused quite an excitement and made it necessary for Randall to submit to a church trial. The jury, consisting of five Methodist preachers, after deliberating over the evidence, stood three for conviction and two for acquittal, but compromised on the equivocal verdict that "Randall was not guilty, but must not preach in Prattsburgh any more." Randall's friends tried to impair the girl's character, but could find nothing definit against her. Since the trial she has been very much depressed; and last Saturday took a quantity of acetate of lead; this not working as rapidly as she desired, she scraped the quicksilver from the back of a looking-glass and swallowed it, following that up by a quantity of liquid face paint, which she had been told was a deadly poison. This combination caused the most intense pain, and a doctor was summoned who succeeded in saving her life, though she is still in a critical condition. The Rev. N. B. Randall left Prattsburgh immediately after his trial, and is now engaged in the insurance business in a neighboring city.

ONE of the features of Presbyterian General Assemblies is the reading of a paper with a queer name, "The Annual Narrativ of the State of Religion." At this year's General Assembly the duty of reading this paper fell to the Rev. Dr. Striker. He reported to the listening presbyters and elders that, while there had been no revivals to speak of, the growth of the church had been healthy and satisfactory. Satisfactory! with the great majority of the people living, as Presbyterians believe, in momentary peril of an eternal doom, the most awful that the human imagination can conceive! Satisfactory! with immortal souls vanishing every hour, every minute, every second, out of this life which now is, and dropping, as Presbyterians believe, into the bottomless pit of hell! Satisfactory! with the swarming poor of the cities sunken in squalor, ignorance, and vice more wretched than the brutes, lifting a bitter, inarticulate cry to an unknown God for the succor and rescue that do not come! Satisfactory! with an unbelieving science daily sapping the faith of the educated classes, and a coarse and blatant Materialism hurling taunting challenges from public platforms at a church that seems to hav ceased to be the church militant and to hav become the church somnolent! Satisfactory! with fraud, lying, greed, robbery, adultery, and bloodshed filling the land, and not seldom lurking under the mask of Christian profession or even of ministerial sanctity! If, with this state of things under their eyes, the presbyters and elders see in the conversion of a few thousand Sunday-school children and a few hundred straggling sinners of riper years a healthy and satisfactory growth of the church, they are easily satisfied indeed.—Sun.

Hell.

BY COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: In the republic of the mind one is a majority. In that republic all are sovereigns and all are equals. You cannot be governed there even by a brute majority. In that republic every brow wears a crown, and every form is robed in the imperial purple. In that republic only those are citizens who tell their honest thoughts; only those are useful citizens who investigate for themselves. In that republic those only who appeal to brute force are traitors; those only who endeavor to suppress thought are bad citizens.

The church regards that republic with a sneer. From the teeth of hatred she draws back the lips of scorn and insists that even in this, the nineteenth century, man has no right to think for himself; insists that even in this age we should be governed by the ignorant myths of the dead and buried past, and insists that the world can be made better by teaching what is false; that a lie is a most excellent thing; that we should govern mankind through fear, and that the mistakes of thousands of years ago should be still considered not only truths, but truths necessary to believe.

Now I shall ask you all to-night—and that's the only way to find out—are the members of orthodox churches any better than other people? Let us be fair about this thing. Are they, as a class, more truthful than other people? Let us hav a church trial, and see how they disagree as to their testimony. Are they, as a class, better bred? Do they treat their wives and children any better than other people? Is their financial standing in the community any better? Is there a bank in Cincinnati that will loan a solitary dollar on a church certificate as collateral security? Is there a man among you who takes a Presbyterian deacon to the bank with you for fear if you don't the favor you ask will be refused? Do we find the most charity in the pulpit—the greatest and best hearts? Let us be honest in asking these questions, for these orthodox members claim that there is such a difference between them and us that they are going to the realms of eternal bliss, while we are to be eternally damned. A difference bearing such important results in another world ought to be visible to the naked eye in this.

They insist that if we take away their book there is no immortality left in this world. Is it possible that human nature is so low, so mean, so corrupt, that without a certain book we will all rush to crime and horror? Is it? If books existed before man, I might admit that they are better than man, but that is not the fact. Every book in this world was written by man, and every religion has been the work of man. Man is better than all the books, and the inspiration that we see every day in every good and heroic act is better than all the inspiration of all the books. But they say to us, "Do not disturb this book, because upon it we rest all our hope of a life to come." I deny it. Before the book called the Bible was written, millions and millions of people in other countries longed for immortality; millions and millions of people in other countries believed in the immortality of the soul, so that the doctrin of immortality does not rest upon the inspiration of any book. However little hope I might hav for another world, I would hate to hav it to rest upon that book or any other. The doctrin of immortality was born of human affection, and it will continue as long as love kisses the lips of death. Just as long as we love, we will hope to liv hereafter. And yet priests and kings and tyrants and bigots hav taken advantage of this splendid longing for another life to enslave the human soul and to make people believe that immortality rests upon a book.

If I am immortal, it is a fact in nature, and no book can change it. If I am to experience another life, I shall not be indebted for it to any creed, nor to any priest, nor to any form of religion. I shall be indebted to myself, for if there is another world, the better I do here, the better start I shall hav in the other.

Now man, coming up, as I believe, from the lower animals—for that's the only way you can account for this doctrin of hell. and all the snakes and jackals and hyenas and buzzards and other unclean things that hav been crammed into the orthodox religion—received his religion from his barbarous ancestors; he received his orthodoxy from savages. The barbarians beholding the appalling phenomena of nature, thought that all good was produced by some being, and by good they meant anything that tended to their happiness. So they gave to this imaginary being a local habitation and a name. Then they saw many things that displeased them, and experienced many things that gave them pain and discomfort, so they created another being to attribute all their trials and calamities to—another being not quite so stout as God, but making up in shrewdness what he lacked in strength, having fiends and all sorts of wicked instruments to do his bidding.

For thousands and thousands of years man has been upon his knees trying to escape one of these beings and placate the other. They hav been taught to believe that if they do not believe in the God of the Bible they will be turned over to the devil, to suffer untold agonies in hell, not for thousands, millions, billions of years, but as long as that God rules in heaven. We hav inherited some of these hellish ideas of ignorance, ideas of barbarism, but we ought to be grand enough in this country to think. We hav been praying for thousands and thousands of years to God to help mankind. They hav been destroyed by pestilence and by war, and their homes hav been swept away by the angry flood and the blazing lava of the dread volcano, and hav prayed and offered up sacrifice for mercy, but God has never interfered in a single instance. We must now rely upon our own brain and courage—upon ourselves. If there were only one instance in the world's history where God helped mankind, with all my heart I would worship such a God. But for hundreds and thousands of years men hav enslaved each other, and yet no God has interfered. The naked back of labor has been lacerated for thousands and thousands of years, yet no God has ever interfered, so far as I know. Men hav tried to advance new thoughts, and other men hav taken them and burned them at the stake. The martyr has been taken from the cell of the Inquisition and burned to dust, and there has been no sweet pity in the heavens—none, none whatever.

The time has come when man must depend upon himself. We are told this God loves us all, that his love and kindness spread over all his works, and that in another world he will make us happy. What right hav you to say that an infinit being will treat his creatures better elsewhere than he does here? Is there a necessity for another world simply to rectify the mistakes in this world? I want to touch your hearts to-night. I want to touch them so that you will hate this infamous doctrin of hell—so that you will hate it as I do. And I want you to understand that I hav nothing particular against the ministers. Some of them are excellent people, and their opposition does not amount to enough to create malice. They teach us now that there is a God who made us all, and who intended that we should all be good, but that our ancestors committed a crime; that is, that we sinned through a representativ. Now, if that man was our representativ, we did not vote for him. I was not present at the convention that nominated him, and I would not hav voted for him anyhow. We were at that time unborn, and knew nothing about the transaction. But it seems that through the sins of that man we all deserve eternal hell. A very fine compliment is that to the mechanism of God. Everybody deserves to be eternally damned! Is that the best your God can do? Is that the best man he can make that must be damned as he comes from his plastic hand and cast into fire everlasting? Does it show any wisdom making human beings in order to damn them? Does it show any goodness to make any fuel for hell? But we are all to be damned for sinning against an infinit being.

Now I cannot conceive of a finite sin receiving infinit punishment. When I commit a sin against my brother, it is nothing to me that God says, "I forgiv you." I must hav my brother's pardon, and my own as well. I utterly deny the proposition that any finite being can commit a sin against an infinit being. The idea is, the greater a finite being, the greater the crime. Their idea is that the moment you leave this world and get into the actual presence of God, there is no chance for reformation. God can't do anything except through the instrumentality of the parson or of the Bible, and when you get where God livs, there is nothing he can do for your case. You will stand a great deal better chance to be reformed by the myths and mysteries of the Bible than by being called into the actual presence of Jesus Christ himself.

No man deserves heaven, but all deserve hell, and the only way to get to heaven is through the agency of another person.

They say the law was violated. Where did this law come from? Was it a law God made? or was it a law that was on hand? Yet this law must be satisfied. Think of the law going up and down the earth moaning for satisfaction.

Then they tell us that another man has made redemption possible for us by suffering in the place of the wicked. What kind of a man is it that would want to take advantage of a redemption of that kind, and what sort of a ruler would you think him who would accept of such an atonement? Suppose a man had been convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged, and another man should step up on the day fixed for the execution and say: "Here is a healthy man with a family; I am not a healthy man and hav no family, and I will take his place upon the gallows;" what would you think of the governor who would say, "All right; let the man take the criminal's place!" Is it possible that that is right? Yet that has been preached for years and years. The doctrin of hell has been preached for hundreds and hundreds of years, and we hav been told that millions and billions of years before the innocent babe was born into this world God knew it was to be cast into hell-fire and had arranged all the details of its damnation. What a cheerful doctrin that is! And yet people say to me, Why do you attempt to take away our consolation; why shock our holiest ideas? Why take the blessed tidings of God to man away from us? They would a thousand times rather that there should be no heaven than that there should be no hell.

These are the tidings that they preach to you, and I expect, I believe, they believe these things themselves. They went to work to save man from the clutches of an angry God, and the means they adopted were to frighten him with the belief that God would take his naked soul and dash it into hell. Of course they say God is all goodness and lovliness and kindness, but they also say you had better look out when you get into his actual presence. And they fit out missionaries and send them thousands and thousands of miles away to carry these glad tidings to the heathen. They want them to hav religion with all the modern improvements, and one that will punish their enemies. But who goes to hell? Not the rich and the comfortable, who swindle all the week and square themselves at church on Sunday: they are all well enough off, and, "no hell for me, if you please; giv that to the poor." So that at last the only class we get into hell is the tramps. Nobody goes to hell himself; it is always somebody else, particularly those we hate. But these orthodox gentlemen say, "Why don't you hav some respect for our feelings?" I go to one of their churches; that is, in my mind's eye I do, and they tell me I am going to hell. It seems to me I ought to hav some feeelings on that subject. It seems to me I would hav more reason to feel hurt, particularly if I told them there is no hell. Poets of strong imagination and a great gift of language hav given us graphic descriptions of hell, and eminent painters hav depicted it in all its horrors.

Some time ago he had seen in the church where Shakspere is buried, at Stratford-upon-Avon, a very vivid picture of hell. In this picture a train of wicked are represented as passing in doleful procession down the throat of an immense devil. There were caldrons in which the lost ones simmered and boiled, and grates upon which they blistered and roasted. There were devils pouring in pitch upon the victims, and a little devil stirring the grate to keep up a good draft. In one corner a number of the blessed appeared with a holy grin upon their countenances, extending from ear to ear, as if they would say, "Ah, didn't we tell you so. How do you like it as far as you'v got?" All this to show the love of God. I never saw such a hideous, selfish thing in my life.

Colonel Ingersoll proceeded to consider for a few minutes the theology of Jeremy Taylor and Jonathan Edwards, and denounced it as heartless, cruel, and unreasonable, particularly that of the latter, who held that a man in heaven could be happy and yet see his wife and children writhing in hell. The idea of these worthies seemed to be that the lucky people who got to heaven would hav their sense of justice so sharpened that the sufferings of those in hell would be to them rather a joy than a grief. And yet these men were considered good men and the lights of the church. If there was an infamous man in the history of the church it was Jonathan Edwards. He hated him dead, he hated his ashes, he hated his name. He hated anybody who would put such a belief into an innocent child's mind. Yet Augustine preached the same thing.

This doctrin of hell was so savage that it had to be modified to some extent, and so the doctrin of atonement was invented. It is said all we hav to do is to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. Nobody knows what that means. I don't. Believe what? And what good would it do? A man might believe in Jesus Christ and yet be a murderer. There has not been a man hanged in the United States for the last one hundred years that has not believed in Jesus Christ, and most of them hav declared on the scaffold that they were going right straight to Jesus Christ that very day. A man must believe in a certain thing or be eternally damned; but if he believes and is sorry, then he will be saved. There was a man hanged in San Francisco some time ago for cutting a girl's throat. As he thrust the keen knife into her white throat she implored him to spare her, as she was not prepared to die. A great effort was made to obtain the release of the monster, but all appeals failed, and then he got religion. They generally do about that time. He made a speech from the gallows, in which he said he was going to heaven, and that the only thing that made him feel bad was that he would not meet the woman he had killed because she was not a Christian. I suppose up in heaven, if the music gets a little monotonous, and he should desire another thrill of joy, that all he will hav to do is to go and look over and see the woman he murdered writhing in the agonies of hell. Does anybody want to support that kind of doctrin? I never will, never, never, never! And with all due respect to every lady and gentleman here, I say, Damn such a doctrine. Does anybody mean to tell me that none but Christians go to heaven? Hav you never known a good fellow to die who was not a Christian, and whom you could not bear to think of as being in hell? And hav you never known a woman who had worn herself out in the service of her husband and children, whom you could not think of as being in hell while her orthodox husband was in heaven, simply because he believed and she did not. On the battlefield I saw a brave boy, not sixteen years old, shot down in his struggle to keep the flag of his country from being trailed in the dust. He died with a curse upon his lips, but he died with a picture of his mother in his heart, and he died for the right, for liberty and for progress. Do you mean to tell me that that boy's soul went straight to the abysses of hell? I pronounce it an infamous lie. I cannot believe in any such doctrin. I believe with an old Universalist minister—and I must say I respect the Universalists because their God is at least a gentleman and not a devil—I believe with the gentleman who said, "I cannot help thinking that the latch-string will hang out until the last young one comes home."

Colonel Ingersoll continued that thousands of people were in lunatic asylums to-day in consequence of the preaching of the horrible doctrin of hell. In the cars, not long ago, a wild looking young man came up to him and asked whether he had any objections to his sitting beside him. He replied, "None whatever," and the young man sat down, saying, "You look so rested that it's a comfort to be near you." He said: "My mother put an arrow in my heart. She taught me the doctrin of hell." Col. Ingersoll said the mother was foolish; there was no hell; it had been abolished. The young man told him further that he had just escaped from the insane asylum the night before, and the Colonel gave him instructions to guide him in making his escape. He had become crazy on learning of the love of God. He met such people every day. This doctrin did not affect the vicious; it only affected the tender-hearted, the affectionate mother and the sweet little child. He had attended a protracted meeting once, just for a little while, and had thought himself in Bedlam. Ministers were haranging the life out of their audiences, and little girls, ten and twelve years old, were coming forward to be prayed for. They might hav been eating jam or taking a lump of sugar when their mothers' backs were turned, or they might hav gone to a neighbor's and promised to be back at 2 o'clock, and staid until 3. And there were old men, with as many sins to account for as those children were days old, down upon their knees and praying for them and imploring the Lord to break down their hellish pride. And there were others who were telling them that they had crucified Christ, and had driven nails into his hands and into his feet until the poor little creatures were loaded to the earth with a sense of their horrible iniquities.

O, it is infamous! No parent should allow his child to hear such things. (Cheers). I feel like cheering too, my friends. When I find a man or woman who, says, "I will not allow my little daughter to hear these frightful lies if I can prevent it until she knows better than to believe them," I feel like cheering. It is monstrous that little children should be taught that there is a great big God around trying to get a sight on them for some childish fault. I beseech you never to giv a dollar to build a church where the doctrin of hell is to be preached; if you ever get a chance to tax that property, tax it. I implore you, men and women, never to giv a solitary dollar to teach that doctrin; do not giv a solitary cent to the missionary cause to carry that hellish news to the heathen. Do not ever take a paper that defends that doctrin; do not pay a cent directly or indirectly for the propagation of that infinit horror. If there is any God it is blasphemy to say there is any hell; if there is any humanity, it is blasphemy to say that we can be happy in heaven with those we love in hell.

I want to spend the next world with the folks I love in this. I am going to stick to them if I can. I think more of my wife and my children than I do of any God, because I do not know him and I do them. I want their society, and if we go down with the ship of the world in chaos and death, I will not push them away. We will go down together. I never will paddle off in some little orthodox canoe. I never want to get so good that I will not love the ones I love now, and I never want to rise above human ties; and in after life I don't want a little patch of fog pointed out to me as my grandmother, and another piece of fog as my grandfather. That won't do for me. I want to know my folks as I knew them here. If my affections are not immortal, I do not want to be immortal, for what's the use of the intellect surviving our best and holiest emotions? And yet we are told that we are all going to hell. I was told on the cars, the other day, that there is where I was heading. A clergyman told me so. I said, "I will bet you fifty dollars I don't go to hell." Said he, "Oh, well, that's not a betting point; it never could be decided." "Well," I said, "that's my bet; put up or shut up." Now I want all you, ladies and gentlemen, here to-night, to form yourselves into a missionary society to meet this doctrin of hell just that way. I want them, when a man tells them they will surely be damned if they do not believe in all the theological rubbish that is gleaned from the Bible, to flatly say that they don't believe any such doctrine, and I want them to fight it out.

Voice from the gallery—"What do you believe?"

Col. Ingersoll—"About what?"

Voice—"Well, what do you believe, that's the question?"

Col. Ingersoll—"I believe that you do not understand your own question. I believe that a good action is better than a good theory. I believe that a man who does right with a bad theory is a great deal better than one who does wrong with a good one; I believe that a man who loves his wife and children, and does the best he knows how according to his guides, is better than one who maintains the church and does not do these things. I believe if there is any God he is as good as I am, and if he is as good as I am he will never damn anybody until he givs them a fair chance. I believe the Garden of Eden is in front, and that man is getting better as the world grows older. I do not believe that prisons and scaffolds will forever disfigure the earth, nor that the withered hand of want will always be extended for charity. I do not believe that any man who is honest and who is willing to help himself will be allowed to want. I believe the time is coming when we shall all be freer and happier, and that too with the flames of hell stamped out under our feet."

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE 19TH CENTURY.

ADDITIONS AND COMMENTS BY THE UNGODLY WOMAN.

MRS. JOB AND HOSEA'S QUESTIONABLE WOMEN.

We now approach the New Testament, only glancing at Mrs. Job, who is not rated among the godly women by the godly ones, as she gave her bilious (biles) spouse many a curtain lecture, besides commanding him to curse God and die when he sat down among the ashes and took a potsherd to scrape himself withal, being covered with sore biles from the sole of his foot unto his crown (Job ii, 7–10). So this "perfect upright man" ranked her with the "foolish women" for her little speech, intended as consolation and advice, and put her where moderns have always let her remain, non est, for we have no account that she was present when her friends, brethren, sons, daughters, and possessions were restored to him (Job xlii, 9–17). Mrs. Lot and Mrs. Job were truly consigned to a sad fate for not trusting in God as did their virtuous, upright husbands.

Neither must we pause to expatiate on Hosea's chaste wives, the first of whom (Hosea i, 2, 3), the holy prophet was ordered to take by God himself, he informs us. And the Lord said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms, for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord. So he went and took Gomer, the daughter of Diblaim, which conceived and bare a son. Then she conceived and bare a daughter (verse 6), and then another son (verse 8), which we are expressly told did not take place till after she had weaned the girl, a fact so important that had it been omitted in God's only revelation to man, it might have hazarded the soul's salvation of some of us "miserable sinners."

It would seem that God ought to have been satisfied with the prostitution of one of his favorite prophets with one woman; but he was not, for in chapter third, Hosea is credited as having written, Then saith the Lord unto me, Go, yet, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress. . . . So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of silver and for an homer of barley, and a half homer of barley (which in mathematical parlance would be one and a half homers of barley). And I said unto her, Thou shalt abide for me many days; thou shalt not play the harlot, and thou shalt not be for another man; so will I also be for thee.

Now here was a contract not to be ignored by either. "Bought her to me," and the price recorded in olden times might have been the custom, but the character of this second woman appears to have been no improvement on the first, so a firm bargain was made lest she should "play the harlot," and as an inducement Hosea promised to be faithful to her.

We cannot understand, if God's purposes required these connections between Hosea and these lewd women, why it was necessary for Hosea to place it in history as a lasting disgrace to the women and an honor to himself in having obeyed the commands of the Lord for a sign to his chosen people.

Godly commentators attempt to gloss over this shameful account with various explanations, pretending to believe that the second woman was the first restored to her true husband as a type of the restoration of Israel, and that Gomer fell into lewdness after her union with Hosea, not before, surmising that she "is called 'a wife of whoredom' anticipatively," though there is not one word in the text to justify any such perversion, but the direct reverse.

Their glib suppositions about "spiritual whores and spiritual fornicators," and the continuation of the vile trash in the word of God, is too indelicate for the contemplation of any one, unless for criticism and exposure. We, therefore, turn the Old Testament, obscene, morocco-covered literature over to Anthony Comstock and his clique and hasten to the no less filthy legends of the New Testament, with which we have to do, after which we trust we can dismiss the whole and relegate the sacred Scriptures back to their proper owners, the Christians, and the lovers and promoters of the obscene in preaching and practice.

Where is the New Party?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav already for quite some time wondered at the non-appearance of that promised Liberal party, or, in its stead, of some movement of the Liberals to test their strength and assert themselves. Doubtless the matter has been pondered over by the leaders of Liberal thought, and if we hear no more of it, it must come of their deeming it prudent to lie low for the time. Yet one may be forgiven for astonishment at their apparent inaction when to a common mind it seems high time to hav a coalition of Liberals in the field of politics. It may hav been thought that Liberalism could as yet make but a poor show for itself as regards number. Possibly such would be the case. Yet I do not believe it.

What better opportunity could offer itself for the upraising of the standard of Liberalism than the existence of two confessedly corrupt parties, both without any live issue, struggling with one another, not for the people's greater good, but for dominion and spoils. It is not the welfare of the American people that is thought of or spoken of, but the victory of the Democratic over the Republican party, or vice versa. It is not the virtue, statesmanship, talent, or genius of the great candidate, but the right of the one to election to a seat from the possession of which he claims once to hav been defrauded, and the silent weight of the other, who, beyond some military achievements, has no claim either to shining talent or virtue, but, on the contrary, boasts many vices and dishonest association. The effrontery of these factions has even been carried to the length of chuckling, as was done but a few days since in a New York Republican daily, over the fact that the greater rascality of Tilden in the Louisiana election had been overcome and rendered null by the lesser and shrewder trickery of his opponents. Before such monstrosities will not the upright man stop in utter disgust and execration, and swear his hand shall never again be polluted with the casting of a Democratic or Republican vote? Are not thousands to-day in this very position? Yes, thousands upon the top of thousands who but wait a fair opportunity to join the standard of a party coming out to proclaim and defend the liberties of the people.

Many of these will not join the workingmen's party; its platform is too narrow. Others still keep away from the Socialists, who force certain issues while they ignore others. The greater part of them would be attracted to the national Liberal party, with its broad, strong, advanced, yet secure platform. Let the noble monument dressed last year by the Committee on Platform and Resolutions be offered to the people, and besides the Liberals, the masses that now vacillate and hang loose about either party will come and acclaim their deliverance. Ultimately the workingmen and many of the Socialists, feeling the narrowness of their platform and the weakness of their parties, will come to swell the numbers and the tide.

That this tidal wave may rise and in its might wash away the corruptions of political parties, that the religious, social, and political liberties of the people may be boldly and grandly declared and championed, that the honor of America may thereby be cleared of a stain, is my hope as well as my prayer to the leaders of Liberalism.

EDMOND GASTINEAU.

P. S.—What are we to think of the conduct of Robert Ingersoll, who last year so nobly and boldly proclaimed the necessity of a Liberal movement, but to-day humbly trails after Senator Blaine. Vote for Blaine—is that what we, the Liberals, must do to be saved? What a pity that men who hav thrown off the shackles of superstition and prejudice still walk in political leading-strings, and that, too, at a time when the Comstocks ominously mourn over the fact that Liberal publications, and therefore Liberals, "are yet beyond the reach of the law." Where is the Napoleon that will lead us to strike, not for glory but for freedom, the Moses of the Liberal dispensation? We thought we had seen his majestic brow and warlike countenance looming up through in the distance. Has his heart failed him that he has not dared to face the foe, were it but a handful of followers? There is a tide in the affairs of nations, as well as of men, which taken at its flood, leads on to fortune. Alas, that we should allow this tide, perhaps the only favorable tide, to escape us. E. G.

IN the acknowledgment of funds donated by friends to meet the expenses of the Bennett Reception, an omission was made of $3.25 by the Liberal League of Paterson, N. J., and handed in by the secretary of the League, our friend Mr. John Warr. Thanks are hereby extended to all concerned.

Which is the Falsifier?

In the Index for June 3d appears the following:

MR. UNDERWOOD'S LETTER TO A FRIEND.

THE FOLLOWING LETTER, WITH THE WRITER'S PERMISSION, HAS BEEN SENT TO US FOR PUBLICATION:

THORNDIKE, MASS., May 26, 1880.

Dear Friend: I hav read the scurrilous attack on Mr. Abbot, myself, and others in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 15th. Thanks for your suggestions; but I shall send no reply. The last communication I sent that paper in vindication of myself from Bennett's malicious thrusts was kept a month and returned to me unpublished. But these vindictiv assaults can injure nobody in the judgment of men and women whose respect is worth having. All such mean and mendacious attempts to injure reputation recoil against their authors. I regard it as a credit that I am abused by such a man as the course that Bennett has pursued proves him to be; while I feel honored by his association of my name with that of Mr. Abbot and some others he has the past two years so persistently defamed; men with whom he is not to be compared, but contrasted; men immeasurably his superior in every intellectual and moral quality; men who hav done as much to elevate Liberalism as he has done to trail its standard in the dust.

I am unable to imagin the immediate cause of this unscrupulous attack, so full of falsehood and vile insinuation, unless it be a tract recently published giving extracts from some of his filthy letters—a tract I never saw till I received a copy by mail. But he has quarreled with, and applied the foulest epithets to, nearly every editor and advocate of Liberal thought in the country who has had the temerity to criticise his course or object to his method; and how could I expect to escape his malice? But for my extreme aversion to personal quarrels, which has kept me from making any public reference to private grievances, I should hav been long ago honored with those who hav been objects of his lies, scurrility, and abuse. Conciliating as I hav been, he has done what he could, by methods peculiar to himself, to injure me with the Liberal public; and, if he has accomplished nothing in this direction, it has been owing to no lack of disposition, but to the insignificance of his influence and that of his paper among Liberals of intelligence, character, and worth. I now recall vividly some of the expressions of Mr. Abbot, giving his estimate of the man. I am obliged to acknowledge that from the first his insight into Bennett's character surpassed my own; and I am now convinced that the latter has received from me, against the advice and protests even of leading Liberals, a consideration of which he was wholly undeserving.

When Bennett was arrested for selling the coarse pamphlet with a salacious title, although I thought he had been guilty of great folly, yet, in my adhesion to the principles of freedom of the press, I protested against his arrest and sent him five dollars as a contribution to the expense of defending himself. When he was—as I thought, and still think—unjustly sentenced, I did what little I could toward getting him pardoned. I called on him twice during his imprisonment; but I notice he makes even these visits, with which he professed to be much pleased, a subject of fault-finding and contemptible misrepresentation. I do not now regret what I did, even though I hav come to see the baseness of his character.

Nearly every statement in regard to me in his attack is either a downright falsehood or a mean distortion of facts. The best way, I am satisfied, is to hav nothing to do with such a man. Point out one falsehood, refute one slander, and he will invent another; and there is no lack of men like himself, who, from various motivs, join him in this disreputable business. Very truly yours,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

As much as I wished not to allude to personal matters of this kind again, duty to myself, as well as to my readers, seems to require that I should take some notice of the foregoing letter, which is in the same unkind, unfair, and untruthful spirit with which the writer has treated me for the past year. I will, therefore, in the spirit of fairness and truth, attempt to vindicate myself and show wherein Mr. Underwood is wrong.

1. I hav made no misstatement in regard to Mr. Underwood in any way. I hav neither been guilty of "downright falsehood" nor "a mean distortion of facts." I hav uttered nothing but the truth in anything I hav said in reference to him. Instead of making such a general and loose statement of denial as he has done, it would hav been more honorable to hav pointed out any "downright falsehood" or any "mean distortion of facts" of which I hav been guilty. I call upon him to do this or to withdraw the calumny he has published against me. I hereby offer him one hundred dollars for each falsehood he will prove I hav uttered, knowingly, either with respect to himself or his compeers, Abbot, Ellis, McNellis, Bundy, or Comstock.

2. Mr. Underwood pretends to be unable to imagin why I should hav anything to say in the way of censure of him in regard to his treatment of myself. Let me assure him then, that it is only since I left prison that I hav seen the letters he wrote to the R.-P. Journal respecting myself. I was not allowed in the prison to even lay my hand upon those papers or to know what they contained. It was not until after I had left prison that I had a chance to know that in writing of me to Bundy's paper he had used such expressions in connection with myself as "vulgarity," "vice," "deliberate, malicious culminator of a virtuous woman, whom he vainly tried to corrupt and ruin," "his character is most despicable," "he is unfit to represent any decent movement or to associate with decent men and women." "The only way that D. M. Bennett's name can be saved from everlasting disgrace is to impeach the genuineness of those letters." "If what you [Bundy] hav published be true, the Liberal public will no longer hav confidence in the man and the sympathy which has been so generously bestowed will be withdrawn." "The perusal of which [the letters] has left on my mind a feeling of unutterable disgust." In Mr. Underwood's remarks, as published in the Chicago Inter-Ocean, Dec. 10, 1879, he used such expressions as these: "I always objected to Bennett's course, as shown in the general obscenity of his journal, his scurrilous articles against the clergy, and the coarseness he exhibited when attacking religion and its professors," "the culprit," "the aged sinner." He also represented the supporters of THE TRUTH SEEKER as being "Freelovers' and "tag-rag and bobtail," while on the other hand he "represented," as he said, an entirely distinct class who were as utterly opposed to me on account of my offense against the laws of decency as were the most conservative Christians of the country. "The brilliant orator [Ingersoll], at my solicitation, interfered on behalf of the aged sinner." "Since then Col. Ingersoll and the best men of the party hav left him to his fate, and altogether on account of his own immorality." It was not until I left prison that I fully learned that he had said to friends of mine that "Bennett must be crushed." It was not till after I left prison that I found out the falsity of the assurance he gave me while in prison, that attacks should not be re-commenced upon me. It was not until after I left prison that I learned he was writing to my best friends, using his utmost ability to turn them against me and to damage me in their estimation. I hav seen several of these letters, and in a part of one of them only I counted thirteen falsehoods he had told, and I pointed them out. It is not till since I left prison that I learned that he was one of the original self-appointed censors or conspirators who felt themselves called upon to read over and examine my private letters, with which they had not the slightest business, and to advise their publication to the world and this while I was in prison, as he still says "unjustly." It was not till since I left prison that I became apprised of the man's duplicity when his accomplice, Bundy, published a part of the letters, to rush several hundred miles in obedience to Bundy's telegram to examin the letters and decide whether they were false or genuin, and to pretend to be greatly shocked by them, when he had looked them over several weeks before and knew they would be published. Is it strange, upon all this information coming to my knowledge after I left prison, especially when the vilest and dirtiest attack that was ever made upon a man was perpetrated upon me, and which I knew, if Mr. Underwood did not hav a hand in, was but a part of the contemptible mode of attack which he helped to inaugurate—is it strange, I repeat, that I should hav a few words to say in allusion to the gentleman? I confess I am not so much a follower of Jesus as when smitten on one cheek to turn the other for a blow, or when spit upon or otherwise befouled to ask to hav it repeated and rubbed in.

3. Mr. Underwood says I hav quarreled with, and applied the foulest epithets to nearly every editor and advocate of Liberal thought in the country who has had the temerity to criticise my course or object to my methods. This is most untrue. I hav not quarreled with one in ten, or perhaps one in twenty of those who criticise me or object to some of my methods. I am really a good-natured sort of person. I hav applied foul epithets to none, nor hav I applied epithets of any kind to any Liberal editors until they began on me, calling me all the vile names they could well think of. I never spoke an uncomplimentary word of Payne, Abbot, Bundy, nor Underwood until after they had denounced me and published me to the world as a forger, a dealer in and advocate of obscene literature, an "impostor," "foul-mouthed libertin," "apostle of nastiness," "martyr impostor," "an old Lothario," "a libertin," and much else in the same line. It was not until such epithets were applied to me that I retorted upon my assailants, and even then I said nothing but what was true. I did not apply to them such vile epithets as they had piled upon me in nearly fifty newspaper columns of the dirtiest abuse, and this sent to all the newspapers in the country, many of which republished the same. There was this difference, they applied epithets to me that were most false, while I did not apply one false epithet to them. After being treated in the intolerable way I was, I cannot think it was my duty to stand or sit supinely and say, "Good brothers, please go on; do so some more." No, I hav simply performed my duty, and denounced in strong, clear, fitting language the most contemptible treatment ever extended to a human being. A great deal of meanness has been measured out to me within the past fifteen months, but none has been so cruel, so unbrotherly, so heartless, so perfectly despicable, as that from the hands of those who profess to be Liberals—Underwood, Ellis, Abbot, Bundy & Co.

4. Mr. Underwood says I made his visits to me in prison a subject of "fault finding and contemptible misrepresentation." There is not a word of truth in this. I did not find fault with his visiting me, nor did I misrepresent him "contemptibly," or in any other way. I simply related some of the remarks he made and some that I made, and I told the truth in what I said. I treated him civilly when he called upon me, as I would now were he to call upon me again. I was not specially overjoyed, and did not act so.

5. He says the last communication he sent to THE TRUTH SEEKER in vindication from my "malicious thrusts" was kept a month and returned to him unpublished. I don't know as I am to blame for that. It was while I was in prison. I neither saw his article nor had anything to say as to what appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Besides, many communications hav to wait much longer than a month before room can be found for them, and many can never find room to appear at all. Mr. Macdonald was conducting the paper at the time, and he informs me that Mr. Underwood's demand for its early appearance was so peremptory and dictatorial that he did not care to be particularly in a hurry about it, and that Mr. Underwood ordered it returned. I do not remember of ever refusing to print any article which Mr. Underwood sent me for publication. As to my "malicious thrusts," I must say that in view of the extremely hard things Mr. Underwood had said about me before I had ever uttered an uncomplimentary word in respect to him, and when in reply I did not make use of an intemperate word, his charge of "malicious thrusts" is extremely unjust, exactly as all his late conduct toward me has been.

6. He says he feels honored by being associated with Mr. Abbot and some others I hav spoken ill of. Probably he means Ellis, McNellis, Bundy, and Comstock. A man who can be honored by being placed in that crowd is low indeed.

7. It is singular that Mr. Underwood should be under the necessity of looking to Mr. Abbot for opinions respecting my character, when Mr. Abbot never saw me to speak to me, except on one or two occasions, and then but a few words passed between us, while Mr. Underwood has been pretty intimately acquainted with me for more than six years, conversing with me during that time probably five hundred times as much as the conversation held between Abbot and myself. Mr. Underwood has had scores of business transactions with me; I hav done considerable work for him and sold him large numbers of books, for which he has paid me several hundred dollars. I thought we were very good friends and that he was fully satisfied with me until he found I had written some letters to a woman, which he did not approve of, when, probably by a hint from Abbot he called me "immoral," "vulgar," a "culprit," an "aged sinner," and other pretty names of a similar character. If after his extensiv acquaintance with me and Abbot's very limited acquaintance he is under the necessity of going to Abbot to form a correct opinion of me, it proves either that Abbot must be extraordinarily astute, or Underwood uncommonly obtuse. Which horn?

8. As to that donation of five dollars, I fear Mr. Underwood, under the circumstances, regrets making it, and under the circumstances I do not want it. I will credit his account by that amount (I believe there is still a balance in my favor). So that is settled, and he is none the poorer on account of that "coarse pamphlet with a salacious title." By the bye, which part of the title is "salacious?" Is it "Cupid's," or "Yokes?" I confess myself a poor judge of salacious matters.

9. As to Mr. Underwood's charge about my "trailing the standard of Liberalism in the dust," I plead not guilty. If I hav done it I do not know it, and I am positiv I did not intend it. I shall hav to submit it to my readers, whether the charge is true. It makes me think of Abbot's scurrilous charge that I hav done more injury to the cause of American Liberalism than any other man that ever lived. I am really sorry if it is so. My hopes were exactly in the other direction. I hav no wish to boast of what I hav done for Liberalism, but am sure I hav for the last six and a half years put in my time faithfully, working early and late three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. What I hav produced may not be equal in quality to that which the cultured Abbot and Underwood hav evolved from their inner consciousness, but what I hav lacked in quality, I hav endeavored to make up in quantity.

10. Mr. Underwood says I hav done what I "could by methods peculiar to myself to injure him with the Liberal public." This is most false. I hav done nothing of the kind. But he has persistently tried to injure me, to ruin my reputation and business, to "crush" me, as he positivly said must be done. If I hav ever injured him to the amount of a hair of his head, or a penny in his pocket, I don't know when it was.

11. As to "the insignificance of my influence and that of THE TRUTH SEEKER among Liberals of intelligence, character, and worth," I hav nothing to say. I do not claim a very large amount of influence. I hav not tried to lead people around very much, by the nose or otherwise. My ambition has been to issue a good, interesting, truthful paper, and books of the same character, and I am flattered that there are some in the country, though they may be "tag-rag and bobtails," who appreciate the efforts I hav made. So long as I get letters almost every day—and from tolerably "intelligent" people too—acknowledging that they owe their conversion to me, I will try to bear the loss of the appreciation of Ellis, Underwood, and Abbot. I know I would far rather hav the approval of fifty thousand of the class Mr. Underwood calls "tag-rag and bobtails" than the mere baker's dozen of the highly-cultured, exquisit men like the three named. The growing list of THE TRUTH SEEKER indicates that the bobtails must be pretty numerous and still increasing. And now that Mr. Underwood (doubtless by the advice of Mr. Abbot) has decided to withdraw the "consideration" which hitherto, "against the advice and protests of leading Liberals," he has favored me with, I shall endeavor to bear the infliction with the best grace possible. "This is a world of losses and disappointments, to be sure! "The best of friends must part."

12. Mr. Underwood speaks of my inferiority in intellectual and moral qualities as compared with Abbot and, probably, Ellis, Bundy, and himself. I think that is cruel—more cruel than there is any need for. I did not get up my intellectual organization, and do not feel that I am to blame for its inferiority. I am well aware it is far inferior to that of many men, but how can I help it? I hav to take myself as I am, and other people hav to take me in the same way. I wish I were more intellectual, but fear I cannot raise my intellectual stature even to the extent of a single cubit. I would be glad to be as tall, intellectually, as Abbot, Underwood, and Bundy, but I do not expect impossibilities. I always thought it mean to twit a simpleton, one a little below par intellectually, with being a fool. Gentlemen are not very apt to do it. On the score of morality I seem also to be deficient. That is bad, I must confess. Yes, I wrote some letters; very naughty letters, Underwood, Ellis, and Abbot think; but I am glad that from fifty to one hundred lies cannot be traced to my door, as they can to Abbot's, or twenty that can be traced to Underwood's. I am glad I hav never used the names from a list stolen from the Index office of another newspapers, by which to mail false, slanderous, unprincipled sheets to ruin its editor. I am glad I never deceived and shamefully treated a most worthy young woman, as Ellis did in Salem, Ohio. If I hav written rather too many letters, I hav reason to rejoice that I am not near as mean and contemptible as those who hav tried to deeply injure me. If I thought myself as base as the five men who hav gone to such lengths to crush me, and that I could not get over it, I would commit suicide within three days. But while I can say in truth that I am not a liar, am not a thief, am not a drunkard, am not a forger, am not a counterfeiter, am not an adulterer, I hav to admit that I did write some private letters, which hav caused Ellis, Underwood, Abbot, and Bundy a great deal of trouble, and that makes me immoral, of course. If I had not written those letters, I might hav lied like Abbot, and hav been all right. I presume also, notwithstanding even those letters, if I had voted for Abbot at the Liberal Congress in Syracuse in 1878, and had influenced my friends also to support him, thereby securing his election, Underwood and Abbot would both hav considered me a tolerably moral man. I think, however, that the good work I did on that occasion will atone for all the private letters of my life.

13. Among the untruths which Mr. Underwood has written to my friends, I will now mention but one. He says I denied writing those "letters." It is positivly false. I never denied it either in private or public, and I call upon him to tell when I denied it and to whom I denied it. If he will prove that I ever said anything of the kind, I will agree to owe him one thousand dollars. THE TRUTH SEEKER in my absence never denied it; if it did, Mr. Underwood is called upon to point out the number and page in which the denial appeared. If he will do this satisfactorily, another $1,000. Since he will persist in making such misstatements, he ought to be honorable enough to acknowledge his error when pointed out to him. I hav all along been flattering myself that I am pretty good at "owning up." More than two years ago I informed several of my near friends in this city that I had written those letters. I told my wife about it, and owned that I was sorry for writing them; and last November I fancy I made a pretty clean breast of it when I told not less than fifty thousand people that I wrote those letters, and begged their pardon therefor. Still the cultured, pure, moral, and respectable B. F. Underwood insists that I denied it. How this world is given to falsehood! He is of this world.

14. Although Mr. Underwood makes the general charge that I am guilty of "downright falsehood, or a mean distortion of facts," he does not attempt to deny that he and Ellis appointed themselves a smelling committee at Savage's house in Greenwood, after Ellis had obtained those letters, spent a part of a day in mousing over them, and deciding what course to pursue with them to crush Bennett the most effectually. As he does not deny it, as Ellis does not deny it, as Savage does not deny it, as Abbot does not deny it, though four weeks hav passed since the statement was made, it is pretty fair to conclude that there is much truth in it. If there is none, each of the parties named would be very ready to disown. Why they do not deny it is because they can not do so truthfully. Assuming, then, that it is not deniable, we are enabled to obtain a clear view of Mr. Underwood's "true inwardness." After he had read over those strictly private letters to his entire satisfaction, and become sufficiently filled with "unutterable disgust," he decided that they must be given to the world, whereupon he very soon gave out that "Bennett must be crushed." Now the man may think he was acting honorably, kindly, and fraternally all that time, but it does not seem so to me. As bad as he considers me, I am very sure I would not hav served him so. Should Ellis, by the most dishonorable means in the world, come into possession of private letters of Underwood's, though written some in playfulness, some as pastime, some in friendship, esteem, or even love, and I could not help knowing that he did not intend them at all for the public eye, even if I thought they were in bad taste, and were discreditable to him, I don't think that I should feel that I had any business with them, or that anybody else had any business with them, especially if he was unjustly in prison at the time—unless I was extremely mean, and wished to pursue a most ungentlemanly, dishonorable course, unless I wished thereby to do him the greatest injury possible, which is hardly a supposable case. If I had it in my heart's desire to crush him, and I was sufficiently devoid of honor, I might hav done it, but I would hav considered myself guilty of very low, mean, contemptible conduct, far worse than penning the letters for one eye alone. I should hav felt that if it was wrong to write them for the eye of one person only, to spread them before hundreds of thousands was infinitly more culpable and dishonorable, all to "crush" him, and cause his friends to forsake him.

Perhaps it is unbecoming in me to pass an opinion upon Mr. Underwood's conduct, so I will just submit it to my readers whether it was honorable, truthful, and gentlemanly, after he had read over those letters, advised their publication, and knew they were coming out, then when Bundy did bring them out with all of Ellis' indecencies, falsehoods, slanders, epithets, garblings, exaggerations, headings and sandwichings, making them appear ten times worse than they would otherwise, for Underwood to rush several hundred miles to Chicago in obedience to a telegraphic summons from his accomplice Bundy, to pretend to see and decide whether the letters were genuin, and to be duly shocked and disgusted, and to declare that Bennett was gone, "hook and line," and even that "burnt brandy would not save him." Let it be remembered, in connection, that after Bundy had sent him a dispatch to come at once, when Underwood was afterwards censured for being so ready to "mix in," and meddle himself with what did not concern him in the slightest degree, he attempted to make it appear to my wife and others that he went at the urgent request of my friends, and otherwise would not hav gone. This, added to what he said to the reporter of the Inter-Ocean, is sufficient for the Liberal public to decide upon. Let them take the case, and a just and true verdict render.

I regret to lose the friendship of Mr. Underwood. I hav entertained a feeling of respect for him, and hav wished to co-operate with him in the dissemination of the truths of reason and Freethought. I hav not seen so much to condemn in him as he has in me, and hav had no occasion, until recently, to censure his letters, his tastes, his modes and methods of prosecuting his labors, his untruthfulness, his deficiency or excess of "vulgarity." I think I hav appreciated the good work he has performed, and hav on all occasions spoken in praise of it. I gladly would retain his good will, and to my knowledge I hav done nothing to forfeit it except to write some rather unfortunate letters and to sell a "coarse pamphlet with a salacious title." If I hav offended in other directions I am quite ignorant of it, both as to the where and when. Being from this time henceforth deprived of his recognition and "consideration," I shall go on in what I conceive to be my duty. I shall continue to publish THE TRUTH SEEKER so long as I hav the mental and financial ability to do so, and enough of the uncultured tag-rag and bobtails staud by me and are disposed to help me still fight the battle. I shall still strive to make THE TRUTH SEEKER an acceptable paper to the Liberals of the country, and will make it the remainder of my life-work to correct such mistakes as I hav made, to right my wrongs, to discontinue any reprehensible conduct of which I hav been guilty; in short, I shall try, during the remaining years that are left of my life, to try to be a zealous, consistent Liberal, to do all the good I conveniently can, and to speak evil of no man without cause.

Mr. Underwood had it in his power to do me a great kindness. When those private letters were, by a most unprincipled person, thrown upon the market, and they were eagerly clutched at by bitter enemies, who wished to crush me even lower than I was—being then in prison—and he was called upon by certain evil-disposed persons to act as a member of a smelling committee to nose among those private letters, and hold an inquest over them to decide how they could best be used to my injury, if he had taken a charitable view of the matter and said: "True, these letters are not in good taste; it is a wonder how a person could write such a number of letters of this kind, but there is nothing criminal in them. They propose the violation of no law, human or divine, nor the practice of any species of immorality. They are strictly of a private character; they were not written for the public, and the public has no business with them. The writer doubtless was worse than wasting his time in penning them, but he had a right to act foolishly if he wished, and as he has harmed no one by them, as they were written two years ago; as the writer has worked industriously in the cause of Freethought; as the publication of these letters can do no possible good, and especially as the writer is now serving out a severe and unjust sentence in prison, I advise their being destroyed. Their publication will only be adding injury to an already deeply injured man, and can do no possible good to the Liberal cause by bringing scandal upon it, and will place in the hands of our enemies the weapons with which to destroy us." Had Mr. Underwood taken that sensible view of the matter, and spoken those charitable words, in all probability those letters would never hav been published, that great sorrow would not hav been brought upon my head, and the Liberals of America would hav been saved an unnecessary grief. True, it would hav been better had the letters not been written, but as they were written, and the public had not been annoyed with them, it would hav been far better to let them remain in the privacy for which they were intended and entirely fitted. But, on the contrary, Mr. Underwood exhibited the possession of a very uncharitable spirit. He seemed to vie with my foes; he joined in the unkind foray upon an imprisoned man, and evinced a disposition to ruin me, if possible. He declared I must be "crushed;" he was privy to the publication of my private correspondence, if he did not advise it, and he has said a great many unkind things about me since, and several things untrue. This, taken together with the secrecy observed in the conspiracy, the concert of action on the part of Ellis, Underwood, Abbot, Bundy, and perhaps Comstock; the extra effort and expense to mail ten to twenty thousand extra copies of slanderous sheets; the dishonorable use of names from a stolen mail-list, by which thousands of my friends were reached, the resumption of the unkind attacks upon me since I came out of prison, the unmanly and dastardly circulars printed and mailed by the thousand to my friends and patrons; the inability to deny the meeting of the Smelling Committee in Greenwood; all these combined point out most unmistakably a greater amount of wrong done to an inoffensiv individual, who had not indulged in the slightest wish to injure any one, a greater amount of unkind, cruel, unmanly treatment than is often met with, the culpability of which, the writing of a thousand indiscreet private letters would not equal.

As Mr. Underwood has condemned me so unmercifully, and has been so utterly disgusted with my conduct, it is perhaps but natural that I should return the compliment upon him, and be open to conviction, that with all his disgust for other people's mistakes and bad taste, he has himself not been exactly immaculate. Possibly the white lily is a trifle whiter and purer than he. I am receiving communications in reference to some of Mr. Underwood's little peccadilloes. It is known that he has held private correspondence, more or less amatory, even with ladies. On a certain occasion a letter from a certain lady sent to the care of Mr. Underwood's friend in Dubuque, was forwarded to Thorndike, Mass., and as ill luck will sometimes hav it, this letter with "salacious" import fell into the hands of the immaculate Sara herself, whereupon it is said Benjamin, when he reached home, received such a mild and gentle dressing down that his hair, like my own, has not been very thick on the top of his head since. It is known that he has had amatory experiences in California, Illinois, and other Western states. I hav letters bearing upon these little episodes, but decline for the present to place them before the public until backed by sworn affidavits or corroborativ testimony.

I recently received a letter from one of the most prominent Liberals in the state of Iowa, in which a paragraph reads in this wise:

"On a certa inoccasion B. F. Underwood insulted a lady in Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, with an infamous proposition. This is susceptible of the clearest proof, both from the lady herself and a prominent and intelligent Liberal who happened to be near enough to hear the lady's scorching rebuke and see the cultured culprit quail and sneak away. The lady will make a statement of the facts over her own name, as well as the gentleman who overheard her remarks."

Oh, can it be possible that the spotless man of Thorndike, whom Abbot so greatly admires, and who feels such "unutterable disgust" at the failings of others, should act in that way? Who would hav thought it? It must be true, for the source from whence it comes is of the most reliable character. Knowing these facts, I would hav scorned to name them had not Mr. Underwood done me the great injury he has; and not even now, only that he, as well as myself, may be understood by the Liberals of the country just as we are. If this contemptible warfare is kept up on me, there are indications that several interesting facts, well authenticated, may be brought to light about some of these most excellent persons who are so fond of calling public attention to other people's imperfections.

Mr. Underwood has said that he pities me. Well, I will not be outdone by him in any good work—I pity him also. I think he has undertaken too large a contract. He has endeavored to make the Liberals of America believe, that his "bosom friend" F. E. Abbot is an honorable, excellent, high-minded gentleman. He never can do it. American Liberals cannot be wheedled into the belief that a man, however great professions he may make, however sonorous his pretensions to purity and morality may be, who takes pleasure in spreading broadcast over the land the private letters of a brother in distress, with a view of causing his utter ruin, and using the names upon that brother's mail list, stolen by a thief, and sending thousands of extra copies of his slanderous sheet, alike to friends and foes with the express purpose of causing the friends to be alienated, and the brother's reputation, happiness, and business to be destroyed, is a high-minded, honorable gentleman worthy of their regard and recognition. A man who will approvingly quote the abusive remarks and unmanly and false insinuations against as estimable ladies as liv upon the face of the earth is totally unworthy the respect of all true Liberals. They will far sooner accept E. C. Walker's estimate of the little maligner:

"Never let his name [Abbot's] be again spoken, save with the deepest contempt and loathing. Lower than he has descended no man can go. He has touched the almost fathomless depths of infamy; and hereafter mark as a traitor to Freethought and Liberalism, as the sworn enemy of justice and truth, as a panderer to falsehood and cowardly defamation, as the would-be assassin of innocence and virtue, as the poltroon smiter of gray-haired women and tender girls, any man who lifts his voice or wields his pen in his defense. He has made himself an outlaw. Let the fate of outlaws be his. The man who will quote without emphatic disapproval such words concerning such women as Amy Post and Lucy N. Colman is a scoundrel."

This is severe, but it is just. What Ingersoll said in speaking of another slanderer, Joseph Cook, will apply equally well to Abbot:

"When he made that statement, he wrote across the forehead of his reputation the word LIAR. He is a low, infamous man. Meanness cannot descend beyond the level of him who will endeavor to blacken the reputation of another simply because he could not answer his argument. I despise, I execrate with every drop of my blood, any man or woman who wilfully attempts to destroy the reputation of another."

Mr. Underwood may be more successful with the rest of his compeers, Ellis, McNellis, Bundy, Comstock & Co., though the prospects are not specially promising. (It may be stated in parenthesis that one of the reporters to whom the second person named told the story of her wrongs and how she was "persecuted," because she would not yield up her "virtue," has admitted that he slept with her several nights at the time he was pretending to inquire into my great impurity. If necessary, it can be proved in any court that nearly a dozen others hav been recipients of like favors. Whether the Boston meddler and interviewer who came here to find out what he could and to obtain possession of those letters was equally fortunate, is not known "on Change," but there are good grounds for suspicions. This is Ellis' "angel of heaven," and "angel of light," in whose favor he was so horrified lest she should be deprived of her "virtue." This is the "virtuous young woman" so gallantly championed by Underwood, and whom he charges me with trying to "corrupt and ruin." But I never did it.) It is presumed Mr. Underwood will continue to be honored by being associated with such persons as Abbot and the others with whom he has co-operated. If his inclinations are in that direction, I will not try to draw him away. Benjamin is joined to his idols. Let him alone. D. M. BENNETT.

Discussion of the National Financial System.

BETWEEN DR. H. H. MORRISON AND JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

DR. MORRISON'S SIXTH LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: My "errors" hav evidently disturbed my opponent's equilibrium. He took up nearly two pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER trying to break the force of my statement in reference to the enormous gains made by the national system. His language is an evasion of facts, a misapplication of my language, and a total failure to break the chain of facts I presented. In none of his letters has he referred to more than two or three of my arguments, taking up most of his space in combating one idea alone, and it the easier one to fight. I had hoped he would take up my arguments seriatum and giv a respectful and candid answer to each, but in that I hav been disappointed. My main arguments hav not even been alluded to by him. They hav been entirely evaded and passed by. My attention was attracted to the frequency with which Mr. Truesdell used the word "fiat." One would suppose he had "fiat" on the brain. It is strange how the advocates of a bad cause will grasp at and make use of any epithet however foolish or inappropriate, if it will only serve their purpose to ridicule and turn away the attention of the people from the real question at issue. My opponent surely must be enlightened enough to know that there is no legal money except "fiat" money, whether it be made of gold, silver, copper, nickel, or paper. All other kinds are but a promis to pay money, and are not a legal tender.

My opponent's boasted national bank bill is redeemable in the hated "greenback." Hated by whom? No one but those interested in their destruction, bankers, gold gamblers, and political pimps who do their bidding. But the people, those who produce all the wealth, love the "greenback" better than any money we hav ever had, notwithstanding the fact that it was dishonored by the two exceptions imposed upon it by Congress, after Congress had been manipulated by the agents from the "caverns of bullion brokers and from the saloons of the associated banks."

It does seem to me that a man who, in the light and experience of the few past years, will attempt to excuse our government for creating an untaxed, interest-bearing debt, or to defend it as right in the least, has not only "pocketed," but entirely buried his conscience. He may be ever so nice a fellow privately, but the Lord help him from his political standpoint. We of the national party regard this bonded debt as most unjust to the people and wholly unnecessary. My remedy can be found in my last. Such a debt creates castes in society, permitting those who hav the money so to invest it as to become the sharks of the community, reaping the benefits of protection to life and property by the state, while they pay not a cent for its support.

I was a little amused at my opponent's effort to prove the national circulation a "little safer" to the people than a government legal tender circulation. He admits the government is pledged for their redemption. In what? Greenbacks. My opponent does not tell his readers that a national bank could put their securities, including their specie, out of their hands, thus leaving no security for their circulation except the government bonds, while it is utterly impossible for the government to fail. I recogaize the fact that some time in the future the government will, as everything else, die, change; but I unhesitatingly say that a full legal tender paper money issued by the government and put out among the people without interest—as indicated in my last—would be the best and safest money that has ever been devised.

And this now brings me to consider the new measure of value that my opponent has been so much exercised about. And well do I know that the idea of a paper medium of exchange, although it be issued by the supreme "fiat," not based upon gold, being safe to the people, is to the average mind an absurdity. Further on I will try to elucidate this theory.

It has been stated by some political economist writers that ninety-six per cent of the exchanges are made through clearing-houses, bills of credit, etc. Be this as it may, it is sure that a very small portion are made with specie. One thing is sure, we are compelled to hav and use some kind of a paper currency.

I shall now try to giv "a reason for the faith within us," and if possible establish the truth of our theory. Individual prosperity is made sure by intelligent and remunerated labor. Industry is stimulated and mainly kept up by adequate returns for the labor bestowed. Contentment is the associate with and outgrowth of prosperity, hence only through collectiv prosperity comes general contentment, national unity, public good will, and a cheerful and faithful support of government. A medium of exchange, called money, is an absolute necessity if we would perpetuate our advanced civilization. That system of finance which will facilitate the exchanges of the products with the least friction—interest to the middleman—is the best system.

And furthermore, experience has demonstrated the fact that there should be a sufficient volume of currency to stimulate industry up to a healthy activity. Also enough to exchange the commodities—cash—in this way dispensing with the burden of debt, so as leave in the hands of toil a just reward for its services.

Again, the volume of currency needed should be year by year kept at a regular per capita amount, so that the price of commodities would be uniform, governed only by the law of supply and demand. This would help to break down the spirit of speculation, one of the curses of society.

Production should be stimulated and encouraged, while speculation should in every way—so as not to violate individual liberty—be discouraged, prohibited; and why? because production is for the general and individual good. Speculation simply transfers created wealth from the hands of those whose labor produced it to the hands of him who produces nothing. In other words, legal stealing is the real name and meaning of the modern word, "speculation."

One example. It has been published, and I suppose true, that during last year J. Gould "speculated" and made twenty million of dollars. A truly intelligent, discriminating, and provident people would put that man in the penitentiary for life; or what would be better, destroy the opportunities for such unrighteous, demoralizing, and imperial accumulations.

Some are not able to see how a legal tender government paper currency can serve the wants of business, unless it is based upon gold. I declare the making of two kinds of money, one out of a cheap and plentiful substance and based upon another made of a very costly and scarce substance, to be one of the greatest frauds of the nineteenth century.

What if we hav grown up all our lives under the system that declares by "fiat" of law that so many grains of gold, and so many grains of silver, so fine, shall be—in law—one dollar? And what if all the civilized nations hav adhered to the gold or silver standard, using one or both? Does all of that establish it as a "truth," that such a system is the true one, the best one for the well-being of humanity? We think not. We think that experience, past and present, has demonstrated it as a truth that it is, perhaps, the very worst system that could be invented. Worst for the people, but best for the class who seek to accumulate wealth without labor, without production.

Now, Mr, Truesdell, let us take the "bull by the horns," and say that the government shall first issue a full legal tender paper money, put it out in one way and another among the people, without interest, then abolish banks of every private and corporate description. This medium would circulate freely among the people without friction. The people would look upon such a money as their own child, would love it, would reverence it. But you say it has no intrinsic value and must be redeemed, or at least based upon a redeemer, even though the redeemer is ten or twenty times less in volume than the paper medium. But is not this medium redeemed every time it pays a debt, private or national, every time it is exchanged for a commodity with which to support life or to clothe or shelter the body? But my opponent will say, The time is coming when it must be redeemed with gold or the bill-holders will lose the whole of it. Well, Mr. Truesdell, suppose I acknowledge that a true statement, what of it? Let us see? My opponent will hardly dispute this proposition, viz., that said money will answer as a domestic tool of trade just so long as the present form of government shall continue; neither will it be seriously disputed that such a money would be one strong bond of union between the whole people and their government.

We will now suppose (not unreasonable) that the government has existed for five hundred or a thousand years. Up to this time the people hav lived contentedly, prosperously, their material wants well supplied, consequently plenty of time to attend to their mental and social needs. They are well supplied with all the needed commodities, having prospered for generations, free from the curse of a fluctuating volume of currency, no inflation nor contraction to disturb prices, nor the curse of the monopolization of the money, or the imposition of high rates of interest; no paupers, no millionaires, no castes in society, nor privileged classes. They hav all been able to accumulate and lay by more or less specie as well as the other commodities.

This is picture No. 2. Now let us look at picture No. 1. Now suppose this present financial system to hav been in force for five hundred or a thousand years. We find that the people hav lived in a continual state of unrest; a high rate of interest has eaten up their substance and driven them from their once happy homes. Bank inflation periodically has stimulated speculation rather than production. Contraction, like the spider's web, caught most of the energetic speculators and bankrupted them. The people hav allowed a privileged few called bankers to furnish the medium of exchange, and charged them usurious rates for the same, expanding and contracting the volume to suit their own cupidity. The wealth created by the people has been through this and kindred systems swallowed up, the masses reduced to serfs or tenants at will; hundreds of thousands of paupers on one side, on the other side a few landlords and money millionaires. And what about the money when the change comes? A few thousand individuals or corporate banks hav furnished the paper medium, and it makes no kind of difference whether their bills are based upon specie or government bonds; when the crash comes, and the government is destroyed, the result will be the same—the specie will be owned by the banks, and it will be hidden away, so that the bill-holders will not get at it. If the government should possess a considerable amount of specie, it would fall into the hands of the spoliators and be spirited out of reach of the people. And suppose my opponent's beau ideal national banks are in existence, and 'tis their bills the people hold, when the crash comes the specie will be equally as evanescent as if they were state or individual banks, while there would be no one found to honor the bond by paying specie or any other money for them. So, my readers, you can very easily perceive that when the "crash of worlds" comes, all paper money, no difference by whom issued, goes alike to the bad.

Then the question to be decided is, Will the people prefer to liv under a system that will confer prosperity, happiness, and plenty to all that will be industrious, or under the present system, which only robs and impoverishes?

As to the measure of value my opponent is so anxious to find, I will say that in all nature no such measure has been found, neither can it be. The measures of the several nations are all different, all arbitrary, all "fiat," or something worse. Congress cannot "regulate the value of money." It cannot even regulate the price to a certainty. It has declared 412½ grains of silver, 9-10 fine, to be a dollar, and the people take it in payments of debts and in exchange for commodities, yet the commercial world says the dollar of the "dads" is worth but 88 cents in gold, which shows that gold and silver fluctuate in price, not value, governed by the great law of supply and demand. I giv it as a scientific and natural truth, that money should not be made out of a substance that is liable to be effected by supply and demand. In other words, the money value should not be disturbed by any rise or fall in the commercial value, hence the importance in order to hav a true and uniform "measure of value" of making their medium out of a substance the farthest removed from fluctuations in price caused by supply and demand.

I will now attempt a condensed review of the arguments I hav presented. I hav shown that gold and silver are not the best substances out of which to coin money, and that it could be nothing less than a fraud for banks to issue paper promises based on specie; and especially so when the banks were allowed to retain the basis—specie—in their own possession. That under such a system business would be excited, then depressed, by fluctuations in the market, caused by high rates of interest and the periodical inflation and contraction of the currency. I hav to some extent shown up the infamous financial legislation of the last eighteen years: In dishonoring the greenback by placing upon it the two exceptions, thus depreciating the government's own money, and by that act creating a new and extensiv market for gold, enabling the owners thereof to bull the price, in that way depreciating government bills and credit as well, and enabling those bullion mongers to buy up the bonds at less than fifty cents on the dollar. I showed that this untaxed interest-bearing debt was wholly unnecessary. The wickedness of the national bank act, their enormous gains as compared with the gains of production, and their tremendous monopolizing power; their influence over every species of business; that they are corrupting the body politic, our commerce, and the church as well. That money should not be issued by banks, but by the government alone, and that such money should be a full legal tender, should be put out among the people without interest until a per capita volume should be reached to enable the exchanges to be made cash. That said volume should be kept at the same per capita year by year. That the rates of interest charged by the banks was usurious, and that it could not be remedied while banks were allowed to issue and control the money. That experience has proved that a government full tender paper medium will pass and serve to the fullest extent the purposes of a domestic money; that such a money would be a strong bond of union between the people and their government.

I hope that my opponent will, for once, get down to the main questions at issue, and especially this one involving the full tender government paper money. If you can, giv a true reason for not adopting the new system as set forth above, in preference to the present or past systems. Disprove if you can that our system would be better for the people, the producers, but not for the non-producers.

Mr. Editor, I am not done, but this discussion must close. In justice to myself I will say that this article has been written under very unfavorable conditions. I hav been so feeble in health that I was compelled to lie down and rest several times during the writing. My readers as well as my opponent will be kind enough to make due allowance for any mistake. I hav been a little severe on the originators of our financial wrongs, but courteous to my opponent. I did not expect him to agree to my statements or arguments, but I think he has failed to disprove them.

Dear readers, I seriously believe that on the proper settlement of this question depends our prosperity, happiness, and our liberties. If health and time will permit, I shall during the next six months write several articles upon this most important subject, if you, Mr. Editor, will find room in your paper for them.

With kindest regards for you personally, Mr. Truesdell, I now respectfully close. H. H. MORRISON.

That "Friendly Challenge."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As I am not, hav not been, and do not intend to became a "pugilistic Spiritualist" (the assertion in your last issue to the contrary), I will with your permission put on record my reasons for not accepting the invitation to participate in the "friendly" discussion, proposed by your correspondent, W. F. Jamieson.

1. The essential and fundamental difference between Spiritualists and Materialists has been in controversy ever since "faith" was dogmatically put forth as the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen," without any corresponding benefit to science or philosphy.

2. The above conclusion, however uncomplimentary to the ancients, is none the less true of their modern representivs, since "neither Materialism nor Spiritualism (to use the language of Maudsley), are scientific terms," . . and it would seem to be full time that vague and barren disputation concerning Materialism and Spiritualism should end; and that instead of continuing such fruitless and unprofitable discussion, men should apply themselves diligently to discover by direct interrogation of nature, how much can be done"—scientifically. The more, as experience and good authority agree in teaching, "the only questions nature hears are experiments; the only answer she givs—phenomena" (Liebig).

3. The rank and file of the men and women who hav studied the phenomena of "Od," mesmeric trance, somnambulism, double consciousness, catalepsy, clairvoyance, "second sight," mind-reading, and other phenomena classified as Spiritual, are agreed in asserting they find more certainties supporting the conclusion of a conscious personal existence after death in such phenomena than hav been accounted for or explained away by the most skilful application of the Materialistic philosophy. They are therefore satisfied with the logic of facts as they find them in history, biography, personal experience, and modern life, concluding that so much uniformity of evidence from witnesses separated by time, space, education, religion, health, and disease is possible and conceivable only on the inference that "death does not end all," nor prevent the "the spirits" from reporting progress to their earthly friends. This is their essential and ultimate generalization, whatever mistakes may grow out of their superficial acquaintance with some of the phenomena, and this ultimate is not likely to be seriously disturbed by the results of the proposed "friendly" discussion.

4. Practical, no less than theoretical, reasons justify the above conclusion, and among them the growing desire to concentrate the liberal sentiment of the country against the foes of progress.

The how and why of personal differences in the make-up of the mind no less than the development of the body belong to anthropology, but the right "to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" is a part of the nation's faith, and should not be made secondary to any issue, so long as Freethinkers and physiological reformers go to prison for opinion's sake. Too much attention therefore cannot be given to the upbuilding of the Liberal League movement, so long as the government supports the church in the assumption of constructiv crime; and I for one will find more pleasure in secularizing the nation's theology than in any or all "pugilistic" encounters that grow out of mere personal and private beliefs.

This last reflection is suggestiv of my preferences after listening to or reading after the advocates of Materialism for nearly thirty-five years; and all the more, as I find their canons of criticism to be much more idiosyncratic than scientific, however serviceable some of them may hav been in detecting Spiritualistic fraud and exposing religious hypocrisy and humbug. But should the "friendly challenge" eventuate in a written discussion, and find a publisher in the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I doubt not I will giv it a careful reading, though I must continue to desire more practical and less speculativ issues among reformers. Yours for more fraternity of effort,

J. H. W. TOOHEY.

W. F. Jamieson's "Friendly Challenge" Accepted.

MR. JAMIESON, Dear Sir: I hav read your letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER challenging Spiritualists everywhere to debate, and intimating that such hardly dare to meet you and the other Materialistic Goliaths of the country in a fair discussion of the question of a future life for man. I take this method of informing you and all other gentlemen of your ilk that I hold myself ready to meet you, and will gladly do so in debate upon the rostrum in this village. Come hither, my brother, and "let us reason together" in a six-evenings discussion on this subject. Suit yourself as to time. My professional engagements are such as to forbid my leaving the field of my present operations at this time, or I would "meet you half way," for geographically we are as far apart as we are in our convictions upon the subject of human destiny—that is, if you are sincere (sine serus), which I accord to you, and yet your position is so anomalous that a question of your entire sincerity has been honestly raised by many of your friends, and many of them think that you are so full of debate that, unable to find your match worth a cent among the Campbellites, Second Adventists, etc., and "spoiling for a fight," eager for the fray, you hav turned upon what you once thought you knew to be true, and with your sledge-hammer of logic, metaphysics, speculation, and so forth, like the cynics in ancient Grecian philosophy, you "take the other side;" and just about as well one side as the other. Very well, brother; you shall hav your fill of it for once—Deo volente; and whether that imaginary gentleman (Mr. Deo) is willing or not, if you are, we'll hav a test of skill, a passage at arms, a measure of swords, coûte qu'il coûte.

I make this acceptance of your challenge public for the reason that I once privately challenged one of your ilk—a big gun in Materialism, I mean Mr. B. F. Underwood; and in his letter, which I hav on file, declining to publicly discuss the question of a future life for man, he assigns two reasons for so doing which let the man down so low in my estimation that I hav not felt any respect for him since, not even enough to prompt me to reply to him by private letter; and I should not hav made reference to him here but for the wording of your letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 22d ult. Mr. Underwood's "reasons" for declining a public discussion were two in number: 1. "I hav no time to devote to a discussion of that kind." (Yet, to my certain knowledge, he was in Chicago three or four days and nights just about the time I named in my challenge, and we might just as well hav had a set-to for three evenings as not, as I resided there at that time.) 2. "You and I are making common cause against a common foe; therefore," etc.

My address is Norwich, N. Y.; and I hav been doubted by such Spiritualists as J. M. Peebles and Giles B. Stebbins because of my Watkins lecture in 1878 at the Freethinkers' Convention (both of whom criticised me sharply in the Banner of Light, and I was denied the privilege of a defense by the editor of that paper), and claimed to be a Materialist by T. L. Brown and others. These parties are all mistaken as to my position. True Materialism is not antagonistic with true Spiritulism. But of course annihilation of man as an individuality is diametrically opposed to the doctrin of a future life for man. But come along when it suits you; bear one-half the expenses and I will bear the other half, and we will discuss. Fraternally yours,

Norwich, N. Y., May 26th. T. B. TAYLOR, M D.

Prof. Jamieson's "Friendly Challenge."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just read W. F. Jamieson's "Friendly Challenge" to discuss the merits of Spiritualism, and in the same friendly spirit I would, as a necessary preliminary, look the Professor over as well as his friendly challenge. I hav just listened to a part of a course of lectures by the Professor at Saranac, and all of another at Lowell; hav in the mean time conversed with him many hours; hav his friendly challenge before me, and therefore consider myself qualified to judge of what kind of a job we Spiritualists hav on hand, as well as what is needed as to the preliminaries.

Knowing Prof. Jamieson as well as I do, it would be necessary, before entering upon a public discussion, to hav a clearer understanding than can possibly be had from his challenge. He should be required to state what he would regard as absolute proof "at the age of twenty" as well as at "the age of forty" and eighty, first, last, and all the time. In my conversation with him I could gain no admission from him that Spiritualists had any evidence whatever. He declared that all the facts, tests, and proofs upon which Spiritualism is based will yet be explained away by men of science through the discovery of some as yet undiscovered law of the mind.

Such speculation must not be admitted in a public discussion. If speculation must be resorted to by Mr. Jamieson, then his cause is not worth championing. Spceculation is not science.

He states his position with "scientific" exactness and marvelous clearness, thus:

What was evidence to my mind at twenty years of age proved to be no evidence at forty. I now do not think that the "wonders" of Spiritualism, all put together, demonstrate the existence of any spirit or mind after the death of its body. I do not say that there is no spiritual world, but I do say that the probability is that when a man dies he is as dead as a dog; and a dog, when it dies, is as dead as a door nail as far as I know, i. e., I do not know that the canine will not liv always. When he stops breathing, the probability is just as good for one as the other, from all appearances, not to liv. Admitted, as science teaches, that appearances are deceptiv, I wish that Spiritualists could demonstrate their thesis. I offer them an opportunity to bring forward their demonstration. Will they do so?

Perhaps I ought to be satisfied with the above masterpiece of logic as a statement of Mr. Jamieson's position, but knowing what I do of his speculativ science, and of his tendency to turn scientific, Spiritualistic, and Materialistic somersaults, I deem it essential to hav a clear statement from him of what he considers absolute proofs of identity and a future existence beyond death. Let him state just how he would absolutely identify his wife, child, father, mother, or friend to-day, or should he meet them in a foreign land. If he will not accept physical nor intellectual tests from them to prove their identity and existence, how and by what means can they satisfy him that they are the persons they claim to be. If he is going to put Spiritualism into a strait-jacket of absolute negation and speculation, and declare us to be no better than lunatics and idiots; if he, with his hide-bound and speculativ science, is going to ask us to appear before an audience while he tells them, in behalf of speculativ science, we are idiotic, that we are deluded and deceived, he is mistaken. Self-respect on our part demands that Mr. Jamieson shall not hav the privilege of heaping upon us the humiliation of denying our facts and reducing our knowledge to zero.

Mr. Jamieson must agree to use no speculativ science, must agreee to remember that absolute negations and assertions in debate mean nothing, unless backed up by argument; must not pronounce upon my facts and knowledge only by reasonable argument; must state what he will accept as absolute proof, and what proofs or evidence he accepted at twenty and reduced to zero at forty; and then somebody may be found, perhaps, who will discuss this question with him.

My experience with Prof. Jamieson has made me rather cautious. It reminds me of the Irishman and the flea, "now you'v got him, and now you havn't."

Recently the Professor visited this locality, giving a course of lectures both at Saranac and Lowell. At Saranac I asked him the following question: "If you were in spirit life, how would you manifest to your friends here so that they might, in your judgment, receive absolute proof of your identity and existence? His reply was: "Spirits claim to be able to gather from the atmosphere elements, and to clothe themselves in the same so as to become visible. I would do that." This was accepted by those present as what he considered absolute proof. In Lowell, in his lecture on "Evolution," he stated that there was absolutely no proof of a future existence, that the world was absolutely in the dark; that not a ray of light, intelligence, or evidence had ever been furnished or discovered to prove that we liv after death.

The next day I asked Mr. Jamieson what he did with the great mass of authenticated facts which Spiritualists claim to hav and accept as scientific proofs of a future life; what he did with the fact that thousands of the ablest and most trustworthy of the race, who stand unimpeached in any sense, claim to hav seen their parents, fathers, mothers, wives, brothers, sisters, and children, in all the naturalness and completeness of their former existence, accompanied with names, incidents, physical and intellectual tests which belonged to and could come from no other source; what he did with all this. His answer was, "I think they were deceived."

Again, I asked, "If you yourself should witness the materialization of your friends as others claim to hav seen theirs, what would you do with it?" He replied, "I should think I was deceived—that it was an illusion."

In both instances witnesses were present, who remember distinctly both questions and answers, and if need be, their names will be given, with statements, etc. When questioned in Lowell, he evidently had forgotten our conversation at Saranac, or perhaps evidence to him in Saranac would not be evidence in Lowell—another instance of evidence reduced to zero; a Jamiesonian somersault equaled only by the twenty-forty affair of which the Professor speaks in his challenge.

I listened to his lecture on "Evolution," and was surprised that throughout he should ignore utterly mind or intelligence. I did not suppose it possible for even a Materialist to deliver a lecture on this grand subject without at least alluding to the evolution of mind or intelligence. It was mattter, matter, matter, nothing else; and so far as his lecture would prove, nothing has ever occurred but simply a change in the relative positions of atoms. He started with nebulous matter, followed it through all its geological stratifications and distributions, went into raptures over the wonderful magnitude and number of worlds and suns that revolve in space, and then ended by the "scientific" deduction that man by comparison shrank into such utter insignificance that he was not worth being carried forward into a future existence any more than the merest worm. This was the only allusion to man in the entire lecture. It was a gigantic effort to belittle man by comparison, and reduce him to zero.

I find everything Mr. Jamieson said on the subject of evolution in works on astronomy, physical geography, and geology. I am disposed to criticise Prof. Jamieson for his inconsistency, as well as charge him with injustice toward his friends and allies. I asked him if he would please be just enough to us, his Spiritualistic friends, who were advertising, sustaining, and entertaining him, to say to his audiences, when speaking of this matter of evidence, that we claim to hav evidence that satisfies us and that we regard as absolute proof. Straightening himself with all the dignity of a conqueror of worlds, he said, "The man on the rostrum is the one who is to decide what he is to say." Just so. But the man who don't occupy the rostrum can decide what he shall accept as truth, and what he shall criticise.

Again I demand as a necessary preliminary a statement of what he would consider absolute proof of personal identity, what would be proofs of a future existence and spirit communion, that he could stand by at least while he is traveling from one town to another; also why he ignores, in his lecture on "Evolution," intelligence, mind, and man, and especially why he accepts the services and money of Spiritualists, and then insults them by declaring that not a ray of evidence has ever been received of a life beyond the grave.

National Convention of Physicians.

A call is issued for a Convention to be held at Chicago, August 24, 1880, of liberally disposed and progressive physicians who are in favor of more generous rules and more liberal ideas in the medical profession. There is an orthodoxy in medicin nearly as onerous as in theology. There is a wide-spread desire among medical men to inaugurate a reform in this matter, to meet and protest against the cast-iron rule of intolerance in medical practice, and substitute in place of it a more liberal and less exclusiv influence and control.

The old allopathic system of practice is in medicin what the orthodox church is in religion, and seeks to arrogate to itself all the privileges, emoluments, and honors pertaining to the practice of medicin and the treatment of disease. They would strike down and cast into obloquy all who presume to differ from them and the dictum—the infallible dogmas—which their schools hav set up and commanded all to bow to. There are many intelligent minds greatly disposed to revolt at this iron control, and to assert the independence and freedom which is their natural rights. Such will meet in convention as above indicated. Let all who feel interested in this direction write to Dr. J. Stolz, Minneapolis, Minn., and obtain a circular containing the call and reasons for the convention. He says therein:

"This departure will be no second-class affair. Some of the most respected, well-known, and thoroughly scientific men and women hav already expressed a willingness to come and to work. Also several medical colleges hav responded." DR. J. STOLZ.

AT West Pawlet, Vt., the other night, the sparks from a burning building set fire to the Baptist Bank (the place where the Baptists deposit their money, and hav been depositing it for a good many years; it is a bank that pays neither interest nor principal, and stockholders are liable to assessment). The cashier and teller (the man who takes their money and tells them that they will go to hell if they don't shell out) lived quite a distance from the scene, so he could not coax and persuade God Almighty to put it out. The Lord was sulky about something, and didn't put in an appearance. So the elect had to straddle the ridgepole and throw water on the shingles to keep them from taking fire. Surely a God hasn't much business ability who won't look after his own property. He saved the Hebrew children from the fiery furnace, and why didn't he help save his church?

Judaism.—Continued.

[Taken from the article on Judaism in Volume II. of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," which we wrote in prison, and which is now rapidly being put in type, and in a few weeks will be ready for our readers. By these extracts some idea of the entire work may be formed.]

There were seventy souls of Jacob's descendants who thus left Canaan and moved into Egypt; and there they remained, according to one statement, four hundred and thirty years; but according to the chronology of the Bible, as well as according to the statement of Josephus, it was but two hundred and fifteen years, or four generations. In this short time the most remarkable increase took place among them that was ever heard of upon the face of the earth. From those seventy souls in two hundred and fifteen years they increased to two or three millions; for on the day they left Egypt they had six hundred thousand men of war; and according to the usual proportion of fighting men to the entire population there must hav been three millions of the Israelites who left Egypt, necessitating each mother to bear, including the usual ratio of deaths, fully one hundred children each; but if the Lord helped them sufficiently, possibly they could do it, and even five times as many more.

It is unnecessary to detail the marvelous story about how Moses, after performing the most astounding miracles in producing the "plagues" upon Egypt, and borrowing of the people of that country their jewelry, precious stones, and valuable wearing apparel, was able to effect the exit of his three millions of men, women, and children, with all their live stock and luggage, from that long, narrow country in a single night, making a forced march of some sixty miles through the desert to the Red Sea, which opened for them just at the right moment to let the hosts of Israel pass through on dry land, and returned just in time to overwhelm and drown every man of the armies of Egypt that were in pursuit. It is unnecessary to narrate here how Moses, with the aid of the pillar of smoke by day and the pillar of fire by night, led this vast body of people forty years through the arid desert and wilderness, during which time they were fed with manna which fell from heaven six days in the week, and refreshed with water produced by miracle from rocks and other places. The receiving of the Ten Commandments on Mount Sinai, the minute instructions how to construct the ark, the mercy seat, the tabernacle, the court, the altar and all appurtenances, the enunciation of numerous and various laws, are familiar to all, and they can easily be found by turning to Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. It will there be learned that God and Moses were forty years in leading the chosen people from Egypt to Canaan, which distance the sons of Jacob several times made in a few days, and which a horse could travel in one or two days. It will there be seen that Moses and Aaron died before the promised land was reached, and that it was reserved for Joshua to lead the people across the Jordan, which kindly parted and walled itself up on the other side to let the people over dry shod. In the book of Joshua will be read about the wars, bloodshed, carnage, and devastation which God's chosen people carried into the land of promise; and how hundreds of thousands of people, including women and sucking babes, were put to death, their cities often destroyed, and their property and homes taken and given to God's sons and daughters. It will be found in the tenth chapter, how, in order that Joshua and his army might hav sufficient time to complete the bloody work of slaughter in which they were engaged, Joshua had only to command the sun and moon to stand still, and they obeyed him, not moving again for nearly the length of a day.

In Judges they will learn how, after Joshua was gathered to his fathers, the people were governed for over three hundred years by judges, elders, and chieftains, until the time Saul was anointed king, but who, after a short and troublous reign, fell in battle by the sword of a Philistine, as one statement has it; but, as by another, by his own hands. After his death his son, Ish-bosheth, succeeded him as king of Israel, while David was king of Judah. After a reign of two years Ish-bosheth was assassinated, and David became king of both Israel and Judah. His reign continued for forty years, during which time he brought the nation from a state of disorganization, poverty, and semi-barbarism, to one of wealth, stability, and glory. David stated before his death (1 Chron. xxii, 14) that during his reign he had laid by 100,000 talents of gold, and 1,000,000 talents of silver, toward building a house for the Lord, being in value equal to $4,297,700,000, or twice the amount of our national debt. By weight, there must hav been in round numbers 10,000,000 pounds of gold, or 4,400 tons. But as that amount is considerably more than he turned over to his son and successor, it is probable some mistake was made in the statement. David's was a bloody reign, but Solomon's was peaceful and glorious. He built the temple for the Lord, 110 feet long, 36 wide, and 55 high, with a porch 18 by 36 feet, but he had to go to a neighboring nation for the timber and for mechanics to do the work. It required 153,000 men seven years to construct it.

Solomon's reign also lasted forty years, and he was succeeded by his son Rehoboam; but serious dissensions arose and the kingdom became divided, two tribes of Judah remaining under Rehoboam, and ten tribes taking Jeroboam for their king. The two sections frequently engaged in civil war. One day one hundred and twenty thousand men of Judah were slain, and five hundred thousand of the warriors of Israel in a single day on another occasion. Several unsuccessful reigns of kings of Israel followed, when in the ninth year of King Hoshea, Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, came up against the children of Israel and conquered them and carried the ten tribes of Israel away into captivity, whence they never returned. The kingdom of Judah struggled on with good and bad kings about one hundred and twenty years more, when, under the reign of Jehoiachin, Nebuchadnezzar, of Babylon, came up and captured Jerusalem. Jehoiachin, and ten thousand of the people were taken captiv to Babylon together with the treasures of the house of the Lord that had been placed there by Solomon. Zedekiah succeeded Jehoiachin, but ten years later he came to serious grief. Nebuchadnezzar paid Jerusalem another visit, took Zedekiah prisoner, put his eyes out, slew his sons, carried the king to Babylon, where he was kept in prison till his death. The king of Babylon carried also the people captiv to his own city. He sent his general, Nebuchadnezzar, to Jerusalem, and he burnt the temple, the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and the walls of the city were broken down. The pillars of brass in the temple, the basins, the brazen sea, the pots, shovels, fire-pans, bowls, and other appurtenances of value belonging to the temple, were taken to Babylon. The Jewish sacred writings were also destroyed.

The Babylonish captivity continued fifty years, when Cyrus of Persia, who had conquered the Chaldeans, issued an order that all the Jews who wished could return to their former country, and could rebuild Jerusalem and the temple. It is stated that forty-two thousand of the people accompanied Ezra and Nehemiah, two priests, back to Judea. After various troubles and delays, in about fifteen years the second temple, with much trouble, was completed, but it fell far short in grandeur of the temple which Solomon built. The Jews never became powerful again, though they accumulated considerable wealth. When the power of Persia declined they acknowledged the rule of Alexander the Great, the conqueror of the Persians, and helped, according to their feeble means, to aid his generals. In 360 B C Ptolemy, king of Egypt, took possession of Palestine, but allowed the Jews the enjoyment of their religious customs and opinions. They gained nothing in taking part in the contests between the Syrian and Egyptian kings, on the side of the former (197 B C.), for the Syrian Seleucidæ considered their possessions as lawful subjects of plunder. Seleucius IV. attempted to plunder their temple, and Antiochus IV., in order to reduce them to a conformity with the rest of his subjects, determined to destroy their religion. His pretext for this was the shameful spectacle of intrigue and corruption displayed at the Syrian court, in the rivalry of the priests and nobles for the dignity of high-priest; but notwithstanding the cruelties he inflicted upon the remnant of Jews left, they adhered, with their characteristic obstinacy, to the forms of what is called Mosaic worship. When, therefore, Antiochus set up the Olympian Jupiter for worship in the temple, and compelled the Jews to sacrifice and eat swine, many suffered the most terrible deaths rather than transgress their recognized rites and laws. In vain was Jerusalem and the surrounding country laid desolate. These cruel persecutions only served to develop a national spirit, which broke out in the insurrection of the Maccabees. Judas, surnamed Maccabæus (the hammer), was the third son of a priest who had fled with his family from persecution, and had collected in the mountains of Judea a band of faithful believers. With their assistance he defeated the Syrians, took Jerusalem, and restored their national worship (165 B C.).

A new epoch of glory and renown—by some thought to be the greatest the Jewish nation ever really did enjoy—began under the government of the Maccabees. Three brothers of this family of heroes—Judas, Jonathan, and Simon—bore successivly the dignity of the high-priest, and completed their deliverance from the Syrian yoke. Simon, whom the gratitude of the people had created a prince, left his son John Hyrcanus (135 B C.) an independent kingdom, secured by an alliance with the Romans. The latter extended it by his victories over the Idumæans and Samaritans, and confirmed it by the establishment of the high council, or Sanhedrim. The reign of Hyrcanus was distinguished for the progress of civilization among the people and the increasing prosperity of the nation. In his time also arose the sects of Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, and others of smaller note. His son Judas Aristobolus received the royal dignity (105 B.C.), and the Jewish state bid fair to increase in strength and national vigor, especially since Alexander Jannæus, the successor of Aristobolus, took Gaza in a successful war against Egypt; but the contentious sects named gave rise to civil dissensions and proved a curse to the nation. After the death of Queen Salome (70 B C.), who was ruled by the Pharisees, the succession was disputed by her sons Hyrcanus and Aristobolus.

The war between the brothers introduced foreign umpires into the country. Pompey conquered Judea (63 B.C.), according to the Roman policy, for the weak Hyrcanus. This result put an end to the new freedom for the Jews. Jerusalem lost its walls, the kingdom its new conquests, the nation its independence, and the family of the Asmoneans (the illustrious, a title borne by the Maccabees) its royal dignity. Hyrcanus was made high-priest and ethnarch, and each Jew became a tributary to the Romans. It was in vain that the sons of Aristobolus endeavored by repeated insurrections to restore the former state of things. The Roman power kept the people in chains, and a false friend (Antipater of Idumæa) introduced himself as a Roman procurator into the family of Hyrcanus to effect its ruin. While the Asmoneans were struggling for independence, Herod, the Antipater's son, was securing the kingdom for himself at Rome. Antigonus, son of Aristobolus II., who had maintained himself for five years in Jerusalem by the assistance of the Parthians, was expelled by the new king Herod 35 B C, and the last of the Asmoneans was put to death. The name of this foreign king, who acquired the name of Great by maintaining himself amidst many difficulties, was of no advantage to the country. The doubtful character of his faith made the chief men who were dependent on him indifferent to the ancient religion; and the murders which he committed in his own family, as well as the unceasing oppressions of the Romans, filled the people with general discontent.

The worship of the Jews constantly degenerated more and more into empty forms, and the licentiousness of the court contaminated all ranks and classes of the people. This was the situation of the Jewish people at the time Jesus is said to hav been born. Herod survived this event but a short time; but with all he or his successors could do, with the advice and help of the Pharisees, the inevitable fate of the Jewish people could not be averted. Under the feeble princes who succeeded Herod the country soon came to be treated merely as a Roman province. Oppressed by the procurators, precluded from the exercise of their religion, the infuriated people broke out into a rebellion (A.D. 66), which terminated in the total destruction of the Jewish state. September 7, A.D. 70, Titus took Jerusalem by assault, burned the temple, demolished the city, and sold into slavery or drove into exile all the inhabitants who escaped death. About 110,000 Jews perished during the siege and in the destruction of the city. There was no suffering which this unhappy people did not undergo. Though they believed themselves to be the chosen people of God, or at the very least the descendants of his chosen children, their sufferings were hardly ever surpassed by any people who could lay no claims to such divine partiality. Those who took refuge in the mountains and the ruins of the city were compelled, after many unsuccessful efforts, to abandon their country, now changed into a barren desert; and they scattered and became permanent exiles in nearly all the nations of the earth, in which condition they hav since remained.

Thus we hav a brief sketch of the children of Isaac, from their claimed origin in the man Abraham down through their servitude in Egypt, their forty years' exodus through the arid desert, their bloody wars of conquest in the land of Canaan with nativ inhabitants of the country, the broken rule of three hundred years by judges and chieftains, their several captivities, the generally disastrous reigns—continuing for five hundred years—of their kings, their civil and other wars, the destruction of their city and temple, their captivity in Babylon, and their subsequent efforts to build up their nation until they were finally conquered and dispersed. During all their rises and falls, their successes and vicissitudes, they were subject to natural causes and conditions the same as all other nations and peoples. Whatever in their history cannot be relegated to the domain of cause and effect is purely of a mythical character, and the legends upon which it rests are greatly to be doubted. Among these are the opening of the Red Sea and the river Jordan, the existing of 3,000,000 of people for forty years in the desert without food, drink, or clothing, the constant attendance of the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, the constant fall of manna, the immense supply of quails, the stopping of the sun and moon for twelve hours to enable them to slay more people who were fighting for their homes and little ones, and much else of a similar character. These extravagances are undoubtedly of a purely mythical character, and never had a real existence.

T. L. Savage Again.

BOSTON, MASS., June 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In your reply to my letter of May 31, 1880, you seem to giv more credit to your informer than a simple statement over an open signature. If I am rightly informed, the party you refer to does not make any pretension to honesty, for in a conversation with me in presence of reliable parties, he said, when being remonstrated with for defending crooked transactions, that he was not honest.

In regard to Mr. Underwood, I hav no evidence that he read those letters at my house on the 21st of September or any other date. Very truly yours, THEO. L. SAVAGE.

REPLY.—We assuredly do giv credit to the word of our friend who informed us that T. L. Savage told him that Underwood and Ellis were at his house together, and there looked over our private letters, and that Ellis wrote the matter which appeared in the R.-P. Journal and Index, and that Ellis went to Chicago and assisted Bundy on the Journal. We believe what this friend told us because we know him to be a man of truth and honor. We further believe it because there has been no denial of it. Four weeks hav passed by since the statement was made, and nobody has denied it that we are aware of. Mr. Savage did not deny it in his note of last week, but simply claimed that he was not present, but in Boston. Ellis has not denied it. Underwood has not denied it. Even Mr. Savage does not deny it in the above note. He only says he has "no evidence that Mr. Underwood read those letters at his house on the 21st of September or any other date." Now that is evasiv and dishonest, and virtually confesses all that is charged. He knows whether Messrs. Underwood and Ellis passed a part of the day at his house in Greenwood on the 21st of September last, and in the latter part of the day together attended the lecture of George Jacob Holyoake in Parker Memorial Hall, Boston. Mr. Savage certainly knows whether that is the case or not. If it was so, why not say so like an honest man. If he now says it was not so, we can bring proof by most unimpeachable evidence that he said it was so soon after the event occurred. If it was not so, why do not Underwood and Ellis come out and deny it? The silence they maintain is very ominous and far from reassuring. If they were not together in the very questionable business of overhauling an old man's private letters, at the time unjustly imprisoned, it does not take long to say so, and place the public at rest in the matter.

We know not who Mr. Savage alludes to, about not being "honest." Probably he does. This we do know, that the man who gave the information to us is honest and truthful, and we believe that we can prove by a thousand people in Boston that his word would be taken with quite as much confidence as that of T. L. Savage.

Thoughts for Thinkers.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Let me ask your readers a few questions. Is mind (thought) material? If it is, can we annihilate and destroy it? Can we even change it from a concrete to an abstract condition? Can we see, feel, weigh, and handle it as matter in our scientific scales?

If mind is not matter, and thought is not material, what is it? Is it the "nothing" out of which all things were made?

If mind is matter, is matter but concreted mind? It must be a poor rule that will not work both ways. Which horn shall we take? Shall we say matter is mind, thought, word, even if it be found in the mineral, vegetable, animal, as well as spiritual kingdom?

Is mind the most ethereal form of matter? Is it capable of being the most concrete material substance? Would the most ethereal matter naturally be capable of producing the most concrete materiality?

Is man matter without mind, or mind without matter? Or shall we say man is matter-mind and mind-matter? Can man without mind realize matter as a material existence? Can he see, hear, taste, feel, and smell without mind? Can a scientific Materialist even demonstrate the existence of matter without mind? If mind givs us all the illustrations, demonstrations, recognitions, and evidences of existence that we hav, even to that of matter most concrete, is it not more than life and death? more than form and substance? aye, is it not the creativ, formativ force of the man and of the universe, ever changing from life to death and from death to life, according to its own eternal law of wisdom, love, and life's unfoldings, involvings, and evolvings for ever more?

Is mind, thought, and word working in us, both to will and to do? and yet do we not know God? Are we condemned and justified within ourselves, and yet cannot perceive the throne of God? Is there no wisdom-love that we can worship as God, presiding over and residing within our temple-house and home of the soul, of whom we can learn all wisdom, love, and truth, and in whom we can confide as children and offspring of infinit capacities and powers?

And does death end all life with us, when really it ends nothing? It never ended one single concrete atom. Concrete matter may change into other forms; it may pass into ethereality; water may arise and form a vapor in the skies; and yet all is not ended, even with that water. Combustion, expansion, and resurrection is the ascending scale of life? Put out the fire of soul and body, contract and condense to concrete materialism, is the descending scale of life. Let every one liv in his order, function, force, and power of life, saith the angel of the church of Smyrna unto the people.

An Inquirer.

Remarks.—It is not unlikely that several of our readers will feel like responding to Inquirer's questions, and that their replies will be more or less divergent, but lest others may decline to answer our correspondent, or that the disagreement in the replies given may not be fully satisfactory to our friend, we will attempt a few words in reply, and leave our remarks open to the same criticism that his inquiries invite. It so happens that we mortals do not yet know all about the intricacies and possibilities of matter. This universe which we inhabit, and of which we form a part, is a very extensiv institution, rather too much so for our limited sight to take it all into view, or for our limited minds to comprehend in its entirety. We will begin our reply by laying down substantially the same propositions that we once did on another occasion:

1. Matter is all that exists, and does all that is accomplished. Everything that is, is matter, and that which is not matter is nothing.

2. Matter is eternal, self-existent, uncreatable, and indestructible. It never had a beginning, and can never hav an end.

3. Matter, or the universe, is the supreme power, possessing omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience, so far as the latter quality has an existence.

4. Matter is ever-living and ever-changing, and is the source of all force, all motion, all life.

5. Matter is infinit in extent, infinit in form, infinit in condition, as it is infinit in existence.

6. Matter possesses immense potencies, capabilities, possibilities, and powers to perform all the intricate problems in the universe, and to meet all the necessities that may or can arise.

7. Matter moves and conducts itself in keeping with the eternal laws and forces inherent in it, which form a part of its existence, and are as eternal as itself.

8. Matter is never in an abnormal condition, never dead, never disconnected from its own laws and forces, never in a state of chaos, never inert.

9. Matter, in moving in harmony with its own great law of evolution, is ever changing from one form of existence to another, from the simple to the complex, from the crude to the attenuated, from the rudimental to the ultimate.

10. Matter cannot be acted upon by any power extraneous to it, for the reason that no such power exists. Matter, with its force, is the Most High—the All in All.

The "original form of matter" is often spoken of, but it is hardly supposable—as it has existed from all eternity, is ever changing in its combinations and conditions—that there ever was an original form of it. Whether matter was once a unit, all the elements proceeding from one simple substance or condition, is a matter of speculation and uncertainty. If the nearly four score distinct elements known to exist came from the unit or simple substance, it is probable in the endless evolution matter is making that they may ultimately return to the simple condition to go through the same intricate processes again and interminably. It is not improbable that it moves in immense cycles and circles, evolving from the nebulous condition into spheres, suns, stars, worlds, systems, constellations, and vast congeries of systems and constellations composing the universe, passing through endless forms, phases, incomputable eras, and then perhaps finally returning to the nebulous condition to aggregate and solidify and pursue a similar course of evolution over and over again.

The growth of a world is an interesting theme to contemplate. To start with matter so highly attenuated that miles of it by cubic measurement are requisit to make one ounce in weight, in comparison to which our atmosphere is a dense body, to follow it in its gradual aggregation, contraction, condensation, crystalization, and solidification, through periods of time so immense as to be impossible to be realized; to consider the inherent motion and life permeating every atom, and how the vast body of gaseous and fluid matter early, with its centripetal and centrifugal forces, assumes its orbital movements around its central sun or larger body of matter, of which it possibly once formed a part, is indeed a grand study.

But we will not linger now to contemplate all the processes of world making, but come at once to our friend's problem about matter and mind. Let us say then that mind is material, because it requires matter to produce it. It takes organization to produce thoughts, intellect. Mind, and organizations are composed of matter and force. There can be no organization without matter; there can be no thoughts without organization; there can be no mind without thoughts, so mind is a product of matter, and in one sense is matter in a highly attenuated form. Eyesight is also a product of matter. There can be no eyesight without organization, and this organization as before is composed of matter and force. It is the same with hearing, tasting, smelling, and feeling. These are all the products of organization, and all organizations are the products of matter. There is no grand central fountain of eyesight, hearing, tasting, smelling, or feeling, and equally there is none of thinking, intellect, or mind. All are produced by the intricate organizations adapted to such production. Each organization produces its own legitimate results. Seeing has to be performed with the eye and optic nerves, hearing with the delicate organization of the ear, including the tympanum and the auditory nerves; thinking by the brain and the wonderful ganglions and nervous appendages. And all these processes are kept up by the food which the stomach digests, and which is assimilated through the digestiv and circulatory systems, so that the meat, bread, and potatoes we eat, by the wonderful mill machinery which every being has within his organization, is absolutely ground up into and becomes eyesight, hearing, smelling, thoughts, and muscular strength. Without the necessary food none of these results can take place, nor can animal life continue. Each organ has its office, and cannot perform the office of another. We cannot see with the ears, we cannot hear with the mouth, nor can we think with the eyes. The brain is the organ of the mind and does the thinking, while the connecting nerves are the telegraphs to convey thoughts from the brain and sensation to it. There can be no thoughts without a brain; there can be no brain without matter; so matter does it all, aided of course by its inherent and accompanying force, and these are the source of all existence, all sensation, all life, all thoughts. As soon as there are no longer organizations, or when the organization is no longer alive and activ, there is no more sight, there is no more hearing, no more smelling, no more tasting, no more feeling, no more muscular strength, no more thinking, no more mind. When the body is dead, all its functions cease, and it immediately commences to decompose, and its component parts and elements thus being liberated are ready to add themselves to the gaseous forms of matter in nature and to unite in forming new combinations and organizations.

It is not necessary here to enter into a consideration of all the changes in matter between the crude and recently crystalized globe to the production of a thinking human being, nor of all the lower forms of life between man and the granite rocks which once formed the crust of the earth. That would require more time and space than is necessary to employ on this occasion. It is nevertheless interesting to follow up the decomposition of the granite into soils, which with the aid of light, warmth, and moisture produced vegetation, which in its turn sustained animal life, when by the same productiv powers of the universe it was brought into existence. It is most interesting to trace the continued and almost endless scale of gradations in animal life, from the monad, that cannot be perceived by the naked eye, up through the protozoans, sponges, rhizopods; radiates, including star-fishes, jelly-fishes, the coral animals etc.; mollusks, including the cuttle-fish, snails, ascidians, brachopods, etc.; articulates, embracing insects, spiders, centipedes, crabs, lobsters, worms, leeches, etc., etc.; vertebrates, including reptiles, as lizards, turtles, snakes, frogs; birds, mammals, including quadrupeds and man. Various degrees of sensation, activity, and mentality are found, all depending, of course, upon the organization. In all these forms of life, sensation and mentality are never entirely absent. The oyster has not a large share of intelligence and his powers of observation are extremely limited; the world to him is the few feet that immediately surrounds him, but he knows enough to take his food, to propagate his kind and to close his castle when danger approaches. The snail has a limited measure of life, also of intelligence, but sufficient for its needs. It can travel slowly and take the sun and air; it can put forth its feelers or horns which answer instead of eyes; it can seek and take its food, and draw within its shell or fortress when danger threatens. Its degree of intelligence is just in keeping with its organization and its position in the scale of animal life.

Those animals living in the sun-light and air hav a higher order of intelligence than those living in the soil and in the dark. Animals that can see, know much more than those which hav no eyes. The senses are a great aid in acquiring knowledge, the eyes more, probably, than other organs. The size of the animal is not necessarily the measure of its intelligence. The ant, the spider, and the honey-bee possess far more intelligence than the lobster, mammoth worms, and some reptiles, and wholly because they hav better organizations for producing it.

Nothing is more definitely settled than that the brain is the organ of the mind. If all the minor details of phrenology are not fully conceded, the basic truth that the mind depends upon the brain, and that the character of the mind can be told from the size, form, and contour of the brain, is hardly longer denied. Animals hav brains, and think just as really as men do, but not so perfectly, and exactly because their mental organization is less perfect. The different classes of animals differ largely in this respect, and some are much more capable of learning than others. In the human race there is also a great diversity in amount of mind and intellect possessed by different individuals. This is often seen in members of the same family. One may hav a strong, vigorous intellect while another is weak and idiotic. This depends entirely upon the brain and the physical organization. A strong, comprehensiv, well-balanced mind cannot come from a weak, ill-developed brain. An idiot has not a high capacious front brain; and a reasoning, philosophic mind will not emanate from a low, narrow, receding forehead.

The brain is as much the organ for thinking (or mind), as the stomach is for digestion, the heart for the circulation of the blood, the liver for secreting the bile, the muscles for physical strength, the ears for hearing, the nose for smelling, the eyes for seeing, or the organs of speech for uttering language. The production of thought by the action of the brain is not much more wonderful than that of sight by the eye, hearing by the ear, etc. It must be seen, then, that thought and mind are just as much a material production as any other function of the body, and the idea is almost unthinkable that there can be a great sea or reservoir of intelligence from which every individual draws as he needs. The intellect which each individual possesses is manufactured in his own system, and by the organization he is in possession of. Mind, then, is material, coming from matter, if not matter itself. As it requires the consumption of a certain amount of food to produce muscular strength, so it must be of mind or brain strength. Food is necessary to sustain both processes, and so action of the muscles and action of the brain necessitate a waste, or rather a change in form of the proper amount of matter. This force or form of matter is ethereal and highly developed, but perhaps not the most ethereal form which matter is capable of assuming. It is impossible to set bounds to the possibilities of matter, whether in the direction of materialization, or otherwise. As not a grain of matter can possibly be destroyed or pass out of existence, it is only reasonable to suppose that whatever matter is required in the production of mind, sight, or muscular strength, when these longer exist, passes into other forms and conditions.

But mind is not creativ. Nothing is creativ. Nothing can be created. Change and evolution are all that can be accomplished, and these are perpetually taking place.

As to wisdom, love, truth, etc., they are qualities in human character. We can see them in our fellow-beings, and it is very proper that we should revere those qualities, and that amounts to worship, if that term is preferred. They by no means exist as individualities separate from human beings. No one can do better than to pay the highest respect to them wherever found. They cannot be too highly esteemed.

With regard to the existence of the soul and a continued life, the subject will be touched upon in our next, in reply to another inquiry, space not being sufficient in this issue.

Speaking of going to Europe, we are a little afraid our friends are not particularly anxious we should represent them at the Freethinkers' Congress which meets at Brussels in a few weeks. We are willing to go if the means necessary to meet the expenses of the trip are forthcoming, but we tell the truth when we assure our readers we are not able to defray the expenses ourselves. Those who wish us to represent them across the water will please manifest it by remitting such moderate amounts as they feel like contributing. If every one who is able will giv a little, the trip can be easily accomplished. Those who do not want us to go will of course giv nothing.

Kersey Graves writes: "We are going to get up a series of grove-meetings in this state [Ind.], also a mass state convention, and will want you with us. I am in better condition now than for years past. My voice is improving, and that is all I lack. I see they hav had a big Bennett boom. Well, I am sorry I could not take part in it." The Liberals of Indiana should keep Bro. Graves constantly in the field, for he is one of our ablest men and a telling and popular speaker.

The Preacher After his Brethren Aain.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I became pastor of a small church. I soon became unpopular with the ministry, because I opposed their plans to get money. At all times when I see a popular minister I am satisfied he is a wire-puller. No man can succeed unless he is in the ring. After leaving the pastorate of the church, I came to New York city to work in the cause of Christ and humanity. On arriving, after securing rooms, I visited one of the missions in the Bowery. The preacher talked to the crowd of men out of work and told them what a sin it is to squander money in strong drink. On leaving the room the good and pious teacher visited a cigar-store and paid fifteen cents for a cigar. He had been giving advice to a hungry crowd, but he wasted as much in that one cigar as would hav supplied three men with a dinner. That minister did not care for the crowd he had preached for. He did what he had agreed to do and no more. His salary was all he cared for. He could liv in style, dress well, all because he could cant and lie to poor suffering creatures. After this I preached several times in the tent on 52d street and Broadway. The Rev. Mr. King had charge of the tent. He cheated all he could, and would not employ any one to preach in his tent unless he could control him. At last the Rev. Mr. Vine came along; he loved the fruit of the vine but too well. He was found several times drunk in the streets of New York city. He had deserted his wife, but did not forget to flirt with the girls in the city. He was a wonderful sincere man; he could preach hell-fire with a vengeance. On one occasion I was sitting in the tent, waiting for the return of King. Before he returned a gentleman entered the tent and inquired for Mr. King. I told him he was expected every moment. He sat down by my side, and we were soon engaged in a discussion about the second coming of Christ. While we were discussing, Mr. King entered and at once recognized the clerical-looking man as his friend. I was surprised when he said, "Mr. King believes just as I do." I then, in the presence of Mr. King, told him I would be glad to hear him preach in the tent, and giv me the privilege to reply. He then asked Mr. King if he would allow him to preach in the evening. Mr. King said, "No, sir." A few moments after the stranger left, Mr. King pounced upon me by saying, "You are continually placing me in awkward circumstances. I would not hav him preach here for $100. But you placed me in such a position that I had to deny my friend."

He was very angry. What deception! What lies! Mr. King said to his friend, "I would be glad to hav you preach, but I hav engaged Mr. Vine."

First, he would be glad to hav him preach. Second, he would not hav him preach for $100. Comment is unnecessary. He was a sanctified man.

Mr. Stevens called upon me and engaged me to preach in the mission church. I preached from the text "That ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere" (Phil. i, 10). I emphasized the word sincere. I was never invited to preach for the mission again. Mr. Stevens was offended. The audience invited me to come again. Some time after this I was walking on Broadway. I met Mr. Stevens, who after the usual salutation, said, "Are you prepared to use a little more policy in your sermons?"

I answered by saying I was not prepared to giv up my independence to any church and be a slave to a creed.

The answer he made was, "You will hav to suffer."

I was at that time on my way to visit the D.D. Armitage, who a few days before returned to his native country; he had been in Europe.

The Rev. Mr. Jones, of Catskill, had given me a letter of introduction to the Rev. Mr. Simmons. The Rev. Dr. had removed and I could not find him. I was recommended to see Mr. Armitage. I called, but he was sick, and I was unable to get an interview. He sent me the address of Mr. Simmons, D.D. They are Baptist ministers. I had knocked at the door for admission, but on account of some undefinable cause I had been put off from to time. On my arrival at the house of Dr. Simmons I was cordially invited to take a seat in the sitting-room. I handed my letter to him; he read it. After reading it he turned to me and said, "I am glad to see you, Bro. ——," He went on to say: "I hav a visit or two to make, and if you are not engaged you can go with me. There is my horse and buggy; let us go." I got into the buggy. We had a very pleasant ride through Central Park. Various points in theology were discussed. When some doubtful points arose I would use my Greek Testament. Of course I was addressing a D.D., and occupying that distinguished position he must be a Greek scholar at least. To my surprise, he did not understand the classics. When we were about to part he remarked: "Your style of preaching is old-fashioned. I will call a meeting of the members to see about your being admitted as a member, and afterward a council to ordain you as a Baptist minister." I had been ordained in one of the branches of the Methodist church. I had my credentials with me; I gave them to him. He was apparently satisfied. He then said: "Bro. ——, perhaps you do not understand that your ordination papers are of no use in our church. We do not recognize the ordaination of any other church." I told him I was well acquainted with the fact. He then told me to call again and he would tell me particulars. I, according to appointment, called at his house. Things had changed; he had become formal. It was evident the good reverend was out of tune. He excused himself by saying one of his members had died very suddenly, and they had sent for him, but he would write me when they called the meeting for my admission. I never expected to hear from him. I did not receive a word from him. He had seen or communicated with Stephen Merritt, Rev. Mr. Odell, Brooklyn, also the Rev. Mr. Earl, and others. On that account my beloved brother had changed his mind, as the sequel will prove. About this time I removed to Asbury Park. It made no difference to me whether Bro. Simmons sent me word or not. I thought, There is a Baptist church in Asbury Park. I will connect myself with that. I was introduced to the Rev. T. R. Taylor, of the First Baptist church of Asbury Park. I was invited by him to preach at Park Hall. He then invited me to preach at Mane square, as several persons were to be baptised. On arriving, I found the church crowded. I took the text, "Thy will be done." In the course of my remarks I said no minister of the gospel ought to use tobacco in any form. I did not know at that time that he was an inveterate smoker, although a young man only twenty-two years of age. If I had known, I should hav bore down with greater force. He was offended. That called into activ play his revengeful disposition. He not only is an inveterate smoker, but an inveterate liar. Mr. Raymond, Mr. West, Mr. Rose, and Mr. Chalmers, of Asbury Park, hav declared in my presence they would not believe him under oath. I am sure I would hardly believe him under any circumstances where he was interested. He is the son of a Baptist minister. He had a good schoolmaster in the ministerial craft. Only a fool or canting hypocrit can succeed in any of the churches. He is a good wire-puller. Before hearing that the Rev. T. R. Taylor had declared I should never become a member of his church, I had knocked for admission to the Baptist church. All appeared pleasant on his part. I soon observed he was plotting to injure me.

On the 12th of December, about 11 A.M., the Rev. Mr. Taylor called at my house. He appeared very friendly, and said: "If you are willing, I will call two ministers, and they shall examin your credentials, and if they are all right, you shall be admitted by a unanimous vote next week. Brother, we shall be glad to hav you with us." The evening previous the deacons met at the house of Mr. West, and examined my credentials. They were satisfied, and said that they would see Mr. Taylor about calling a meeting next Sunday, to take action in my case. I did not answer Mr. Taylor's question, but promised to see him again, as I wished to see the deacons. I had been told by Mr. Raymond that Mr. Taylor had emphatically declared I should not be admitted as a member of Asbury Park church, if he could prevent it.

On Friday, December 13, 1878, I, in company with Mr. West and Mr. Raymond, called upon the Rev. Mr. Griffith. After an explanation by West and Raymond, Mr. Griffith promised to see Mr. Taylor, and examin the whole affair. To show the hypocrisy of Mr. Griffith, he had inclosed the letters to Mr. Taylor, and knew their contents. The same evening I delivered a lecture on "The Moral Education of Children." On commencing the lecture, the Rev. Mr. Taylor entered Park Hall. I then demanded that if the Rev. Mr. Taylor had evidence to prove me an impostor, such evidence be read before the audience, and if true, I would submit to be kicked like a dog out of the hall. I remarked to the audience that if such charges were true, I was an unfit person to teach morals to the young. The reverend rascal did not say a word, but sneaked out.

Mr. Raymond at the close of my lecture, without consulting me, said: "I will go to New York to-morrow (Dec. 14th), and inquire into this case, and if I can find out he is an impostor, I will, next Friday, make it public in this hall. If I prove he is all right, I will also make that public." To prevent such public statements, Mr. White called upon James A. Bradley, requesting him not to allow me to lecture in the hall. Mr. White is a brother in the Baptist church, with more stomach than brains. James A. Bradley sent me a letter, of which the following is a copy:

"Mr. H——: It has been reported by Mr. Uriah White, and other esteemed residents, that you took occasion to indulge in abuse of our resident clergymen."

Every word was false. I only demanded that the Rev. Mr. Taylor convince the audience I was a fraud, and he a holy man. The above was a scheme to prevent me exposing one of the most dastardly attacks ever made by one minister upon another. The Rev. T. R. Taylor declared he had the monyed power on his side, and consequently he did not fear. James A. Bradley would not allow me to defend myself in his hall; yea, he would not allow any personal abuse in his hall, but he would and did allow the reverend liar to abuse and slander me, because he, the rich and powerful James A. Bradley, thought to crush a man not as rich as himself. I hope to see the day when J. A. Bradley will learn that the resident clergyman is a consummate rascal. Saturday, the 14th of December, Mr. Raymond visited New York, calling upon Dr. Simmons. I accompanied Mr. Raymond to New York. We found Dr. Simmons at home. Mr. Raymond told him his business with him, after which Dr. Simmons declared he had not written anything from which Mr. Taylor could infer that the reverend brother was an impostor. He then stated what had been said. He had warned him to be cautious about taking in ministers from other than Baptist denominations. He went on to say many rumors were afloat, but he could not lay hold of anything definit, only there were rumors in the air. As we were about to leave, Dr. Simmons called me on one side of the room and said: "Brother, I would advise you to call and see Bro. Odell, of Brooklyn, and hav a friendly chat with him. He has said nothing against you in any shape, and I hope you will say nothing about him." I had become acquainted with Mr. Odell at a committee meeting; found him a designing sectarian wire-puller—one of the blind guides. Dr. Simmons knew he told a falsehood when he said Odell had said nothing about me.

He also said: "Call and see Stephen Merritt. He wants to see you." I said I had always thought Stephen Merritt to be a friend of mine. I am sorry I hav discovered he is not. Of course he wanted to ride the popular horse. He can shout as loud as the next one. That is all there is in the man. He takes care of people after they are dead. He is more interested in the number of deaths than in the conversion of souls. He is a wonderful temperance man. When Mr. Organ and he ran the Living Issue, a Prohibition paper, the people thought there was no danger of losing their money if they subscribed for that paper. But alas, alas! The Living Issue died; the subscribers lost their money. It looks mighty strange where the money went. Of course the pious preacher of Perry street church was a loser. Poor Stephen!

I should hav had a good time in visiting Dr. Armitage or the Rev. Mr. Earle. I had seen sufficient of Dr. Armitage to know he was a proud, self-conceited man. As for Earle, he is of a similar type. They are both utilitarians on principle.

I did not call upon any of the above-named magnates of the church. About 3:30 P.M. Monday, December 16th, last, I was informed a gentleman wished to see me. I hurried home to find he had left. But I walked to the depot, and behold, I met the Rev. T. R. Taylor and the Rev. Mr. Griffiths. The latter informed me, very politely, that the letters had been sent as confidential letters to Taylor. They were not intended as evidence. He also stated that Dr. Simmons had demanded the return of the letters, as they had been improperly used. Comment is unnecessary. The letters were sent by the four ministers last referred to, as God-fearing men; lovers of humanity—"in a horn."

Soon after this, Mr. West, Mr. Raymond, and Mr. Rose were expelled from the Baptist church because they would not fall down at the feet of Pope Taylor and lick his great toe. They declared they would not—yea, they could not—honor a liar and scandal-monger as pastor. The reverend hypocrit had acted more like a demon toward them than a pastor. The three families were very much troubled because of the unkind treatment they had received at Taylor's hands. They called a counsel, an ex parte council, to meet at the house of Mr. West, Feb. 12, 1879. As soon as the ministers met they found Taylor had also called a council to meet at Park Hall. This was a maneuver advised by Taylor's friends. They determined to make it a mutual council.

Taylor's friends carried the day. Taylor was sustained in all his meanness and lies, while the three expelled members were sacrificed. I warned them about having anything to do with such a council, but having confidence in their pastor they yielded. Let a body of ministers determin to save an erring brother of the cloth, if he is a pliable thing, and they will do it if heaven is blackened with falsehoods.

About 6 P.M. I called at Mr. West's house to know what the council had done. I was told the council had decided the church had acted hastily, but the expelled members had rendered themselves subject to censure. I was also told by the Rev. Mr. Case that the three expelled members, at the request of the council, had, in the presence of Almighty God, promised to follow me as leader no longer. I answered, "All right." Mr. Case said there was nothing against my moral character. He then went on to ask me to leave the expelled men, as they had promised to hav nothing more to do with me.

He then said, "Will you promise to let the Sabbath-school alone?" I said, in answer, I would not interfere with them. He also wished me God's speed. I was indignant at his canting lies, and said, "Yon don't wish me God's speed. Your language has convinced me you are determined to injure me." He said, "You appear to doubt my word." I answered him by saying, "I do not believe a word you say." He then threatened me with a legal suit if I was ever heard to say anything against Mr. Taylor. I said, "I wish you would enter an action against me. I will prove both you and the hypocritical clergyman, Taylor, liars." I bid him good-bye.

The council of hypocritical ministers, to save Taylor, agreed to giv each expelled member a letter, but each letter to be sent by the pastor to the church each of them had been a member in previous to coming to Asbury Park, each member expelled making suitable acknowledgments for errors committed. To get the letters, two of them, coward-like, made acknowledgments, but, when interrogated by me, denied having done so. We had falsehoods all around.

The Rev. Mr. Taylor, in reply to an article in the Asbury Park Journal, written by one of the agrieved members, said: "Allow me to say, for the Baptist church of Asbury Park, that these brethren were not excluded from a spirit of jealousy, but because they had for more than a year conducted themselves in a disgraceful manner in the church and the world."

Another falsehood. Mr. West, one of the expelled members, is a good, kind, and exemplary man. After the above statement, would any person of common sense suppose such men were fit to be members of any church? Would the editor of The Truth Seeker could send men into the churches of our country! He could fill a larger paper weekly with quarrels and slanders occurring amongst the dear followers of Christ. Yet these wicked men were given letters recommending them to other churches. "They were compelled to take their letters, as the Asbury Park church would not keep them in its fellowship."

The writer of the above quotations tries to prove he is an innocent Christian lamb; full of love and good works; a model pastor. He had told falsehood after falsehood, and he was sustained by the church in all his meanness. The expelled men were better men than their pastor; they were better men than those who were a majority in that lying, hypocritical body. An untruthful minister supported by untruthful members.

The morning after the council called at Mr. West s house, when the Rev. Mr. Case addressed me by saying, "Remember, brother, we hav said nothing against your moral character, but it is commonly reported you are a general disturber of the churches, and we wish you God's speed, but do not interfere with these expelled men." After making the above statement to me in a conciliating manner, after my statement the previous evening, I was told the same body of ministers passed several resolutions concerning me, one of which is a sample of the Baptist ministry:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Baptists of Asbury Park to hold no fellowship with a man calling himself Rav. ———.

Resolved, That we commend the conduct of Bro. T. R. Taylor in persistently guarding the church against the reception into its fellowship of the so-called Rev. ———.

The Rev. Taylor was guarding his bread and butter. He had declared to several persons I was trying to get his pulpit, and because of that I should not enter his church. Mr. West, Mr. Raymond, Mr. Rose, also Mr. Chambers, men of veracity, are my witnesses. On the 21st of March, 1879, Mr. Chambers, from Ocean Grove, called to see me. He said: "The Rev. T. R. Taylor had in his house declared, I am determined to keep Bro. ——— out of the Baptist church, because Mr. Raymond, Mr. West, and Mr. Rose are trying to put him in my place. I know he is better educated than I am."

I declare Taylor is one of the meanest of men in the ministry, but the council and his church are no better.

ANON.

P. S.—I am not writing to clear myself, but to show the people of what stuff our ministers are made. I don't care one straw what the ministers think about me. The ministers best acquainted with me know this to be true. A.

Our New Book.

D. M. BENNETT, My Valued Friend: I hav been perusing with much pleasure and profit the first volume of your valuable book on "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." It has a long and comprehensiv introductory digest, in your happy style, of the progress of our race from barbarism, through all its stages, to the present civilized and analyzing age. Its subsequent voluminous pages are replete with most instructiv collections from the best writers and thinkers of all ages, together with deep researches, detailing a mass of information relating to all the gods and religions of different periods, so evidently human in their origin that their perusal will open the eyes of a host of prejudiced people, to the perception of like character in all modern creeds, and so will largely benefit our race in discarding from their minds all such legendary tales of crude conceptions of the gods, including those assumed Biblical autobiographies of God, by revelations or dictations, as degrading representations of his attributes, all of which are only belittling presentments of an infinit first cause, suited only to a crude race.

You hav embodied many fascinating myths and weird legendary tales of every age and clime, as the foundation and soul of superstitions that still cling to prejudice, and blind mankind from rational truisms, and so from the untrammeled progress of our race.

Your book should be in the hands of every inquiring man and woman for information about the gradual advance of our race, and so to shape the course of modern thought in this more fortunate age of deeper insight into the laws of nature, and our relations to the same through all time, thus looking from nature up to nature's God, with more enlightened views of his co-operativ government of cosmos, as the subtil, material, intelligent, potent factor, in originating the laws and phenomena of matter by mechanical co-relation, as our minds act upon our bodies.

About the 12th inst. I sent to you a paper on the "Subtil-Materiality of Mind, and its Individualized Development," which I hope soon to see in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as serving to explain the mysteries of phenomena on a scientific basis. CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

"Boil it Down."

THE ECONOMY OF A PHONETIC SYSTEM.—"MILLIONS IN IT."

To the Editor of the Tribune, Sir: Here comes a third person who is "hit in a soft spot" by that "bit of metrical wisdom," "Boil it down." Your late article on the same subject I propose to inspect and "boil it down" to a consistency you would little suspect. By actual count, your article contains 337 silent letters; that is, letters that are not of the slightest use in expressing the written idea or the sounds of the words as spoken. Your article, as printed, contains an average of 34 letters to a line, and so it will be very nearly accurate to say that these 337 silent letters make 10 lines. There are 74 lines in the article. Take out the 10 lines of useless silent letters, and you "boil it down" to 64 lines of vital, vocal, effectiv letters; that is, 14 per cent of your article conveys no idea, expresses nothing, and is worse than useless, because it occupies valuable space. If that ratio holds good throughout the expression of English speech in type to-day—and it does approximately—14 per cent of every issue of the Tribune is desert waste. Not a twig sprouts nor a blade of idea grows in it. You are patiently, laboriously, and uselessly putting into type, where it is expensiv, what is not uttered in speech, where prodigality is cheap and permissible. Of the 72 columns of your daily issue, 14 per cent, or about 10 columns, are devoted to these ghosts of letters, who stalk through the Tribune without any soul, or idea, or function whatever. If they would only so much as "squeak and jibber," there might be a modicum of sense which would justify their parade, but they do not. There they stand, stupidly, stolidly silent. The Great Silent Man himself is not more vacantly unutterable.

Now what would the space of those 10 steril columns be worth to you for advertising? At 200 lines per column, and 50 cents per line, your medium rate, the sum would equal $1,000, which you are contributing every day to the support of these shadows. In one year the sum would amount to $300,000, and in 10 years to $3,000,000, for the Tribune alone. The ousting of these expensiv parasites in type is only a question of time. This is an age that destroys shams, and these sham letters are fated to go with the rest. Their displacement is perfectly practical, and true representativs of sound may be introduced instead without enlarging or disturbing any of the arrangements of the present style of printing-office. The sorrows of editors will more and more increase. You will liv more and more "in a chronically crowded condition;" you will bend more and more "under an embarrassment of material," leaving out many a good thing with regret, but putting in these dead-letter types with no regret, till, finally, the necessity for economizing space will compel the dropping of every letter that does not perform an exact and positiv duty. Even the abbreviation of a few of the most frequent words would be perfectly practicable, and could be carried to the extent of saving half the space without the least loss of legibility. An able man will take hold of this work some day and start us on the road to a general "boiling it down." And why not the Tribune, which has wrestled with so many giants, slain so many rings, and righted so many wrongs? Why is it not in order, and for its own vital interest, to grapple with this monster of waste and absurdity, this stumbling-block in the path of learning, and bury it out of sight?

Book Notices.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK: A collection of Liberal songs, adapted to popular tunes, for the use of Liberal Leagues and in Liberal homes. Edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Burnz & Co., publishers, 24 Clinton Place, New York.

This is a convenient, snug little book of 124 pages, containing 142 hymns, well adapted to the use of Liberals, and fitted to popular and well known tunes. This collection fills a want long felt, to wit, a cheap Liberal hymn-book that Leagues, societies, and families can afford to buy freely.

Price, in paper covers, 15 cents, $1.50 per dozen, or $10 per hundred. In boards, 15 cents, $2.50 per dozen, or $15 per hundred. 2 cents extra per copy for possage when ordered in large quantities. Every League should buy twice as many as their members number, so as to supply visitors and strangers when they call in.

Liberals hav not paid due attention to music and hymn singing. Nearly everybody is fond of music, especially vocal music. It is what draws the churches together, and holds them. Liberals should also utilize this beautiful element. Buy this little hymn-book, sing its songs in your societies, social gatherings, and in your families. Teach the hymns to your children. The sentiments are most proper for them to commit to memory. They are selected from Whittier, Longfellow, Tennyson, Lowell, Kneeland, Denton, Doten, and many modern Liberals. The sentiments are in all cases most appropriate. The tunes to which they are adapted are the old standard ones known from our childhood, with those more modern, as "Nearer my God to Thee," "Hold the Fort," "Pull for the Shore," "Sweet By and By," "Homes Round us Here," "There is a Happy Land," etc.

It is not intended that this should supersede "The Truth Seeker Collection," which contains 525 hymns, with numerous forms for funeral and marriage services, etc., with many beautiful recitations for all occasions. That, containing 550 pages well bound, is very cheap at 75 cents, but "The Liberal Hymn Book" is smaller and cheaper, and will sell more largely. Every League should hav at least three of "The Truth Seeker Collection," and from two to four dozen of "The Liberal Hymn Book." Sold at this office.

THE REAL ISSUE. A Few Thoughts for the Merchant and Mechanic, the Farmer and the Day Laborer. Especially adapted for the Campaign of 1880. By Moses Hull, Editor of the Commoner.

This is a timely treatise on the money and labor question. It is opposed to the national bank system, and in favor of the people's government issuing the money of the people. This pamphlet costs but 10 cents. Cheap enough. Send and get it. Sold at this office.

LECTURES ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS: Competition, Communism, Co-operation, and the Relation of Christianity to Socialism. By J. H. Rylance, D.D. Thomas Whittaker. New York.

A book of 235 pages; in paper covers, 50 cents. Cloth binding, $1.00. The four subjects named are ably and fairly handled from a theological standpoint. The book is well worth reading. Sold at this office.

NATIONAL MARCH. A new and timely piece of music composed by Jacob G. Knous. Published by Capt. Geo. W. Loyd, New Rochelle, N. Y.

This is a Greenback song of spirit and excellence. On the title-page is this inspiring motto: "The storm is coming. The revolution has begun. The Greenback movement is sweeping on. The people must and will hav relief. They are in earnest. They are terribly sincere in the belief that the leaders of the two old parties hav betrayed them over as slaves to the money power, and people might as well make up their minds to prepare for the coming political revolution, for come it will." The words and music are both lively. Price 35 cents. Address Capt. Geo. W. Loyd, New Rochelle, N. Y.

Echoes from Illinois.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I must say that I cannot tell when I hav felt more disappointed than I did this afternoon when, on examining THE TRUTH SEEKER for this week, I found you had made no mention of the communication I sent you on the 23d of March about the arrangement between Alving J. Clark, late of Indianapolis, and myself to try to arouse up the Liberals of this part of the United States, or that portion, at least, along the line of northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin, from the lethargic sleep in which they hav been lying for the past few years. From a personal knowedge of a large portion of country around here, I know there is a large Liberal element, but there are comparativly few of them who take any Liberal papers or read the latest published Liberal books; and hundreds of them do not even know anything about the persecution of Mr. Bennett.

Mr. Clark is the first lecturer whom I thought of sufficient ability to do the work I see so much needed in this section—who was willing to come here and take any chances. I spent over six weeks last fall to get the people of Rockford and vicinity together to hear Mr. Bell twice, but Mr. Bell was not willing to remain here even a single day unless I could hav steady appointments at stated prices, and keep him busy; and that I could not do in a section of country where there was no organization to work through.

Mr. Clark has come here willing and anxious to do some missionary work in this part of the country, and he is willing to work with his hands to make a living while we are getting our notices before the people. We sent notices to Mind and Matter, the Investigator, and the Banner of Light at the same time we did to THE TRUTH SEEKER. But your paper is the favorit paper with both of us, and it will always receive our first attention—therefore my disappointment in not seeing our communication in either of the last two issues. Mind and Matter had it in the last week's issue. We shall take no subscriptions for either the R.-P. Journal or Index, for we hav no friendly feeling, but rather contempt, for either of them.

Mr. Clark has been with me two weeks, and has given five lectures already, and to-morrow we go to Cherry Valley, a small town eight miles east of here, where he lectures to-morrow afternoon.

I suppose our notice was crowded out for want of space; but if you will giv it a place in your next issue, we will return the compliment by pressing the claims of THE TRUTH SEEKER wherever we go. We expect to try and organize Leagues as well as solicit subscriptions and sell books wherever we go; and if the Liberal press will just help us, and giv us a boost to get started, we will wake up this section of country in less than six months as it has never been awakened before; and the press, or that portion which is willing to help us, shall reap some harvest for doing so. Fraternally yours, F. F. FOLLET.

Rockford, Ill., April 3.

W. S. Bell.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I wish to say a few words to our friends regarding the work and ability of W. S. Bell. We purposed making arrangements to hav him giv us three lectures in Lockport and Joliet, but owing to a change in my business and an accident that befell me two weeks ago, I was unable to do as I desired. A few of us, however, made matters in such a shape that he gave us one lecture—"What Has Freethought to Offer in place of Christianity?"—last Wednesday evening. The lecture did not hav sufficient notice, and the people are so absorbed in politics, coupled with fear of the popular thought, or more properly speaking, the general hypocrisy, that the attendance was small. Those, however, who did attend were delighted, and quite a number of others would hav been there had they known.

The lecture was excellent in a finished and practical sense, and though it was given without any attempt at oratorical or elocutionary flourish, the logic was so clear, and the language so well chosen, that it would suit in those respects the most fastidious devotees of the cultured school.

There is a clean-cut, healthy tone about the method and matter of Mr. Bell's discoursing that is the very opposit of all whine, and which impresses you that there is a strong, vigorous soul behind them. We regret his leaving before we had heard more from him. He had to leave the next day to be in time to meet an engagement for three lectures at Elgin, Ill., on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of May.

W. S. Bell should be engaged constantly, for the work he does is well done.

We found him as we expected—full of the true spirit, ready to handle, if need be, without gloves any popular error that enslaves the mind in the name of God, or in obedience to creed or custom. In addition to this he is a most devoted friend of yourself and yours, and a magnificent and open enemy to all pretense and pretended friends of Liberalism whether they appear in the saintly guise of over-anxiety for public morality, respectable radicalism, or high-toned and ethical culture. W. S. Bell answers effectually the question, If you take from us our religion (or idols), what will you giv us in its place? He removes the causes that repress the soul, and givs it a chance to grow. He shows wherein the mind has been clouded, and givs it sunlight. He proves beyond the shadow of a doubt the advantages arising from free and unfettered reason; and in contrasting the popular with the more truthful conclusion he exhibits the dwarfed, twisted, misshapen hag of time-honored superstition in a light its friends cannot admire. Keep the ball rolling, and keep this Bell ringing out the true notes and peals of liberty for an enslaved people.

Letters from Friends.

PATERSON, N. J., May 19, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I am strongly opposed to letting H. L. Green slide for the want of support. How do you like the suggestion given by a correspondent to the Investigator, that each member of our League pay fifty cents annually (a little less than a cent per week) for that purpose? This would bring not less than $2,000. Giv Mr. Green $1,500, and let him use the other for propaganda purposes. Any way, I hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will do something to stir up the Leagues to do their duty in this matter. We had the matter under discussion in our League last Sunday, and what they intend to do will be decided at our next meeting next Sunday week. All that is needed is for the New York Leagues to make a start, and my impression is that all the rest will soon follow. I am sincerely yours,

JOHN WARR.

OSWEGO, N. Y., June 1, 1880.

TO FATHER BENNETT, EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: All hail! We repeat it, All hail, Selah. Three cheers for Bennett, yes, the old Infidel Bennett, and let every true Liberal in this or any other land say, Amen. We feel—well we hav a diversity of feelings. First, we feel happy for the release of our friend and brother from the bonds of Christian hatred, bigotry, ignorance, malice, revenge, and intolerance. Secondly, we feel indignant, provoked, and disgusted more with Christianity (if it was Christianity that sent you up in the Christian bastile), and we believe that if the mythical Jesus himself were really here to see the cowardly and hellish acts of his pretended followers he would hav wept bitter and scalding tears over the unchristly acts of those human demons that so ruthlessly tore down forever the blood-stained banner of Christianity; and we feel sure that you, friend Bennett, will be remembered with honor for centures after those hellites who hav tortured you thus are buried with their ancestor Jesuits, to be remembered only as Judas is, and their infamous and damnable acts are connected with your cruel incarceration.

A word to the Liberals of your vicinity and we are done. We hold that any and all Liberals who in future look coldly on and see another case of this kind progress against constitutional law, against justice and humanity, against all decency and honor, and not plant the cuss, culprit, and instigator of the infernal deed, is not, in our opinion, worthy the name of Infidel, no, nor even of Christian, and "don't you forget it." Liberals, of all others, should be law-abiding citizens, but "disobedience to tyrants is obedience to God." Amen. A. H. WALKER.

GRAND ISLAND, N. Y., May 30, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I sincerely hope you will be able to go to Brussels and visit Europe as you desire, and as a proof of my sincerity I herewith inclose $2 to help defray expenses.

I know from past experience that you can leave the paper in good hands; and in case you could not go, I think Mr. Macdonald might fill your place as delegate nearly as well as editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I truly think our Leagues should be well represented. I hope our delegation will be decidedly in favor of woman's rights, and think it would be but just to hav part of the delegation women. I would suggest Mrs. Amelia H. Colby, Mrs. E. D. Slenker, or if she were able to go, Mrs. Amy Post.

Allow me to congratulate you sincerely on your release from the unjust imprisonment you hav suffered. I wrote to you only twice while you were there, but I counted the months, weeks, days, and hours until you were released. There was not a night last winter that I did not think of you and your truly noble and beloved wife.

I am sorry that I cannot afford to hav your new book at present, but will just as soon as I can possibly spare the money. I should hav purchased quite a number of your books and pamphlets for gratuitous distribution if I only could hav afforded it.

Remember me to your loving wife, and believe me to be truly yours for liberty of speech, press, and the mails,

ELISA H. TALES.

TRUCKEE, CAL., May 25, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past four months. When my attention was first called to it, I was indifferent about reading it, as it was termed an Infidel paper. The unjust imprisonment of the editor increased my interest, for I was always an advocate of justice and equality. My early education was with the Methodists, but while enjoying them socially, I never was satisfied with what seemed to me an exaggerated belief. After my arrival in California, I found nature everywhere revealed on a grand and broad plane. My soul hungered for more light and broader thought. I was closely associated with the Baptists for a while. I found them more bigoted than the Methodists. I concluded rather than be compelled to accept their precepts I would leave them all. I finally attended the Swedenborgian meetings in San Francisco. There I heard more sense and logic and gleaned more spiritual light than I had in all the previous years. No intelligent, thinking mind can condemn the principles of so good a man and philosopher as Swedenborg. He was in advance of his day, and like all martyrs and those who dare differ from current thought, suffered persecution. To be truly independent in thought is the divine birthright of every intelligent mind. The world is full of mental dyspepsia, caused by allowing others to think for us.

I do not agree with all the ideas advanced in THE TRUTH SEEKER, yet I admire the courage of those advocating what they feel to be right. A large majority of the world are inshrouded in ignorance. Until the veil is lifted the few who dare to advance new ideas must expect persecution of every nature. There are sufficient number of persons who follow the beaten track and remain in the old way, while there are not more than a dozen in a century who bring forward innovations founded on argument and reason.

"The fancies of our youth, and riper years, forsooth,
Long cherished in the heart, though we grow wiser,
We treasure still, tenacious as the miser,
At length we start from our delightful dreaming,
And find our sterling treasures only seeming,
And our opinions change; yet, keen the pain
Of disappointment, and we strive in vain
To reconcile our feelings to the change
Our reason sanctions."—Sierra.

Yours truly, MISS E. G. COFFIN.

VINELAND, N. J., May 19, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: We are glad that you are again free to walk as you please, to see your friends, and converse with them without an officer to watch you. Probably your enemies expected you would hav been on the other side of Jordan ere now; and if your soul, like old John Brown's, had gone marching on, perhaps the president would hav appointed a day of praise and thanksgiving, as the Boston churches did when they thought God was answering their prayer by killing Theodore Parker. If the Christian theory is true, Judas was a very necessary person, and perhaps it was as necessary that a Comstock should exist as a Judas Iscariot or a potato bug.

That you may hav health to edit and publish your paper and other Liberal works for many years, and that your noble wife may liv to assist you, is the sincere wish of

J. S. and A. L. SHEPHARD.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 19, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: My better and larger half tells me to "write something to Mr. Bennett. He'll think strangely of me, as I hav not written him." Well, you hav been spoken of often enough, and many pleasant wishes expressed for your health and happiness. We duly received the three copies of Volume I. Thank you sincerely for our copy of the "Gods," the subject being one of much interest to me. I hav been reading the first volume rather steadily. We are both glad you are enjoying your liberty, and trust you may continue to without interruption the rest of your life. The fact is, if all were to be treated (for their views and opinions) as you hav been, I for one would be suffering. While it has been a painful thing to you, really it has been a grand and good thing for the world, and has advanced greatly not alone Freethought, but the expression of all thought. A number of people feeling indignant at your treatment giv expression now to views they before only thought of, and were carefnl to keep to themselves. It requires some courage to face the world, and think and speak on religious topics in opposition to what seems to be an established form. Near and dear friends on this point seem to lose all the charity and good will which they say they are teaching, and as Mark Twain says, they "shake" one who chooses to think differently from them. Yours, WM. H. VANALLEN.

STEPHENSVILLE, WIS., May 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav been a subscriber to your valuable paper for the last six months, on trial, as it were, and am happy to state that I am not in the least dissatisfied with it, or sorry I took it.

We are all after truth and light upon a subject held as obscure, and "under a bushel," as some would say, and I don't know of any better paper to take than the old reliable TRUTH SEEKER. You are now at liberty again, and I only hope you will giv it to the prosecutors doubly. But would it not be better to rain coals of fire upon their head by doing them no injury, but keep right along in the good old way?

Your true friend and brother, GEO. ROTH.

MT. PLEASANT, PA., May 22, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: That anonymous coop of roosters which I received from Boston a few days since reminds me that I had better show my indignation against you, so here are five dollars for your "Gods and Religions," which you wrote, John Bunyan like, in prison.

Sincerely, W. F. BARKLEY.

AUBURN, N. Y., May 24, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed P. O. order for five dollars, for which send me your recently published work on "The Gods and Religions." I hav been holding my order several weeks, hoping that the second volume would also soon burst forth upon the world like a pillar of fire from heaven, convincing a credulous people that all religions are but of human invention, inaugurated to inslave and brutalize mankind, whose gods are also the production of man's wild, fanatical, and distorted mind, and never for a moment really existed nor had any real, conceivable existence whatever, but only existed in man's diseased imagination—men who hav been diverted from their natural, progressiv avenues of right reasoning into the debauched channels of mythological god-making and religion-manufacturing business.

A few more Humboldts, Voltaires, Paines, Ingersolls, Underwoods, Bennetts, and Slenkers, and their profound productions and unanswerable logic—I say only a few more of those great, daring, fearless heroes and heroines, the world will no longer insult its greatest of all great gifts, reason, but will see its ecclesiastical vituperation, and turn from the error of its ways to a knowledge of the truth, which will be the uplifting of dear humanity, and down-throwing of all false religions and mythical gods. When this glorious reformation shall hav been consummated, then, and not till then, will our present armor-bearers take their places among the world's other greatest reformers, and against whose hieroglyphically written epitaphs the vile slander and calumny of priests and the crackling gates of their orthodox hell shall not prevail.

Yours for the good fight, L. DEWITT GRISWOLD.

QUINCY, O., May 31, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please send to my address the following $10 worth of books marked below, also tracts.

I think I shall be able in a very short time to raise a club for THE TRUTH SEEKER here. You will please accept my congratulations to you and family, as well as the patrons of THE TRUTH SEEKER, upon your release from a Christian bastile to re-enter the sanctum and again enjoy the privileges of being once more in a position to lift the veil of superstition and show to a mislead and misguided people that "fear is the dungeon of the mind," etc.

My desire is to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing else but the truth, and that the people may be taught to drop prejudice and not take for granted a matter of so much concern, but that they may be induced to thoroughly investigate for themselves and pay out their money for something that is real, that is tangible and reasonable, and to them of certain and present benefit.

Wishing the cause for which you labor a most satisfactory growth, I remain, very respectfully,

H. AUSTENBORDER.

HOW READS THE RECORD.

BURR OAK, MICH., May 30, 1880.

MR. M. WYRICK, Dear Sir: I see in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 29th, you address a communication to me propounding certain questions, and desiring information in regard to assertions and quotations I made from so-called holy writ, in a letter some time since addressed to Mr. D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Now Mr. Bennett has abundantly, truthfully, and gentlemanly given you, through his paper all the answer and information you asked for, which obviates the necessity of my doing so. I hope it may allay your sympathy for me and curiosity in that direction, but if your sympathy for me and curiosity in that direction are still up to fever heat, and you desire to know more of the divine revelations and inspirations of God that are able to make us wise unto salvation, I would advise you to search the scriptures more diligently, for in them you think you hav eternal life, and they are they that testify, sanction, command, and approve of the most horrible crimes and doctrines that man is capable of committing or devising. Now sir, I hope you hav nerve enough to search for these commands and doctrins contained in that old Jew book that is full of self-contradictions and obscenity, and when you find them, which you will most certainly do, come out like a man and confess your hitherto absurd idea and gross ignorance of what is contained in said book of books and the vindictiv and revengeful caricature therein given to the Jewish Jehovah and practiced by his followers since the year one.

Yours, not in chains of superstition, fear, and ignorance, but in bonds of truth, reason, and humanity. And believe me still, as I hav ever been, the steadfast lover of my fellow-man. My weakness, love of human liberty. My crime, the wish that all mankind were free. Free, not by blood; redeemed, but not by crime. And no mental fetters formed in childhood's time. M. P. THURSTON.

BOSTON, MASS., June 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Allow me to call you my friend. Such you are to me. I am glad you are out of prison. I cannot say I am sorry you went in. I owe my conversion to you, and many are rising up and calling you blessed that would never hav known of you if the Christians had let you alone.

But when they put you into that "Christian institution" it opened my eyes to a sense of their vicarious means of atonement. To me Christianity, or the thing that goes by that name, is like the measles—once cured, there is no fear of the second run.

Behold Christianity made easy!

Since the surrender of Rutherford to the church, Mrs. Hayes has been president. Wasn't this the disturbing element in the election? A woman between two men always makes a tie.

When we elect a woman again, let us do it direct, not over the back of a man. I would not object to a woman president if she has not the "blood of Christ," the modern Christ, running in her veins. Most truly yours,

JOSEPH L. SPINNER.

ST. JOHNS, ILL., May 10, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The following letter is a copy of one I wrote to F. E Abbot, with a request for him to insert it in the columns of the Index. Last fall I was favored with two copies of that scurrilous sheet and one of the R.-P. Journal, two papers, in my estimation, representing the most diabolical phases of vituperativ journalism we hav in the Spiritual and Material ranks, both editors being envious of the growth of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and resorting to unfair means to prejudice the people against it.

I came to the conclusion, after perusing those papers, that I would treat them with silent contempt; but on receiving a little anonymous pamphlet recently, mailed to me from Boston, I thought, to prevent a repetition of such infliction, I would inform those pious sneaks that I did not want my post-office box desecrated any more with such vile stuff.

I doubt Mr. Abbot's complying with my request to giv this letter a place in his highly-cultured paper. Should you find space, please giv it to your readers, as I feel it expresses the sentiments of not only the writer, but nine-tenths of the Liberals in this vicinity.

Fraternally, WM. A. THOMPSON.

THE LETTER.

MR. F. E. ABBOT, Sir: I recently received from Boston a small six-page pamphlet, containing pictures of masculine fowls (excuse me for not calling them "roosters" or "cocks;" should I use either of those terms you would think me uncultured or vulgar, and Comstock might send Britton over here into Egypt to make trouble with me for using indecent language). Now, sir, I do not know that you are the man who forwarded me those chickens, with the following head-lines: "These be thy gods, O Israel! D. M. Bennett, the apostle of liberty, the great martyr!" nevertheless I think you are the one that did it—either you or Bundy. My reasons for thinking so are that on a former occasion I received two copies of the Index and one of the R.-P. Journal containing considerable of a tirade on the conduct of D. M. Bennett.

I made no reply to your former favor (or rather disfavor), for I hav no patience with animals in human shape who will stoop so low in degradation as to resort to such means as you and Bundy, and others of lesser light, hav in order to defame the character of a fellow-being. And to be explicit, I will say that in the future, should you see fit to follow the same mode of warfare against D. M Bennett or any other man, do not send me any more of your slanders and misrepresentations. Of course you are to some extent excusable, not knowing to whom you were sending them—not on account of the meanness of the motiv but on account of your ignorance of the condition of the Liberals of this place. You must think us a stupid set indeed. I hav been a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for six years, and when you or any one else says or even intimates such a thing as that D. M. Bennett ever has advocated any doctrins through the columns of his paper that are calculated to debase the moral status of the people, you simply state a falsehood of the deepest stamp.

So far as the correspondence with the woman some of you very holy Josephs take pleasure in ventilating before the public so much, I can not see how it happens to be any of your or my business. It may be your business, as I do not know all the business you are engaged in. I only know a part of it, and will say if that which I know nothing of be as disreputable as such as I am acquainted with, I pity you. Still, I hope for the better. I felt confident a few years ago, when you so nobly defended the right before the Young Men's Christian Association, that there was good in you; and I yet hope you may desist from your present dishonorable conduct toward your brother Liberals. I hav great sympathy for those who are so constituted as to be laboring under the baneful moral disease of jealousy. Any ordinary observer can see that envy is at the foundation of all this trouble. Some lovers of fame and leadership saw the growth of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Understanding something of the power of its sledge-hammer blows at long-cherished doctrines of the church, fear came upon them lest they might lose some names from their own list.

All I hav to say in the premises is that you could hav done nothing more potent to accomplish the result. Sir, there is a consideration in this matter above dollars and cents or individual aggrandizement. It is that of principle. We, as Liberals of St. Johns, are not inclined to hanker much after worship of this, that, or the other man. I, for one, hav pretty much dispensed with worship of all kinds since I laid aside the creeds and dogmas of the church, believing all systems of worship a species of slavery. I hav no quarrel with those who do worship conscientiously. I once accepted, to a great extent, the teachings of Christendom. I was as honest then as now. I am persuaded a man may believe in Christianity and be as honest as I am. I do not deny being at present what Christians please to call an Infidel. I feel happy to be known as one who does not indorse a large portion of the Bible. However, this has but little to do with the great question now at issue between Liberals and the church party. It is not particularly D. M. Bennett or E. H. Heywood, or those other brave souls who are giving expression to their honest convictions, that are on trial. No, sir, there is a problem involved in those cases that cover a larger scope than mere isolated ones. It is to assert our rights as free American citizens for the untrammeled expression of our thoughts, and a free press as our fathers gave it to us. In the diatribe you sent me you drag in much slang from different papers, as though the press to a great extent was not subsidized. Let me say to you that the people of this country are the tribunal, and the concensus of the competent, as dictated by yourself and indorsed by B. F. Underwood, will fail to wrest from the minds of all true Liberals the right to decide what to them seems most fitting on all subjects of importance. We will hav no dictator in the Liberal League, if you please. Your flings at Freelovism will never save your bark. To my thinking, it is a poor subterfuge, one that will not win. As well think about confining the stars as to limit men and women in their investigations.

I hav never made myself officious in public or private in the advocacy of the social question or Freelove theory. I hav given it some thought, and consequently take a very different view of it to some who profess to be very pure, and by no means confound it with lust, thinking it to be a different passion. It has been my experience in life to become acquainted with some who are in favor of the Freelove theory as they understand it, who, I doubt not, are as pure and moral as those who make such a great ado about it; also many who are the most inveterate abusers of Freelovers prove by their works to be practicing the abuse of marital relations.

I see you are very guarded in quoting Col. Ingersoll, as stated by the Pittsburg reporter. I suppose you thought as the Colonel was one of our representativ men you would make quite a sensation among Liberals. I cannot see that the language he used will do your cause any good or damage Mr. Bennett. His remarks are similar to all his sayings, witty and well timed. I myself did not believe Bennett wrote the letters till I heard from him. Then I believed it, for the simple reason I hav given strict attention to most he has been saying for six years and found him, as I believe, truthful. It is more than I can say of the Index of Oct. 30, 1879, or of the Inter-Ocean of Nov. 24, 1879. When you affirm that "there is not another man in America who has wrought such incalculable injury to the Liberal cause as D. M. Bennett, by confounding its name with Freelove and obscenity in the public mind," you state a positiv falsehood, and all impartial readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will giv it the lie, for D. M. Bennett and his paper hav never advocated the Freelove doctrin.

When the Inter-Ocean said that D. M. Bennett admitted that the letters as published were genuine, it stated a falsehood. He admitted no such thing. He said he wrote those silly letters, but that they were not presented in their proper light, or something of that import. I take it for granted that they had been garbled, for it is evident that any one who would stoop so low as J. C. Bundy, Charles Ellis, and S. W. Paine, and I might add B. F. Underwood—I say those who would lend themselves to such a low calling would do almost anything infamous. The last-named Liberal lecturer, B. F. Underwood, has said many grand and good things for our cause; he is both intelligent and logical; but alas! actions speak with more force than words. From any good he or the others above named hav done I would by no means seek to detract. However, I feel confident there are at least two points in his past history where he has made serious mistakes. One is in troubling himself so much apologizing for F. E. Abbot, and the other is more recently taking such a conspicuous attitude against the theory of Freelovism and catering to Christian morality. In my opinion the time is not far distant when he will discover those mistakes.

Now I hope that in the future the infliction will not be repeated by sending any more abuse of the good name of D. M. Bennett or any other man or woman.

Now, Mr. Abbot, if you are not the one who sent me the little pamphlet, and if you should know who did, please send him this letter, so he can consider it addressed to him. Probably if it is not at home when it reaches you, it should be sent to the ex-Rev. Charles Ellis.

Hoping that all who profess to be emancipated from the thraldom of priestcraft to the broad and open fields of Liberalism may see the inconsistency of persecution, I subscribe myself Yours fraternally, WM. A. THOMPSON.

BOSTON, June 5, 1880.

MY DEAR BENNETT: I am very glad that you answered Dr. Rockwell to the point and so eloquently, as no one except a Bennett could, for there is only one D. M. Bennett. The Liberalism that you advocate has the right ring to it, and that is what every true Liberal must indorse, namely, to allow to every person the same privilege we claim for ourselves. Anything short of this is not worth having. Neither is it worthy of the name of Liberalism. I know we hav many, and right here in the Athens of America, who claim to be a little better and more pure than the rest of us, and especially since Joe Cook patted this trio so lovingly on the back; and I should not be surprised to see Abbot, Ellis, or even Underwood, promenading arm in arm with Joe Cook, or some other over-zealous Christian, any fair day, especially if they thought they could make a dollar by so doing. O, yes, they are altogether too pure for Liberals, or for this world. I should recommend that they go in training, with Moody and Sankey, for the next world. Only think how Liberal it was, and magnanimous, too, in those worthies who were so very kind, as to go away out to Greenwood, yes, and away back into the woods, to examine a man's private letters, and then to publish them to the world with all the embellishments this talented trio were capable of. Why, Joe Cook himself could not hav done it better. But, friend Bennett, I think you hav one of these cornered; although he is Savage, you need not be afraid, and I hope he is pleased with your correction, but I must say, and all true Liberals will second the motion, that that deed was worthy only of savages, and, for one, I say they are welcome to all the glory there is in such vile transactions. One word more, and I am done.

It seems to me that St. Anthony is not "panning out" very well of late. He is losing caste. His star is waning, and will soon pass into oblivion, to be seen no more. O, Anthony, you will soon go, not where the good niggers go, but to the other place. Now, Anthony and his backers believe in a devil, or pretend to, and preach it. Now, I must ask all Christians, If the devil does not get such fellows as Comstock, what is the use of having a devil? The question is open. I would most respectfully say to the Ohio brother, that we, as Liberals, must not and can not expect anything to benefit our cause from either great party, for both are led by frauds. There is no difference. We hav weighed them both and found them wanting. Yes, wanting to make the people slaves. They are not to be trusted. It seems to me, with my experience, that every Liberal should be a Greenbacker, and every Greenbacker ought to be a Liberal. This, to my mind, would be a consistency, and we are told that that is a jewel, and jewels are very rare indeed. Good-bye for the present. DR. ANDREWS.

P. S.—I happened to see in our Boston Herald a little paragraph in regard to the Index, and, as usual it had to slur Mr. Bennett. I want to say right here, for the benefit and information of the Herald, that Mr. Bennett, or any true Liberal, never gloats over any man's misfortunes or strikes a man when he is already down. It is the pure and the Christians who do that, and hav their hearts filled with hatred to all who do not believe, and from their brimstone throats comes forth the blue flame of hatred, slander, and abuse. If the Herald would be as ready to champion the cause of the oppressed as it is to slander and abuse its betters, it might do a vast amount of good. DR. A.

ELGIN, ILL., June 4, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: The Liberal cause in Elgin has recently made a move and taken upon itself a local habitation and a name. Some days ago a number of Freethinkers of this city came together and organized in temporary form a Liberal association.

W. S. Bell had been secured to giv a course of lectures in this place, and we deemed it best to organize and see that everything should be done necessary to make the lectures a success. We secured for Mr. Bell the best hall in the city. He has come and gone, and we are happy to say that Mr. Bell has done good work for the cause of Freethought in this place. As a speaker, he is easy, and yet forcible in his method, showing great familiarity with the subjects he discourses; besides, it was specially gratifying to meet in Mr. Bell a man who is eminently sociable, and one who puts on no airs either on the platform or off it. He has made many warm friends here, who, at no distant day, will want to hear him again.

I hav the pleasure to inform you that while Mr. Bell was here, and with his assistance, we hav formed an auxiliary League, and on behalf of which I send you kindly greeting, hoping that the villainies of Comstock may never rob you of your liberty again. I should also, before closing, say that Mr. Bell spoke brave words in your behalf in one of his lectures. THE TRUTH SEEKER is not forgotten. We shall attempt to get more subscribers for it. Yours fraternally,

J. H. CUMMINGS, Sec. Elgia L. L.

ST. CATHERINES, ONT., June 5, 1880.

DEAR BENNETT: Please allow me, with the thousands of others, to congratulate you on your release from martyrdom. I am a constant reader of the gospel according to D. M. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav watched everything pro and con, and finally learn that Abbot has given up the ghost—just as I predicted his conduct would result—and he may thank himself for it. His shooting to kill you resulted in killing himself; and his name, together with Bundy's and Comstock & Co.'s, will pass into oblivion when yours will pass into history to be seen and read by generations to come, as the nineteenth-century martyr for free thought, free speech, free press, and free mails.

But to the subject which caused me to unsheath my pen: On reading the articles by Clarke Irvine touching the Temples of Ellora in India the thought came to me that it would be of benefit to the Liberal cause to select the most important parts of those histories referring to those temples and republish them in some cheap form, for I presume few is the number who know or hav any idea that such temples exist on this globe. In my opinion, they throw the Mosaic account of creation into the shade altogether, besides the construction of them being quite incomprehensible. And who has any knowledge whatever of the race that constructed them in that solid rock?

I corresponded with Irvine, to learn where those works might be found, if he knew, and he referred me to David G. Francis, dealer in old books, 17 Astor Place, New York, and John Evans, dealer in second-hand books, in Brooklyn. I since learn that Francis has a copy of Seely's "Wonders of Ellora," price $2.15, but where a copy of the "Asiatic Researches" can be found I am not yet aware. I am informed that the "Asiatic Researches," givs measurements, distances, etc., with the utmost minuteness and particularity. also several fine drawings, I think. A volume compiled from those works, and prefaced by yourself, I think would secure a big circulation and be a benefit to our cause. You may hav those works already; if so, they are most valuable, in my estimation. Please giv this your earliest consideration, and reply.

I was much pleased with your dream on the convention of the gods, and would like a copy of it.

Yours for free thought, speech, press, and mails,

C. B. THOMPSON.

[All the letters from the Albany Penitentiary will appear in the next edition of "From Behind the Bars." Quite full accounts of the temples in the rock in India will be found in our "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times."]

ALBA, MO., May 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I sincerely hope that this will find you in your TRUTH SEEKER sanctum instead of in that orthodox shoe shop over at Albany. The penitentiary is good enough for such stock as Comstock, but you never did of right belong there. You are needed on the outside. You are wanted at the front. Our country calls for you to lead her people out of a bondage worse than Israel's. To the Liberal people of America you are "a bright star in the east." In exposing the isms and schisms that bind and mislead the people, you are the grandest success of the age. Now that your prison labor is ended (I hope forever), and you are stout and free, I feel like shouting, Glory hallelujah! Could the multitude of Liberals that inhabit these United States, at this moment, greet you with one shout of joy and gladness, with which their hearts are filled, I fancy it could be heard from Atlantic wave to Pacific shore.

I sent you my name as a trial subscriber January 1, 1880. I now wish to renew by the year. THE TRUTH SEEKER is good enough for me. I never expected to find a paper that spoke my own sentiments and feelings as THE TRUTH SEEKER does. I hav for several years wished for just such a journal.

Find inclosed $8, $3 for subscription, and $5 for your prison book, "Ancient and Modern Gods and Religions," in cloth. I am poor, but I want your books. I feel that it is the duty of every Liberal to help pay you for your labor of last year. Your wages ought to be ten times larger than when you are free.

I never expect to see you East, but now that you are at liberty, I hope you will make a trip West on a lecturing tour. I think the lectures would pay you well, besides disposing of a great number of your prison books that you would not otherwise, and giving your numerous friends the satisfaction of seeing you. Believe me, fraternally yours,

J. T. KENNEDY.

CENTERVILLE, UTAH, May 23, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: The inclosed dollar I send towards my subscription for your fearless paper. I must say that I admire T. B. Wakeman's speeches. I am glad that you are at your business again, and hope that you will fire hot shot and shell into the ranks of the Christians, and let all honest people into the light, that they may see and understand what kind of a God the pious, priestly people worship, for I think it is high time to let the cat out of the bag, and for all to understand a little more of the character of this old Bible fellow, the Jewish Jehovah.

Well, Mr. Bennett, I must tell you that I hav sold out here, and I thought I would ask you if you could tell me of a good farming district, and where I could purchase a good farm, for I want to get out from among these infernal saintly leeches and adulterous humbugs. If any of your subscribers can giv me the desired information, I wish they would do so through the columns of your paper, for which I shall be very thankful. RICHARD FLINT.

DALLAS, TEX., May 30 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find P. O. order for two dollars, for which please send me the second volume of your new book. The price of your new book is so low that every Liberal should hav a copy. It was written in prison by an old man who committed no crime. Just think of it! What is there that Christians will not do to crush Infidelity? I hope they will never succeed in getting you shut out from the world again.

Yours with great respect, MRS. IDA SPENCER.

OGDEN, May 13, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Just allow me to congratulate you on your safe return to your business and family. You hav accomplished a mighty work, and the grand results will be made plainer as your work progresses. You hav many congratulatory letters, and I will not trouble you with a long one. You are a grander, greater man that ever.

JOHN A. JOST.

TRIPOLI, IOWA, May 21, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: It did me good to read of the doings in Chickering Hall after your release from a Christian bastile. I am a Spiritualist, and hav been for many years. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from its first issue in Illinois, and I would like to know in what number of it you "ignored and sneered at the cause [Spiritualism] continuously," as charged by H. Tuttle. Or does Mr. Tuttle mean you did not write it, but made faces at it? Now, Mr. Bennett, I, for one, hav read your paper too long and closely to believe a word of those charges, but hav observed that whenever you hav referred to the subject it has always been with that candor and fairness that becomes a true and honest Liberal. Let THE TRUTH SEEKER continue to improve in the future as it has in the past. Observe the precaution of James Parton's letter of May 10th, and all the powers of superstition and bigotry will be as naught. Yours truly, D. P. WALLING.

WOLCOTT, May 23, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: Here I am again, after a nine weeks' illness, and the first thing I feel like doing is to inclose three dollars to pay for my paper up to April 1881, and the next is to congratulate you on your emancipation from the orthodox bastile and Christian hell at Albany, where you hav been confined for being an honest man, and for trying, by voice and pen, to persuade other people to be honest, and to work with might and main to retain their rights under the Constitution, as bequeathed to them by their sires, as against the vile and hypocritical tories, sanctimoniously pharisaical, and clothed in the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in. "Pity 'tis, 'tis true," but it has come to this, that it is almost impossible for a man or woman to be honest and be respected by the major part of the community on account of the waves of falsehood, bigotry, and superstition that are sweeping over our once happy land.

You are back again, brother Bennett, in your old place, where you can enjoy the society of your loved consort, and that, too, until nature's laws require a separation, for I firmly believe that no man will again be imprisoned in these United States for opinion's sake.

Yours fraternally, J. NELSON PORTER.

NORTH HANNIBAL, N. Y., May 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: On Sunday, May 2d, our organization publicly rejoiced that you were again as free as the rest of us. The conservative element with us gave occasion for some quite sharp discussions, which ended in the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That he who suffers to maintain the liberty of conscience, and the freedom of speech and press, is truly a martyr.

Resolved, That no evidence is wanting to establish before this organization the fact that Mr. Bennett was fined and imprisoned because he is a Freethinker, and not because he was an obscenist.

Resolved, That we, as members of this organization, are not in sympathy with all of "Cupid's Yokes," but believe that the author had a right to entertain such beliefs, and to write and publish them.

The discussions referred to brought out facts relating to your trial that orthodox friends present had never before heard of.

I am anxious to report in this that our club is in good working order, and holds meetings fortnightly. President Ball and myself further celebrated May 2d by addressing a meeting in the schoolhouse at Bunker Hill. The orthodox element was well represented among the hearers, and knowing their fondness for Bible texts, I chose Micah iii, 11: "The heads thereof judge for a reward, the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money."

W. J. BRADT, Cor. Sec. N. H. L. L.

Rev. George Chainey.

BY ALHAZA.

Another star shoots madly from his sphere
To hear the voice of heaven-descended Truth
Who wanders o'er the crumbling wrecks of faith
With calm, collected brow and fearless youth.

Silent she stood, a statue meek and pale,
When kings and priests stood ankle-deep in blood;
That sacred stream ran from the people's veins—
The only fountain that can do us good.

Thus, reasons Truth (Oh, bind it on thy heart),
The few unjustly rule a countless throng,
Pour in their ear some false and maddening tale,
And take their gold and giv them but a song.

Oh, dearly bought, the people's precious wit!
They love the pomp of sacerdotal power;
Blinded and robbed, they tread a thorny path,
While their deceivers revel every hour.

For the sold wretch there yawns a fearful hell,
While his betrayer pours out ruddy wine;
And every tear that dews a wealthy eye
Makes the board richer when the clergy dine.

But Chainey loves his thoughtful, precious flock;
He will not, Crosby-like, enact a lie.
His noble bosom bears no lust for power:
That truth may liv, he e'en would dare to die.

Destiny.

1856.

Paris, from throats of iron, silver, brass,
Joy-thundering cannon, blent with chiming bells
And martial strains, the full-voiced pean swells.
The air is starred with flags, the chanted mass
Thrones all the churches, yet the broad streets swarm
With glad-eyed groups, who chatter laugh, and pass
In holiday confusion, class with class.
And over all the spring the sun-floods warm!
In the Imperial palace that March morn,
The beautiful young mother lay and smiled;
For by her side just breathed the prince, her child,
Heir to an empire, to the purple born,
Crowned with the Titan's name that stirs the heart
Like a blown clarion—one more Bonaparte.

Born to the purple, lying stark and dead,
Transfixed with poisoned arrows, 'neath the sun
Of brazen Africa! Thy grave is one.
Forefated youth (on whom were visited Follies and sins not thine), whereat the world,
Heartless howe'er it be, will pause to sing
A dirge, to breathe a sigh, a wreath to fling
Of rosemary and rue with bayleaves curled.
Enmeshed in toils ambitious, not thine own,
Immortal, loved boy-prince, thou tak'st thy stan
With early doomed Don Carlos, hand in hand
With mild-browed Arthur, Geoffrey's murdered son.
Louis the Dauphin lifts his thorn-ringed head,
And welcomes thee, his brother, 'mongst the dead. —Scribner's Monthly.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. # Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

Prof. Tyndall Crosses the Rubicon.—It is the opening address of the president of the most important convention of scientific men in the world. Every line of it breathes thought, power, eloquence. It is in many respects one of the most extraordinary utterance of our time.—N. Y. Tribune.

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

A BUSINESS MAN'S RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL VIEWS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 206pp. Price $1.

The author's conception of a possible future life on this earth is really eloquent and beautiful, and will enlist attention. A curiosity to see what a philanthropic business man has to say upon the social problem, from a poor man's standpoint, will doubtless alone induce many to buy the book. The bold and trenchant blows which he deals "Society" in all its ramifications of corruption and inhumanity; his earnest and manly plea for the social regeneration of the lower classes—will, unless we are much mistaken, make the book the best-abused and best-liked production of the day by these two classes respectively.—Critical Review.

"AN ESSAY ON THE BIBLE NARRATIVE OF CREATION."

By Augustus R. Grote, A.M.

The Boston Commonwealth says: It is a rationalistic examination of the scripture account, with a conclusion that the literal teaching of the theory is injurious to the mind, as it proves an impediment to intellectual advancement.

The Boston Traveler says: He has given a clear, yet condensed, criticism from the literary and scientific points of view. An eloquent and forcible protest against the tyranny of dogma. He endeavors to show that all efforts to reconcile science with a literal interpretation of the account of Genesis must only end in confusion.

The Popular Science Monthly says: The discrepancies between the two accounts are very fully indicated, and the different points of view from which they were written explained. . . . Interesting chapters follow on the myths of the old world, which resemble those of Genesis. . . . The book is characterized by directness of argument, and the best material has been diligently used. . . . The archæologist and philologist will find many new points in the book, which is noteworthy for its additions to science as well as for its distinctive literary merits. Paper 40 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

STANDARD WORKS.

Published by D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. By D. M. BENNETT, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Octavo; second edition; enlarged and revised. Being the biographies and important doctrines of the most distinguished teachers, philosophers, reformers, innovators, founders of new schools of thought and religion, disbelievers in current theology, and the deepest thinkers and most active humanitarians of the world, from Menu down through the succeeding three thousand years to our own time. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church: Their Crimes and Persecutions. By D. M. BENNETT. Biographical sketches of eminent Christians, from the time of the reputed founder of Christianity to the present. A companion book to "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers." Containing a correct history of the distinguished ornaments and diabolical characters of the church. A full account is given of the bloody wars which Christianity has inhumanly waged to spread its rule. It also gives a history of Jesuitism for three centuries. The whole is based upon Christian authorities. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of Lord John Russell, who was twice Premier of England. Complete, from the London edition. This remarkable work has attracted unusual attention in England. It is the work of a brilliant young lord of Christian parents, who was brought up in the Christian faith, but who, upon investigation and reflection, became a decided unbeliever; the result of which is the elaborate work here named, the preparation of which occupied him several years. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine, Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Contains Life of Paine; his theological writings—the Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams, Letter to Camille Jordan, Of the Religion of Deism; his political Writings—Common Sense, The Crisis (Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive), and The Rights of Man. All in one octavo volume, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt, $4.50.

Supernatural Religion: An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Decidedly the ablest work in this line ever published. Probably no work printed in England excited greater interest than this. It was issued anonymously, and the great inquiry was, "Who is the author?" It is most damaging to the claims of Christianity, and its positions and statements have never been refuted by the clergy. It is very scholarly, and enters into the examination of the original Greek in detail and with great exactness. Three 8vo volumes in one, revised and corrected, and accurately reproduced from the latest London edition, which sells at $15.00. The London Times, in speaking of this great work, uses this language: "No book published in the world, at any time or in any age, has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition, than any other book." Published complete in a volume of 1,000 pages, with a full index, at the following low prices: Cloth, $4; leather, $5; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or, Physiognomy Illustrated. Being the moral and volitive dispositions of mankind as manifested in the human form and countenance. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. This work is the fruit of twenty years' diligent observation of nature, and presents a new and complete analysis and classification of the powers of the human mind and body, together with the physiognomical signs by which every faculty is disclosed. In one volume of 650 8vo pp.; illustrated by 260 cuts. Price, cloth, $3; leather, $4; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

Paine's Theological Works. In one volume, comprising Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Eskine, Essay on Dreams, Of the Religion of Deism, etc., with a Life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Political Works. In one volume, comprising Common Sense, The Crisis (Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive), The Rights of Man, and Life of Paine, with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. By THOMAS PAINE. Large type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and the Examination of Prophecies. By THOMAS PAINE. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. By THOMAS PAINE, His first and most important political work. Paper, 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist

CONCERNING

Christ and Christianity.

"This volume gives us mountains of evidence that the Christ of the Bible was never born, never crucified, never died. . . . It contains more deep researches into the far back pages of antiquity than any volume I ever read ANTICHRIST proves from history that James Kepha (Cephas, alias Peter), and Paul, all lived before the Christian era, and so did Jesus Christ—indeed, many Christs and many by the name of Jesus. . . . In my precious collection of Liberal works I hav placed this last valuable acquisition first and foremost of all."

Gems of Thought.

DAGON must stood, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit as shall quite despoil him
Of all those boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his worshipers.
—Milton.

WHEN the seven classic philosophers were holding a banquet together, it was asked of them, "What is the most universal possession?" The reply agreed upon, as most accurate, was hope, for he that has nothing else has hope.—David Swing.

ONE man is continually led by the complexion of his temper to forbode evil to himself and to the world; while another, after a thousand disappointments, looks forward to the future with exultation and feeling his confidence in Providence unshaken.—Dugald Stewart.

I AM always for the builders who bring some addition to our knowledge, or at least some new thing to our thoughts. The finders of faults, the confuters and pullers-down, do not only erect a barren and useless triumph upon human ignorance, but advance us nothing in the acquisition of truth.—Locke.

WE hav all known good men who would hav been much better and more useful if they had occasionally met and conversed with people who did not agree with them. It is a most dangerous thing for any human being to liv among those by whom his views and opinions are never questioned.—Parsons.

EVERY man has his own creed in proportion as he is an individual, and as he grows daily in experience his belief must grow. It is a very common saying among us that at forty we are sure of fewer things than at thirty. The positivist period follows the credulous period, and is succeeded by the teachable.—Powell.

IT is the man who has seen nothing of life who is intolerant of his fellow-men. Misanthropical people hav, in most cases, been made misanthropes by hoping too much. But go on thinking the best you can of mankind; working the most you can for them; never scolding them because they will not be wise your way; and even then be sure that, think as gently and lovingly as you can, you hav dealt but a scant measure of tolerance to your fellow-man.—Arthur Helps.

THE Christian's idea of religion is that it is something that ought to suppress free thought and inquiry, get possession of the government, control legislation, govern the schools, regulate public libraries, and run the world generally. The Christian believes in schools, if he can teach them; in books, if he can write them; in governments, if he can administer them; in laws, if he can make them; in churches, if he can preach in them; but he is opposed to anybody else having anything to do with politics, literature, education, or religion.—L. K. Washburn.

MANY doctrines generally believed in the early church are universally rejected now. The doctrin of Chiliasm, or the millennial reign of Christ on earth; the doctrin of the under world, or Hades, where all souls went after death; the doctrin of the atonement made by Christ to the devil. Such were some of the prevailing views held in the early ages. The oldest doctrin is not certainly the truest; or, as Theodore Parker once said to a priest in Rome, who told him that the primacy of Peter was asserted in the second century, "A lie is no better because it is an old one."—Dr. J. F. Clarke.

I DO not see wherein the Bible code is any better, as a whole, than the old one of Lycurgus, the Spartan law-giver, who lived in the ninth century before our era. Some portions of his code hav been improved upon, and others are better than the Bible code. All of good belongs to no age or people or book. Go back into the past as far as history will carry you, and you will find good men and good codes, and wise men and wise codes; and you will also find bad men and bad codes, and ignorant men and unwise codes. And this is just as true of the times, codes, and peoples of that "bolstered-up book," as of any other book the world has ever possessed.—Elmina D. Slenker.

IF the existence of good in the universe implies a benevolent creator, by the same rule, the existence of evil implies a malevolent creator. The evil is not less certain than the good. No refining can do away with this fact. Your hope that evil will cease, and good continue to exist, seems without foundation in reason. Why not good cease, and unmixed evil remain? You wish that this should not be, and think it ought not. But if your wish and opinion could prevail, there would be no evil now, would there? We cannot understand the nature of things, nor account for it in any possible way. To suppose a theos does not help the matter in the smallest degree, but makes it worse, and is, besides, utterly gratuitous. It follows that theology, or the confident talk about theos is, as I hav before said, babbling.—Waters.

THE plea sometimes made on behalf of Christianity—that it must be divine, because it could not otherwise hav made its way in the world with its austere and self-denying doctrin and practice—is based upon unsound views as to both the laws of human nature and the special matter of fact involved. Enthusiasm and other motivs often cause that to be accepted and practised which is in itself very trying to human feelings. If the prevalence of a religion of pain and mortification were necessarily a divine attestation, the Hindoo religion, so widespread and so full of cruel severities, would be more markedly divine than Christianity. . . . It is a clear fact that the great body of Christians do not now lead lives of self-denial and mortification, but seek and enjoy the comforts of luxurious living as naturally as any other people.—Waters.

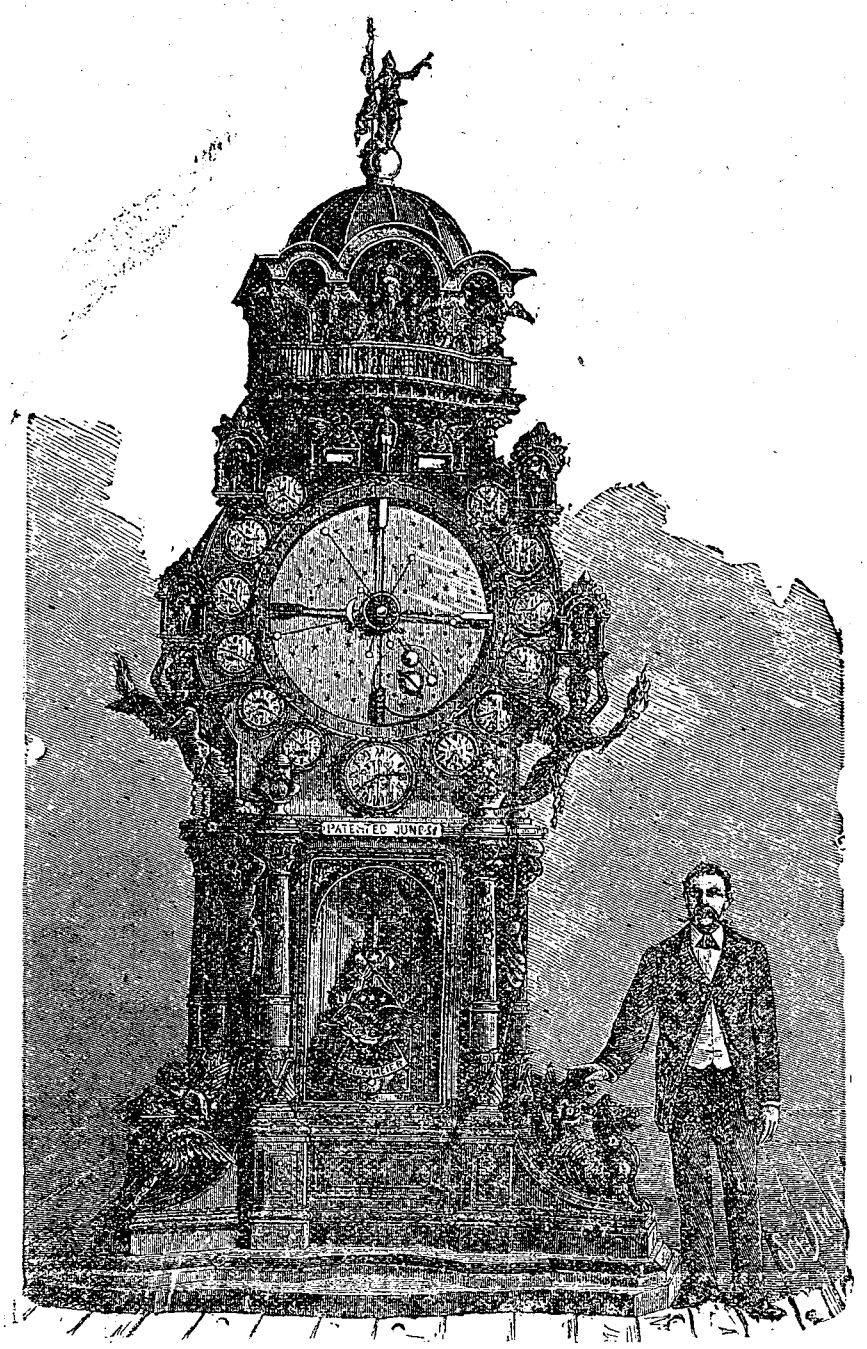
AN imaginativ Irishman givs utterance to this lamentation: "I returned to the halls of my fathers by night, and I found them in ruins. I cried aloud, 'My fathers, where are they?' and echo responded, 'Is that you, Paterick M'Clathery?'"

PROFESSOR: "Which is the most delicate of the senses?" Sophomore: "The touch." Professor: "Prove it." Sophomore: "When you sit down on a tack. You can't hear it; you can't see it; you can't taste it; you can't smell it; but it's there."

A BRIDGEPORT woman unconsciously went to church the other Sunday with two hats on her head, one inside the other, and a score or more of other women, thinking it was a new style of hat, came very near expiring of envy before the error was discovered.

"IT is said that the male wasp does not sting." But as a male and female wasp wear the same kind of a polonaise, and look as much alike as twins, the only way to distinguish their sex is to catch one. If it stings you, it is a female; if not, it is a gentleman wasp.



"HALLO, there, how do you sell wood?" "By the cord." "Pshaw! How long has it been cut?" "Four feet." "How dumb! I mean how long has it been since you cut it?" "No longer than it is now." "See here, old fellow, you are too all-fired bright to liv long."

A KIND physician living near Mount Morris Park, wishing to smooth the last hours of a poor woman whom he was attending, asked her if there was anything that he could do for her before she died. The poor soul, looking up, replied, "Doctor, I hav always thought I should like to hav a glass butter-dish before I died."

A STYLISH woman entered a photograph gallery at Columbus, O., the other day, and desired to hav the picture of her baby taken. The babe was placed in position before the camera and the photographer went to work. The woman slipped out and away, and at last accounts the baby was still on the photographer's hands.

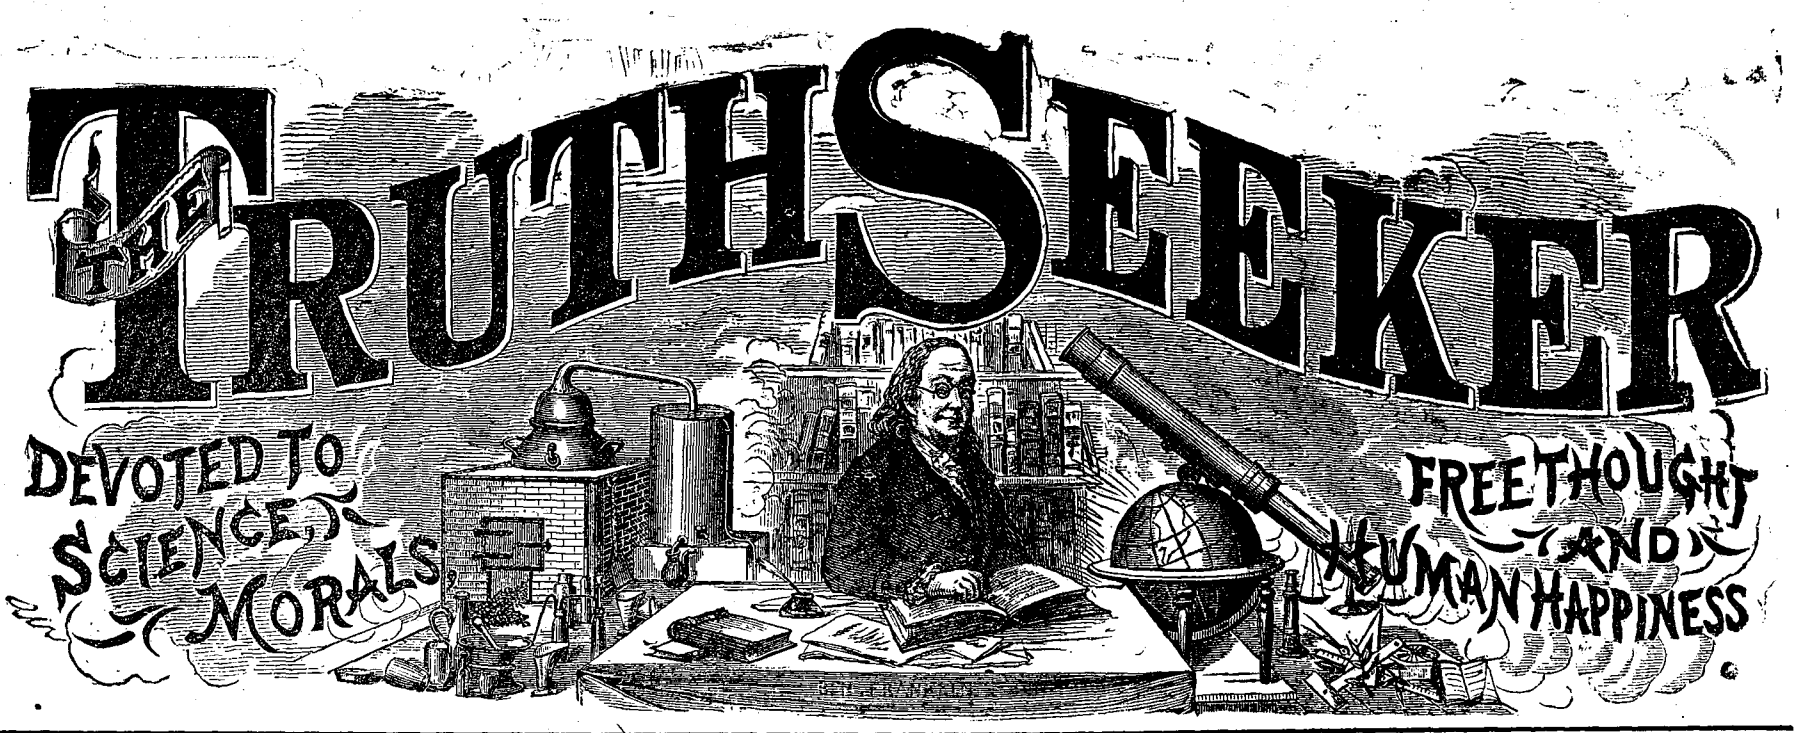
ON EXHIBITION DAILY AT

TAMMANY HALL, 14th STREET, bet. 3d & 4th AVES., N. Y.

THE WONDERFUL AMERICAN

ASTRONOMICAL CLOCK.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CLOCK.



The clock is eighteen feet in height, eight feet wide by five deep, and weighs five thousand pounds. There are required in the construction of the clock two thousand wheels, besides the great number of shafts, pinions, and other machinery necessary to complete the grand combination. The clock is run by weights which weigh seven hundred pounds, and is wound up once in twelve days. The case or exterior of the clock is entirely of black walnut, and is elegantly carved or engraved in designs appropriate and symbolic of our Republic. Above the main body of the clock is a marble dome, upon which Washington sits in his chair of state, protected by a canopy which is surmounted by a gilded statue of Columbia; on either side of Washington is a colored servant in livery, guarding the doors, which open between the pillars that support the canopy; on the four corners of the main body of the clock are black walnut niches containing human figures, emblematic of the march of life; the two lower ones are supported by two female figures with flaming torches; one of the niches contains the figure of an infant, the second the figure of a youth, the third of a man in middle life, the fourth of an aged graybeard, and still another, directly over the center, contains a skeleton, representing Father Time. All these figures hav bells and hammers in their hands. At the end of every quarter hour the infant strikes upon the bell which he holds in his hand. At the end of each half hour the youth strikes; at the end of three-quarters of an hour the man, and at the end of each hour the graybeard. Death then follows with a measured stroke to toll the hour.

The clock shows local time in hours, minutes, and seconds; the difference in time at Chicago, Washington, San Francisco, Melbourne, Pekin, Cairo, Constantinople, St. Petersburg, Vienna, London, Berlin, and Paris; the day of the week, calendar day of the month, month of the year, and seasons of the year; the signs of the zodiac, the revolutions of the earth on its own axis, and also around the sun; the revolutions of the moon around the earth, and with it around the sun; also, the moon's changes from the quarter to half, three-quarters, and full; the correct movement of the planets around the sun. The inventor has a crank-attachment to the clock, by means of which he can hasten the working of the machinery, in order to show its movements to the public.

A large music box, manufactured at Geneva expressly for this clock, begins to play at the same time that the skeleton strikes the hour, and a surprising scene is enacted upon the platform beneath the canopy. Washington slowly rises from his chair to his feet, extending his right hand, presenting the Declaration of Independence; the door on the left is opened by the servant, admitting all the Presidents from Washington's time, including President Hayes. Each President is dressed in the costume of his time. The likenesses are admirable. Passing in file before Washington, they face and raise their hands as they approach him, and walking naturally across the platform, disappear through the opposite door, which is promptly closed behind them by the second servant. Washington retires into his chair, and all is quiet, save the measured tick of the huge pendulum, and the ringing of the quarter hours, until another hour has passed.

Excursion parties and every man, woman, and child from the East, West, North, and South visiting the city of New York should not leave without seeing this WONDERFUL WORK OF ART, THE GREAT AMERICAN CLOCK. On exhibition daily in TAMMANY HALL, East 14th street, from 10 A.M., to 10 P.M. Sundays 2 P.M. to 10 P.M.

Notes and Clippings.

"How do you pronounce s-t-i-n-g-y?" Prof Stearns asked the young gentleman nearest the foot of the class. And the smart bad boy stood up and said it depended a great deal whether the word applied to a man or a bee. Go to the head, young fellow.

The religious sect called the Dunkards recently held a great convention at Lanark, Ill. Fully thirty thousand people were in attendance. Great barracks were built for the three-days' meeting, and the scene at the camp resembled an army encampment.

Henri Rochefort, the Communistic French editor, was dangerously wounded in a duel in Switzerland on the 31. Another duel was fought on Sunday 6 h, between two Parisian editors, in which one was wounded; and two more duels between French editors are soon to take place.

The statement which has recently been made to the effect that there are only twenty-six Presbyterian churches in this city is pronounced by the New York Observer to be false. That paper says there are fifty-three churches and twenty-eight chapels with pastors, making eighty-one in all. It is not a very cheerful reflection that in this advanced and intellectual age of the world such a bigot and tyrant as John Calvin proved himself to be should hav such an extensiv following.

The Chicago Tribune now spells have "hav," and favorite without an e. Thus one paper after another follows the lead of The Truth Seeker. It is to be hoped that in a few years the use of all silent unnecessary letters will be dropped. When it becomes the rule to spell words as they are pronounced and to pronounce them as they are spelled, pronunciation will become uniform, and both orthography and pronunciation will be learned in less than half the time required by the old system.

A curious contest as to the legal status of Roman Catholic archbishops in this country is likely to grow out of the case of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati. He holds that the churches, seminaries, and charity edifices in his diocese, the titles of which were in his name, were in a legal sense his private property, to do with as he thought best. Acting upon this theory, he has transferred a large share of the property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors. This action is opposed by the pastors and other officers of the churches, who assert that the Archbishop has no right to dispossess them; that he simply holds the property in trust.

The news from Constantinople givs warning that everything is going there from bad to worse. It is not alone the row in Albania or the frightful state of things in Armenia. Anarchy is eating into the heart of the empire. The disorganization in the capital is only less than in the provinces. There is no public revenue. The officials squeeze the taxpayers, but it is like drawing blood from turnips. Not a single promis or undertaking entered into by the Turkish government with respect to the internal administration of the country has been observed, and what is thought most ominous in the future is that the Sultan protests so much.

In regard to the moons of Mars, the interesting fact appears that neither in rate of motion nor in distanee from the planet is there agreement between the two. The phenomena familiar to an inhabitant of Mars must be very remarkable; the outer satellite remains above the horizon for two and a half days and nights, and the inner rises in the West and sets in the East twice in the course of the night. The lunar method of determiniug longitudes must be singularly easy with such a rapidly moving satellite, it being, in fact, equivalent to the addition of a minute hand to the celestial clock which in our case has to be read by the hour hand alone.

The sun's temperature, according to Newton, Ericsson, Senchi, and others, cannot be less than from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 degrees, that is, 1,800,000 to 3,600,000 Fahr.; but Pouillet, Vicaire, Violle, and many others maintain that the temperature cannot exceed 2,700 to 4,500 Fabr. Not long since the French Academy offered an important prize for the solution of the question, which resulted in a reward to Violle, certificates of honorable mention to Vicaire and Crova, and a withdrawal of the prize, in consequence of the difficulty and uncertainty involved in the problem. Senchi obtained more than 2,000,000 degrees by Newton's formula, while Violle obtained only 1,500 degrees by the formula of Dulong and Petit, from the same set of observations. M. Rosetti concludes that the temperature cannot be less than 13,000, or much more than 36,000 Fahr.

Modern Christianity is developing in Iowa. This time it is a pillar of the Baptist persuasion for incest with his granddaughter of about twenty. A sham trial was started at the county seat, but the principal witness was paid liberally to be absent. The prosecutor, too, was missing, no doubt for a consideration. Hush money and the sanctity of the church covers a multitude of sins. The church has become a "chartered libertin," and is quite consistent in character.

The latest "darkey" song in Louisiana is entitled "Ingersoll and the Devil." One verse runs thus:

"Streak 'o lightuin' fo' miles long,
Some dese days gwine ter hit him,
Ing'soll sings a nudder song
When de debbil git him!
Debbil watch fo' such as him—
Ketch him in his collar,
Choke him black an' hit him 'bim,'
But him till him holler!
Debbil stan' up kimboo straight,
Laugh at Ing'soll prancin',
Stan' him on a red-hot plate—
Pat while Bob's a dancin'!"

The Mt. Olive Baptist congregation (colored) of Philadelphia is small enough to find accommodation in a church twenty-five feet by thirty, yet is large enough to hav violent internal troubles. A recent meeting was uncommonly noisy, and the crowd that gathered in the street were astonished to see Deacon Howard pop headforemost out of the window. Dr. Brown, superintendent of the Sunday-school, subsequently made the following explanation: "When I jined de church, de Sunday-school consisted of four scholars and one teacher, and Mr. Howard was superintendent. I missionaried de school up to twenty-seven scholars and four teachers inside of four weeks. Den we put Mr. Howard out. M. Howard is a college-bred man, but he ain't got no delibery whatsoever, and consequentially he ain't no good as a Sabbath-school superintendent. Den Mr. Howard begun his quarreling. De night ob de fuss he druv de secretary out ob de church, and de secretary come runnin' away up here for me. I went down dere to see that everything was right. But Brudder Howard wouldn't behave hisself, and at last he clang hold o' me and throwed me over de bench. I hollered to Deacon Holliday, 'Take dis coon off'n me!' and den Brudder Howard tried to bite me, and I just turned to and kicked him over de pulpit and chucked him out of de window."

A German writer told the newspaper readers of Vienna a short time ago about a religious play which he had seen in a village in Tyrol. The play was entitled, "The Creation." In the first scene was God the Father, clad in a grotesque costume, wearing big leather gloves and walking up and down on a rainbow, at one end of which was the sun, and the other the moon. The Creator was smoking a pipe, which he occasionally lighted at the two heavenly orbs, soliloquizing all the while. He declared himself very well satisfied with the work he had already accomplished; he had made the world out of nothing; now he would try his hand at making an image of himself—a man. Thereupon came an angel, bringing a huge lump of clay. God the Father put his pipe out of the way, and then with his gloved hands began kneeding the mass until he had brought it into a shape as nearly resembling a man as he possibly could. Then, after some manipulations behind some shrubs conveniently placed, the mass was rolled out again, God the Father gave a whiff of breath, and up jumped Father Adam, a handsome youth of the village, scantily clad, who began to dance about on the stage. Thereupon God the Father took up his pipe again and began cogitating as to how he should make a woman. The feat was accomlished in a most successful manner by God the Father putting Adam into a good sleep and cutting Eve out of the off side, in the true biblical method. Seeing the pair created, God the Father was greatly rejoiced, and exclaimed:

'Tis done! Creation's work is made at last complete,
And I, the maker, must myself stand treat.
[Drinking from a huge stone jug.]
Alas, dear Adam! though 'twas for the best,
Thy first good sleep was e'en thy last day's rest.

One of the victims of the Narragansett disaster was a Methodist pastor of this city, the Rev. Mr. Lockwood. It does not appear that he had any special premonition of the fate so soon to overtake him, but it is certainly a queer coincidence that he should hav written on the fly leaf of a copy of Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," which he had with him in his stateroom, "If I go down with this boat to-night, I should be ashamed to hav this book found with me, were it not that I read it to refute its doctrins." The number of preachers who acquaint themselves at first hand with the views of the men against whom they thunder from the pulpit is not so large that any of them can well be spared; the knowledge of the use to which he put his last hours will lighten the regret that the Rev. Mr. Lockwood was not rescued in time.—Sun. If that reverend gentleman did nothing worse in his life than read Paine's "Age of Reason," God ought not to hav drowned him in that unceremonious manner without notice or warning. If he was able to answer Mr. Paine, he could do what no other bishop or clergyman has ever done, and God would well hav spared him on that accoun'.

The following is a letter copied from Truth, written by one of its correspondents: You are all wrong, for the reason that you do not think as I do and do not believe in my religion. Now, I giv fair warning that unless you come over to my side of the theological field of disputation, I shall not pay down my cent every morning, like a little man, any longer. I do not think I ought to contribute toward the support of a man who thinks he has a right to think otherwise than I think. If, on the other hand, you subscribe to my articles of faith and doctrinal tenets, I will continue to read your otherwise excellent newspaper. I believe in doing the right thing—if you know how. I believe there is an Omnipotent power which don't bother much about us, whether good, bad, or indifferent. I shouldn't wonder if there will be something better doled out to us after we hav left this queer old concern of a world, provided we deserve something better, or not: or, if so, then something worse. I believe that after having made us just so, the Omnipotent power aforesaid will not be too "hard on us" for doing that which we couldn't help doing, because he made us so. I don't believe it was necessary for the said Omnipotent power to hav subjected his "only begotten son" to the shameful and cruel treatment the latter received at the hands of the Jews for the purpose of "saving" others. It could hav been done without the perpetration of that murder, and, so far, the "saving" has been only about five per cent of mankind. I do believe the so-called Christians of our day (if we are to judge them by their narrow-minded uncharitableness) would treat that same Jesus, if he could come again, just about as roughly as the Jews treated him in the days of Herod, if the police didn't protect him, or the authorities put him in a lunatic asylum for preaching his grand doctrins and endeavoring to inculcate into the stony hearts of the multitude his noble principles. Do our Christian ladies say to their unfortunate sisters, "Go thou and sin no more"? Very seldom, if ever. Do our latter-day, self-satisfied saints of the church of the holy horror treat a fallen sister half as well as they treat a horse? I do not believe that blind faith and wide-awake evil deeds will insure a passage beyond and inside the "golden gates." Peter will hav something to say about that. Nor do I believe that the way to heaven is through the average church door, through which the gaudily-dressed sinners pass with sanctimonious manners and elongated visage on Sundays, after having spent six days in the service of the devil. If the editor of Truth believes all this, and don't believe that which I do not believe, and more besides, I shall ignore the existence of his paper and cut down his income at least one penny per diem."—Colonel.

Twenty persons are reported dead or missing.

The Narragansett, having 300 passengers aboard, filled immediately and sunk in shallow water, leaving her upper decks above water, but she immediately took fire and was burnt to the water's edge in an hour. The number of lives lost is variously estimated at from twenty to fifty. Two passengers, in the excitement incident to the collision and fire, blew their brains out with their pistols. The survivors of the wreck were picked up by the other boat, the Stonington, and the steamer City of New York, which chanced to pass at the time.

A Recovered Gospel.

BY MONCURE D. CONWAY.

It is a significant commentary upon the clamorous eagerness of churches to reach the fountain-head of Christian faith that one of the earliest narrativs relating to Christ has not only been left out of the canon but neglected for fifteen centuries, and left to be put together in our own time, and for the first time fully treated by a librarian of London.

The "Gospel according to the Hebrews" was written in Aramaic, the language of Palestine in the time of Jesus. It was current among the Ebionites and Nazarenes very early in our era. Papias related a story found in it; Irenæus was clearly acquainted with the fact of its general use among the Palestinian believers; and there can be thus no doubt that it was known in the first half of the second century. The same cannot be said with equal certainty of either of the canonical gospels. It was referred to in terms inconsistent with any suspicion of ungenuinness by Hegesippus, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Eusebius, Epiphanius, and Theodoret, often as "scripture," and Jerome quotes it thirteen times.

Why then was it left out of the canon? Perhaps the opening sentence of this gospel may suggest a reason: "There was a certain man, by name Jesus, and he of about thirty years, who chose us out." To say it was Ebionite is to indicate its unsophisticated views of Christ's nature. It contained no intimation that Jesus was born differently from others. Its simplicity was fatal to it. There is no Mariolatry in it, and few even of the germs of Christian mythology. If in Sanskrit a work similarly free from famous Hindoo myths and legends were found, it would be at once recognized as either the forgery of a modern scholar or a very primitiv scripture. If early documents concerning Christ are to be judged by ordinary rules of criticism, it must be admitted that a work which possesses fair claims to be considered the very earliest writing concerning Jesus has been omitted from the New Testament, and allowed little or no influence in the formation of Christian dogma and tradition.

Omitted from the canon, it was suffered to go to pieces. The fragments found here and there among the fathers, cited in support of some forming theory of the early church, more or less resemble bits of Matthew. So there arose, and was given out, an assumption that this work was only an Aramaic translation of Matthew; and this notion, certainly untrue, has prevailed long enough to cause even Dr. Davidson to pass it by as a "recension of Matthew."

The reader must be referred to Mr. Nicholson's valuable work for the facts relating to the Thirty Fragments of this gospel. It is to be regretted that this scholar has not gone into the question why a gospel, whose independent origin and whose primitiv character he proves, was omitted from the canon. But my own theory, suggested above, will hardly be deemed an uncharitable assumption by those who examin fairly the substance of this recovered gospel.

The only writings in the New Testament which all scholars agree in referring to the first century of our era are Paul's epistles. Now, in these epistles the only event of an unquestionably miraculous kind mentioned is the resurrection of Christ. Paul says (1 Cor. xv, 7) that after his death Jesus appeared to James. Nowhere else in the Bible is this appearance of Jesus to his brother mentioned. But it is given very particularly in this omitted gospel, and is a notable incident. It is said: "And when the Lord had given his linen cloth to the servant of the priest, he went to James and appeared to him. For James had sworn that he would not eat bread from that hour wherein he had drunk the cup of the Lord until he saw him rising again from the dead. . . . Bring a table and bread. . . . [And ?] he took up the bread and blessed and broke, and afterwards gave to James the Just, and said unto him, My brother, eat, for the Son of Man is risen from them that sleep."

Now, this incident is remarkable in several ways. It shows that Paul, writing in the first century, had at least a germ of this legend in his mind; obviously also the writers of the four gospels had their reasons for omitting it. What could these hav been?

After the death of Jesus there had arisen a tendency among the common people in Judea to put his elder brother James in his place, and ascribe miracles to him. That would hav made Jerusalem, not Rome, the capital of Christianity. Hegesippus, a Christianized Jew, early in the second century, declares that James was regarded by the followers of Christ as their bishop. In the Talmud there is a story that when Rabbi Eliezer was bitten by a serpent, James came to heal him in the name of Jesus; but another, Rabbi Ismael, demanded James's authority to heal, and before the authority could be produced Eliezer died. This shows that James was an important character in Jerusalem. And this accords with the tradition that he (James) was the object of a serious persecution; he was thrown from the pinnacle of the temple, and being not yet dead was assaulted with stones and finally dispatched by a blow on the head from a fuller's pole.

Paul (Gal. i, 19) claims it as a credential that he was personally acquainted with Christ's brother James. He was generally called James the Just for his virtues. Now all this meant not only the supremacy of Judea over the West, but the gathering together of a party under another leadership than that of Peter. This fear of James appears incidentally in the New Testament. James, who had remained in Jerusalem, had preserved the Jewish ideas of the necessity of circumcision, and of not eating with Gentiles. Paul says he was a "pillar" (of the church), and gave him (Paul) the right hand of fellowship that he should go to the heathen, while he (James) attended the Jews—only cautioning Paul to be mindful of the poor (Ebionites?—the word means poor).

When some of James's Jewish friends came to Antioch, they found Peter eating with Gentiles. Whereupon Peter was afraid and withdrew from the Gentiles altogether. Other Jews, says Paul, dissemble likewise, even Barnabas his companion. Then it was that Paul withstood Peter to his face. Paul was not only braver than they, but knew more of James's spirit, which surnamed him the Just. So he rebuked Peter because he was to blame. The statement is in his letter to the Galatians, and it confirms the view that Peter was the competitor of James for leadership of the Jewish party—those who wished to compel the Gentiles to fulfil Jewish ordinances. Peter conquered at last, but it was only after his vision of the unclean animals included with the clean—Gentiles with Jews. What prevailed was Peter's name with Paul's principles. And when there had been invented an impossible saying of Christ, that Peter was the rock on which his church was founded—a text aimed at both James and Paul—it became necessary to drop all the traditions which seemed to honor Christ's brother James—especially one which showed him selected for the one last communion.

That was one reason, probably, why this story was omitted from the four gospels. Another reason was that when about the middle of the second century there arose the legend about Mary and the miraculous conception, there was a disposition to suppress, as far as possible, the fact that Mary had other children besides Jesus. The doctrin of Mary's perpetual virginity naturally followed the theory that she was the spouse of God. The dogma of "perpetual virginity" had its martyrs, in tradition, if not in fact.

St. Basil says that "Zechary was slain by the Jews between the porch and the altar," for saying Mary was a virgin after as well as before the birth of Christ. The fathers contended that those who were called Christ's brothers by objectors to him (Matt. xiii) were only his cousins. Asceticism was already involved. If the celibacy of priests found support in Christ's not having married, the first nunneries might find a strong foundation in the doctrin that his mother was, and remained, virtually a nun. This sophistry had already begun when the canonical gospels were written, and they could not admit such a strong point against it as Jesus' special appearance to his brother James, and addressing him as his brother.

Another important sentence, bearing upon the same point, in this recovered gospel, is one in which Jesus speaks of the Holy Spirit as his mother. "Just now, my mother, the Holy Spirit took me by one of my hairs and bore me up on to the great mountain Tabor."

The Holy Spirit is feminin in Hebrew (Ruba), but it became neuter in Greek, and masculin in Latin. The singular sentence just quoted becomes far less eccentric when taken in connection with the account given in this gospel of Christ's baptism: "Behold the mother of the Lord and his brethren said to him, 'John the Baptist baptizeth for remission of sins; let us go and be baptized by him.' But he said to them, 'Wherein hav I sinned that I should go and be baptized by him? Except perchance this very thing that I hav said is ignorance.'"

Here, let me say in passing, is a sentence which one feels to hav come straight from the heart of a real youth, and I believe Jesus said it. A great revival was going on: Jesus doubts.

The story goes on to say that despite this question, which was not answered, they went and were baptized of John. After his baptism, "as he went up [i. e., out of the water], the heavens were opened, and he saw the Holy Spirit in the shape of a dove descending and entering into him. And a voice out of the heavens, saying, 'Thou art my beloved son, and in thee I am well pleased;' and again, 'I hav this day begotten thee.' And straightway a great light shone around the place. And when John saw it he saith to him, 'Who art thou?'" Further on it is said that the Spirit also spake and said, "My son, in all the prophets did I await thee, that thou mightest come, and I might rest in thee; For thou art my rest; thou art my first-born son that reignest forever."

I submit that we probably hav here the germ out of which grew the entire legend of the miraculous birth of Christ. The voice from heaven says at the baptism, "This day hav I begotten thee." In no other account is that found. When that was written it could not hav been believed that this divine paternity dated back to a physical event thirty years before. The story was not yet completed in the middle of the second century when we find Clement of Alexandria (Stromateis) saying that some people in his time were maintaining that Mary was a virgin, an opinion which he condemns. There is a passage in Justin Martyr about the same time, in which he says he does not agree with those who think Christ "sprung as a man from men." So we can see that the controversy was going on; but that, one hundred and fifty years after the birth of Christ, nobody has any such story as that with which two gospels now open.

The idea of Paul was that baptism was the creation of a new man. This Gospel of the Hebrews records that doctrin as expanded into a narrativ that it was at baptism that the Holy Ghost descended and entered Christ, not rested upon him but entered into him, there engendering a new and divine nature.

When, in obedience to the Hellenic idea of the birth of heroes and demigods from human mothers by divine fathers, the Jewish idea of a baptismal new birth had been overlaid with myths concerning Mary and the holy babe, we find in that poetic legend a correspondence with this on the baptism. Thus, Jesus asks, "Wherein hav I sinned, that I should be baptized? except perchance this very thing that I hav said is ignorance."

In the legend of Mary this doubt of Christ's sinlessness becomes Joseph's doubt of his wife's sinlessness. The Holy Ghost overshadowing Jesus at the baptism is the same that overshadows Mary, to whom is now transferred the title he had applied to the Holy Spirit, "My mother."

The great light which shines over the baptism (not mentioned in the other gospels) becomes the glory that shone around the watching shepherds, and elsewhere the star of Bethlehem. The voice from heaven, "Thou art my beloved son; this day hav I begotten thee," becomes in the birth-legend the angel's saying, "That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." And the heavenly choir sang "Unto you is born this day a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." This day it is at birth against this day at the baptism; it cannot hav been both, but they may be versions of the same thing. And finally, the address which, on this version of the baptism, is made by the Holy Ghost to Jesus, "In all the prophets did I await thee; thou art my rest, my first-born son that reignest forever," corresponds with the ecstatic utterance of Simeon at Christ's circumcision. Simeon came by the Spirit into the temple and said, among other things, "Mine eyes hav seen thy salvation which thou hast prepared before the face of all people, a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people Israel." The incarnation is the physical counterpart of the baptism. The phrases for baptism used by Paul, "the washing of water;" "the washing of regeneration," in the original signify the bridal bath and the bath of birth; they are the old Jewish purifications of the bride before marriage, and of the babe; and among Jews, whose Levitical law provided those turtle-doves which Mary sacrificed, such expressions by Paul would point the way to that development of the baptismal birth and dove to a physical birth and the doves of purification.

The account of Mary and the miraculous birth is only half developed in the New Testament. It is not in harmony with itself, much less with other statements in the gospels. Mary says to Christ, "Thy father and I hav sought thee," as if Joseph were his father. Mary does not appear to hav had so much knowledge as our thelogians now hav as to who was her son's father. Again, even though the real father of her child had announced himself as divine, Mary makes the usual sacrifice of purification in the temple. Furthermore, though Jesus was a family miracle, one gospel says his brothers did not believe in him.

In what has been previously said concerning James the Just, the testimony of the "Gospel according to the Hebrews," concerning the resurrection of Jesus has been partly anticipated. This was necessary in order that the reader might perceive at once an important connection of the fragment with the apostolic age, and also because it was of importance for consideration of the legend concerning Mary. But these fragments hav a momentous word to speak concerning the alleged appearance of Jesus to others than his brother James after death. The story in the fourth gospel, that he particularly asked doubting Thomas to feel his wounds and make sure that it was his very self, appears there to hav been a mere formality. It was not to satisfy a doubt really remaining; it is not even said that Thomas, when invited, touched the wounds; he only cried, "My Lord and my God," and received his rebuke, "Because thou hast seen thou hast believed; blessed are they that hav not seen and yet hav believed."

This account in John would seem to hav been written and pointed against the natural skepticism of people in Greece and Rome, who had to take the miracles on hearsay evidence. But in this gospel Thomas is not specified at all. Jesus is here said to hav invited all his disciples to approach and handle him, and assure themselves that he was not a specter or a demon (daimonion). The spirit of the legend is thus changed. It becomes one of the several stories relating to Christ's supposed reappearance after death, which suggests that it was an altered body. Mary does not recognize him, supposes him to be the gardener. When presently, according to John, he stood among his disciples, and said, "Peace be unto you," he showed them his hands and his side. And then only the disciples rejoiced. The exhibition appears to hav been needed. Luke relates that Jesus walked with two of his disciples to Emmaus; that they did not know him, and asked him if he was a stranger in Jerusalem; and it was only late in the evening when he was eating with them that they knew him, when he vanished out of their sight. Matthew says that when the eleven saw him they worshiped him; but some doubted. And Mark says that he appeared to two of his friends in a form different from that in which he made his first appearance to Mary Magdalene.

This recovered gospel therefore adds to the evidence found in the others that the disciples did not recognize in the man who declared himself the risen Jesus him whom they had seen laid in the tomb. According to Mark, in the very last words uttered by Jesus before he was received up into heaven, "he upbraided them for their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen."

This degree of skepticism among the very witnesses called to support the notion of a resurrection, this testimony of theirs that they could not recognize the thing without being scolded into it, shows the evidence of that resurrection to be the very flimsiest ever offered to the common sense of mankind.

At the same time the accounts are not to be credited with exceptional candor in these statements. They were meant to render the story more realistic. Indeed this story of the resurrection—interesting as the only one that had grown up in the apostolic age, the foundation of all the others—discloses its primitiv character in the ghostly form ascribed to the risen Jesus. Here are revealed the elements at work to shape the Christ of Christendom. It was a part of the universal idea of Hades that if any one ate any food there, he or she belonged there forever. That was why Persephone could not return; she had eaten the seed of a pomegranate. Alcestis was seized by Herakles before she had been in the underworld long enough to eat, but when Alcestis came out her husband could not recognize her. Whether the original notion was that such as returned from Hades were thin from long fasting there, or whatever the idea, it was in accordance with the mythology of the time that the risen body should be shadowy. If Jesus had not been so described the skepticism would hav been greater—every one would hav been certain he had never died at all.

Though we regard these legends as not only intrinsically incredible but as self-destructiv in statement, we are brought face to face with the psychological fact of their existence. Penetrating these myths, we come to our own nature. I ask myself, "Why did I mask myself, seventeen centuries ago, in such a complex web of impossible notions?" And then when I come back with these earliest fragments concerning Christ's person, which simplify the Christian legend, it is only to find the same human nature still disguising itself wherever any powerful religious or social interest or enthusiasm is at work.

The great historic workmen hav always repudiated supernatural authentication. Mohammed, asked for a miracle, pointed to the rising moon. Jesus cried, almost angrily, "A wicked and sensual generation seeketh after a sign," and he asked men to come and share the yoke of a poor and lowly man; but they refashioned him into a divus Cæsar, a divinely-empowered emperor, and from then till now hav made him the mask of all irresponsible power. Christianity is the soul of all imperialism. It cannot co-exist long with popular and constitutional government. It is always open for heaven to make a coup d'etat.

Not long ago, when the little Prince Waldemar died at Berlin, it was reported that some soldiers on night-watch saw the White Lady. The White Lady is the survival of the Teutonic goddess Frigga, wife of the god Odin. Once the pagan Madonna, guardian of all German households, she was retained as the special guardian of holy German emperors. I believe she never appeared so long as the present monarch was only a king. When the Prince of Wales was supposed to be dying, the telegraph flashed through the country the voice of a banshee, but it was only the howling of an humble watch-dog all night near Sandringham. Imperialism must hav a grander psychopomp. In Germany it has brought back the most ancient symbols and fables, and especially that one which indicated that the ancient gods were well pleased in the family occupying the throne of Odin. But the German empire is not the only one which supports the dignity of a supernatural being in its livery. While the requiem was going on in Paris for the late Prince Louis Napoleon, Bonapartist eyes beheld a white dove descending over the church. Where did that white dove come from? From the ancient Christian heavens. It was the very same dove that descended upon the baptized Christ. Whenever an ancient hereditary line was broken, whenever the founder of a new order appeared, he was a pretender unless heaven approved and gave some sign that the new man was its beloved son, in whom it was well pleased, and who must rule over kings. Mohammed is said to hav had a dove perching on his shoulder. When Clovis became a Christian and founded the French empire, a white dove flew into the Rheims Cathedral, bringing the chrism in its beak. When Charlemagne founded the German empire a dove was mounted on his scepter. Because perhaps of its marvelous eye and power as a carrier, which made it seem competent to be a messenger between heaven and earth, the pigeon or dove symbolized the bringer of the divine verdict, the all-seeing Holy Ghost, the proconsul of heaven, from whose decisions there was no appeal. White doves were seen with pious eyes bearing the soul of Louis of Thuringia to heaven. When a French monarch was consecrated, it was the custom to let loose white pigeons in the church. And the scepter, with a dove designed on it, is borne by a duke before English monarchs at consecration. All these are descendants of that dove which brought the verdict of heaven upon Christ and proclaimed him the first-born of God and monarch of the world. The eyes of faith see what they hav a mind to see.

No less familiar are the pathetic human facts which underlie the myth of the resurrection. In a remarkable article written by one of the finest scholars and poets of our time, Mr. W. M. W. Call, on the "Nero-Saga" (Theol. Review, June, 1871), the large class of myths which represent certain heroes as never having died, but as sleeping in enchanted caves or vales, from which they are destined to return, is traced. Such myths hav invested better men more commonly than Nero—Harold, Arthur, Barbarossa, Charles the Bold, the Duke of Monmouth, Napoleon. They are traceable back to St. John sleeping in a cave near Ephesus, to the Seven Sleepers (sometimes issuing forth as the Seven Champions of Christendom), and even farther back to Jami, king of the Golden Age of Persia. "The tendency," says Mr. Call, "to disbelieve the unpalatable fact, and to take refuge from the menancing grasp of a hateful reality in some dazzling dream of impossibility, the daring alternativ to an annihilating despair, reappears in all ages and in all countries. The Aztec race hope for the return of their good deity to the earth, which his presence once made a paradise, and long for the restoration of the golden age. Even in our prosaic world, the skeptical poet Beranger did momentary homage to this superstition of the heart, when, mourning over the dead Napoleon, he exclaimed, 'Il n'est pas mort: God! I can scarce believe thee without him!' This is the nineteenth century echo of Paul's cry, 'If Christ be not risen, then of all men we are the most miserable.'"

But the steadfast evolution of humanity, morally and politically, has gradually brought on another state of mind. Our race has learned how much stronger are the ever new needs and desires of man than the will or the genius of any leader. Sacerdotalism is able to entomb the greatest soul in the grave of the rich, and raise it only to contradict its own testimony while living. The Christmas bells and the Easter bells ring out their tidings of a heaven-sent and a risen savior over millions who must still ask, without answer, "What shall we do to be saved from misery, crime, and despair?"

The whole theory of authority and of imperial leadership, whether spiritual or political, is doomed. If any will be great, let him serve. The hope of healthy human development, as I believe, lies in educating the people entirely out of the theory of supernaturalism. All this array of celestial saints, angels, signs, and symbols, has succeeded to a previous heaven of astrological and mythological forms, which are now the mere names of constellations. The angels and Madonnas must become as extinct as Arcturus and Virgo. The white doves must be lost among the Pleiades. Only when human eyes hav ceased to look for signs from heaven will they observe the signs of the times and the monitions of earth. When men see the credentials of a man in his wisdom and his fidelity—when the only omens of a statesman are his statesmanship and his real service to mankind—then we may hope for an evolution of society based upon the actual needs of man in the present, and be freed from an evolution based upon unrealities, securing only a survival of the priestcraft and statecraft which build their selfish power on prostrate truth and crushed humanity.

Anthony Comstock and the Suppression of "Nana."

Early in the spring of 1877 a large public meeeting was held in Philadelphia for the purpose of forming a Society for the Suppression of Vice, similar to the one that has, within the past year, attracted so much attention in New York city in connection with the imprisonment of D. M. Bennett, the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. According to the accounts in the newspapers at that time, the meeting was largely attended, and some of the most prominent and influential citizens were present. John Welsh was made president, and a number of the God-in-the-Constitution party came over from New York, that modern Sodom and Gomorrah, along with Mr. Samuel Colgate, President of the New York society, and Anthony Comstock, its agent, to lend their enthusiasm to the occasion, and giv the meeting a good send-off. The New Yorkers and Philadelphians made speeches, and a committee was appointed to block out an organization, apply for a charter, etc.

Since that time the child that looked so promising has not been out of its cradle, and has been more silent than Mr. Comstock's victims who were shut up in prison for no crimes whatever. After the charter was procured, no work of any practical importance appears to hav been entered upon, and for the good of society, and the honor of the men in Philadelphia whose names appeared so prominently connected with the meeting, we hope it may ever remain silent and idle, unless it pursues a more honorable and humanitarian course than its New York predecessor.

Every honorable and worthy citizen certainly desires all proper and just means to be used in preventing vice and crime with their brazen faces, but when good and honest men and women are arrested, condemned, and imprisoned for teaching the masses how to avoid these evils, while the dens of vice and crime, in the shape of liquor and beer saloons, houses of ill-fame, and tobacco shops deal out their vile wares, and trade in sorrow and damnation, under the very shadow of the churches, without any efficient measures being taken by their owners to stop it, I think it quite time to call a halt, and take a dispassionate view of this Christian mode of suppressing vice.

This meeting of over two years ago came up in my mind on reading in the leading papers in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other cities, that this man Anthony Comstock was trying to suppress the sale of Emile Zola's popular novel "Nana," which has been translated into English by John Stirling, and is published by T. B. Peterson & Bro's., of Philadelphia. M. Zola's books hav been for some months quite familiar with the reading public in this country, and their nature is pretty well understood, and the natural conclusions a sensible person arrives at are that the people themselves are quite as good judges of what is best for them to read as this man Anthony Comstock is to judge for them. A man who could make such a nonsensical fuss and stupid dolt of himself over Makart's picture of Charles V., one must conclude is a very poor authority to say what the people of these United States shall or shall not read.

Zola's books hav become very popular in France, and Mr. Comstock is doing the very thing to make them so here, even if they were not before.

Had I not been somewhat familiar with Mr. Comstock's mode of forcing his morality on the public, I should hav thought this last venture of his was an advertising trick of the publishers to get "Nana" before the public. Had such a thought for a moment entered my mind, it vanished after having an interview with the gentlemanly publishers the other day. The book in question is a sequel to "L'Assommoir," the circulation of which was very large. Now, as to the morality of "Nana," a celebrated critic in New York says: "In my opinion it is decidedly moral in its tendency, and no one can read it without having a decided aversion to the heroin, her associates, and supporters. It is a picture of vice, shorn of all allurements, and without, so far as my memory serves, one single item that excites a lascivious thought." The Baltimore American, a very conservativ paper, says: "In making his raid upon it ["Nana"] Mr. Comstock is a great deal more zealous than discreet. . . The effect of his endeavor to suppress the circulation of 'Nana' in New York will, of course, add greatly to its notoriety, and excite a desire on the part of thousands to get hold of it, who would otherwise not hav thought of it."

This is exactly what it has done. The sales within the last week hav increased by thousands, and its success has been so great that the Petersons hav concluded to issue another edition of "L'Assommoir," which has also been largely called for in connection with it.

"Solomon's Song," "Nana," and "L'Assommoir," are books I never could spend much time over, but those persons who hav a taste for them, and who desire to purchase them should hav the right to do so, and they should be protected in that right. Mr. Comstock, in desiring the suppression of "Nana," and saying nothing about "Solomon's Song," shows that he is a very prejudiced man, though he may be ever so sincere. He seems actuated by the same unwise and persecuting spirit that the old monks, John Calvin, and the leaders of the Inquisition were possessed of. The church people are beginning to open their eyes to the wrongs of his semi-official censorship over the press and the morals of the community, and I hope they will soon learn that even Infidels and Spiritualists hav some rights that Anthony should be made to respect. ## Mr. Underwood Heard From.

GRAND CENTRAL DEPOT, NEW YORK, June 12, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of this week there is one statement among a multitude of mistatements concerning me that I cannot restrain myself from characterizing now as a lie, "a lie out of whole cloth," and the meanest lie ever, to my knowledge, put in circulation regarding me. I refer to the atrocious libel that I once made "an infamous proposition" to a woman in Waverly, Iowa. No woman who is not the tool of some designing knave will say I ever made an "infamous proposition" to her. No man who is not devoid of character, who is not a party to some scheme concocted to injure me, the malicious nature of whose statement and the worthlessness of whose character cannot be exposed, will say he ever heard me make an "infamous proposition" to a woman.

No names, no date, no specifications are given, and thus I am shot at from ambush, stabbed by assassins who are concealed in the darkness. You seem to be satisfied to get the story into circulation, hoping to injure my good name, regardless of the truth or the falsity of the charge.

A few weeks ago I received a letter from Iowa saying there was a combination in that state to "break me down," and to bring another lecturer (whose name I omit) to the front. I paid no attention to the letter. I certainly did not suspect the opposition would take this form.

I will not attempt to conceal the fact that I feel hurt by this slander; but although it reveals to me the character of men with whom I shall hav to contend, it does not intimidate me in the least. If you think the course you are pursuing will change my course as a public lecturer, you will liv to see your mistake. The end is not yet. There is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and that limit has been reached. By a repetition of your falsehoods you may succeed for a few weeks in deceiving some readers of your paper, but the truth on matters concerning which you make statements recklessly will ultimately appear, and you, as well as Liberals generally, will see how mean and contemptible toward me has been your course.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

P. S.—I wish to add in way of postscript a few lines to the letter of this date (12th) which I just dropped into a post-box. I cannot just now put my hand on THE TRUTH SEEKER of this week, but a friend tells me—and this agrees with my recollection—that you offer me $100 for every falsehood concerning me that I am able to point out in the accusation against me in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 15th. If that be true, I accept your offer, with the understanding that you put $1,000 in the hands of a thoroughly responsible person, and that the decision whether I show certain of your statements to be falshoods—meaning thereby statements that are contrary to the truth—be left to three persons disinterested and well known, one to be selected by yourself, one by me, and the third to be chosen by the two thus selected. If by the terms of this agreement I become entitled to the money, or any portion thereof, I will expend it at once for Freethought literature, of my own selection and purchase, to be gratuitously distributed, unless I shall see fit to return the money to you, which will depend upon my opinion as to how far you hav been influenced by malice in your misrepresentations. This will giv you and your readers a chance to see whether my failure to deny your repeated falsehoods and misrepresentations is an admission of their truth or not.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

REPLY.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Dear Sir: I hav heard of physicians who objected to taking their own physic. I am inclined to think you are one of that sort of doctors. When I was prostrate in prison, and my Christian persecutors had their heels upon my neck, you seemed to think it interesting and innocent amusement to say of me that I was "vulgar," "a culprit," "an aged sinner," "immoral," a "despicable character," "a deliberate, malicious calumniator of a virtuous woman," "unfit to represent any decent movement, or to associate with decent men and women;" that I had tried to "corrupt and seduce a virtuous young woman," and much more in the same line; but when the tables are turned a trifle, and I giv you a portion of a letter from an intelligent, upright, and responsible Western Liberal to the effect that on a certain occasion you made "an infamous proposition," you at once become very indignant, and think it is not a pleasant kind of medicine to take. It seems to make you sick at your stomach. You appear to think it all right to apply all the false charges named to me, but if I giv one clause of a letter from an esteemed friend in which some of your conduct is rather mildly censured, it is all wrong. You don't like it. I presume it makes some difference with you whose ox is gored. I hav been gored pretty severely. No mercy was shown me; but I bore it with as much patience and grace as I was able to command, and I recommend to you the practice of the same virtues.

I hav not said you made an infamous proposition, but simply quoted the words of a high-minded gentleman whose statements I am bound to accept as true. Had you done no worse by me I would not feel half as deeply injured as I hav had occasion to feel.

When you say I am equally satisfied to get a false charge in circulation against you as if true, you wrong me. Had I not reason to believe the statement true, I would not hav published it. I believe my informant to be a truthful man; to say the least, not inferior to yourself, Mr. Abbot, Mr. Bundy, or Mr. Ellis. I hav no desire to injure your good name, nor to cause you to appear one scintilla worse than you are. Had you been equally considerate of my good name I think you would hav said far less against me than you hav. Right here let me repeat what I hav said before: It was you who began this crimination; it was you who first made charges against me. I never said an uncomplimentary word of you until you applied to me in a very public manner all the hard sayings and epithets cited above, and more too. Do not let that escape your memory. Had you not first made false and cruel charges against me I should never hav said a word to your disadvantage; but I am bound to act in self-defense when traduced and falsely charged. I claim it is perfectly legitimate for me to show that my defamers are less upright, less pure, than myself.

I think you are wrong in supposing that anybody wants to shoot at you from an ambush or that there is any combination to break you down. That, I am inclined to think, is an insinuation without foundation, and somewhat characteristic of you. If there is any such combination I certainly know nothing of it. Your imagination in that direction is doubtless too active. I am interested in all honorable Liberal lecturers, and am not trying to pull any down to build another up. I am sure I hav in my paper said quite as much in your favor as of any lecturer in the field. I am very sure, however, that a combination was formed to break me down, and you proved this when you said to excellent Liberals that "Bennett must be crushed," and virtually said that Liberals must withdraw their sympathy and support from me. On no other basis than to pull me down, can I account for all the cruel and unjust things you hav said of me. What I am now anxious for is that the Liberals of the country may know my true character, how falsely I hav been accused, and how much more culpable my accusers are than myself. You hav charged me with great immorality. I think the charge most unjust. I believe I hav led a good moral life. I am not aware that I hav wronged any person. I defy you to show where I hav. The only wrong conduct you hav pointed out on my part is the writing of certain private letters. I hav written private letters, and am very sure that in doing so I injured no person, violated no law or custom. Had you busied yourself less with my private letters I think it would hav been much better for me and possibly, also, for yourself. I hav heard of people making out right well in the world by attending to their own business and not concerning themselves unduly about others. The charge you hav made against me that I tried to corrupt and seduce a virtuous young woman is without the slightest foundation in truth, and no private letters I hav written will bear any such construction. It is a double falsehood; I hav not tried to seduce anybody, and the woman you alluded to was neither young nor virtuous. I never corrupted her a particle, nor seduced her at all.

I can readily understand that you feel "hurt" to hav unpleasant things said about you, for I hav experienced the same pain myself. The very unkind and untruthful things that hav been said about me within the past year hurt me exceedingly; yes, worse than death. Death would hav been preferable to the slander and falsehood that were showered upon my head, and by none more than yourself. Possibly it may not be amiss for you to experience a little of what you hav caused me to feel a great deal of. It is well you are not intimidated. From the experience I hav had, I would advise you to take it coolly and learn to be governed by a just and truthful spirit.

No, "the end is not yet." That is one truthful remark you hav made. And, with you, I trust the Liberals of the country will learn which party has acted "mean and contemptible." For every unkind and untruthful remark I hav made about you, I think I can show twenty—more unkind and untruthful—that you hav made about me. I hav private letters of yours now in my possession, written by you to others within the last two months, in which you hav said things of me very unkind and very untruthful. These can be seen by any friends who wish. They were written with a view of damaging me in the estimation of my best friends. In one of these letters I counted fifteen falsehoods, and hav pointed them out to others. If I hav written or spoken one falsehood about you, I do not know it.

As regards the matter you allude to in your postscript, allow me to set you right. By your not having THE TRUTH SEEKER at hand, a slight error has arisen on your part. In alluding to the charge of "downright falsehood" and "a mean distortion of facts," I made a proposition. After calling upon you to point out the falsehoods I had told or withdraw the calumny you had published against me, I said, "I hereby offer him [yourself] one hundred dollars for each falsehood he will prove I hav uttered knowingly, either with respect to himself [yourself] or his compeers, Abbot, Ellis, McNellis, Bundy, or Comstock." This offer I will stand by. I hav no thousand dollars to place in anybody's hands, but my word and obligation is considered good in this town for a few hundred dollars at least. It will be quite safe for you to point out five or six of the falsehoods you charge upon me, even without security. As I am short of money and can illy spare it from my business, I will humor you to this extent. I will place a thousand dollars' worth of books—many of them of your own writing—against $500 of your money, you to choose a man, I a man, and they a third. If I cannot prove that you hav told two falsehoods to my one in reference to the matter at issue between us, you can hav the books to distribute as freely as you please; and if I get the money, the same to be used in the free dissemination of Freethought literature. Possibly this kind of proposition will suit you nearly as well as your own. In either case the right kind of literature will meet with a free circulation.

The same mail that brought me your foregoing letter and post cript brought also one from your attorney, Mr. John A. Taylor, of this city, into whose hands you placed your complaint against me, with instructions to bring suit at once. I am little surprised at your conduct in this matter. I would hardly be surprised at any steps you may decide to take. Allow me to say, moreover, that I am not particularly disconcerted. I hav had a little experience from Comstock, Colgate, and the Young Men's Christian Association, in the line of prosecution, and I ought not to be seriously frightened at anything you can do, even giving you credit for a will equal to Comstock's. I called to see your attorney, but was not fortunate enough to find him in, so I don't know whether I am to be prosecuted criminally, civilly, or both. If I am convicted and sent to prison, I hope you may be happy. If you succeed in obtaining from me $20,000, I ask you to telegraph me when you get it. I think I can prove all I hav said. Time will tell. You say truly, "The end is not yet."

Your summary action toward myself has raised a suggestion in my own mind. If you make a big bonanza from me, cannot I, by way of counter-suit, return the compliment? If it is worth a few thousand dollars, more or less, to say you made an infamous proposition, it may be worth a few dollars for you to charge that I tried to corrupt and seduce a virtuous young woman; and I may need the few dollars I possibly can recover from you to help pay the heavy verdict you may obtain against me. Besides, there are Bundy, Abbot, and the Index Association who hav slandered me so cruelly and injured me so deeply. Possibly they may be induced to help make up the damage you hope to recover from me. The case of Underwood versus Bennett will doubtless be watched with some interest, and will be duly reported. It possibly may equal the case of Comstock versus Bennett. Allow me to say right here that I consider Comstock, who secured a sentence of thirteen months' imprisonment against me, no more an enemy to me than yourself. Your conduct toward me for the past ten months resembles far more the treatment of Comstock, Colgate, and the Young Men's Christian Association than that of James Parton, O. B. Frothingham, Elizur Wright, and the main Liberals of the country.

But it is sad for two of the same Liberal faith to quarrel. It is sad for Liberals to fall out. It is too much like the Rev. Talmage and his brethren, and many other similar cases in the church. Infidels should set a better example to their less favored Christian brethren. Cannot a compromise be effected in some way? In view of the statement you hav made, that I am "vulgar," an "old sinner," a "libertine," "an immoral man," "unfit to associate with decent men and women," that myself and paper hav "little or no influence;" in view, too, of the fact that I was kind enough to associate your name with Abbot, Ellis, and Bundy; that you charge me with trying to "corrupt and seduce a virtuous young woman; in view of all this, and because I published a part of a certain letter from a respected source—one of several similar letters I hav received—in which were some unpleasant things about your distinguished self, and especially as I am, according to your representation, rather below par, intellectually and morally—if I will come down meekly, without a suit, thereby saving you attorney's fees, if I giv you what little I hav in the world, and go to prison for the remainder of my life, won't you let me off? If you think favorably of this proposition, please communicate with John A. Taylor, Esq., your attorney. If something less will answer, will you kindly stipulate it? If you condescend to let me off with anything less than my life and my scanty effects, I will cheerfully report your magnanimity.

D. M. BENNETT.

Two Statements.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I want you to publish the following statements:

On Monday afternoon, June 7th, by accident I met B. F. Underwood in Boston. We had quite a talk about matters, especially in regard to my writing to THE TRUTH SEEKER that he was present at a meeting at Savage's, and there decided to publish those letters of yours.

I requested that we call upon Mr. Savage and hear his statement of the matter, and here it is. Says Mr. Savage, in the presence of Mr. Underwood and myself:

"I never told you that there was a meeting at my house at which Mr. Ellis, Underwood, and myself were present, and that it was decided there at that meeting to publish Mr. Bennett's letters. You came in one morning and asked: 'Hav you seen those letters of Bennett's? I think Mr. Ellis or Abbot has brought them out.' I neither affirmed nor denied. You said, 'For God's sake, if you hav any power over Ellis you must stop him, or Mr. Seaver, who has damaging evidence against him, will publish it.' I said Ellis don't care what Mendum publishes. I then inquired why you try to defend those men, Mendum and Seaver, if you are an honest man? And you replied, 'I am not an honest man.' I said, Mr. Underwood knows those men are crooked. I then mentioned that Underwood stopped all night with me, but I hav no evidence that Underwood ever read Mr. Bennett's letters at my house, at any date, nor did he hav anything to do with deciding that those letters should be published. It was decided to publish those letters weeks before Underwood was at my house. This is a correct statement of my remarks to Mr. Verity.

"THEODORE L. SAVAGE."

The above statement was made by Mr. T. L. Savage in the presence of Mr. Underwood and myself. And now, Mr. Bennett, you will see that either T. L. Savage or J. S. Verity is an infamous liar. And I here and solemnly repeat that if I ever told a truth in my whole life, I told one when I said that T. L. Savage said to me that there had been a meeting at his house, at which meeting Mr. Ellis, Underwood, and himself had decided to publish Mr. Bennett's letters. I told Savage that he knew he was lying when he denied it.

In reply to his statement that I said, "Savage, for God's sake, stop Ellis from publishing letters against Mendum and Seaver!" I declare that I never said one word on that subject. That is all his from beginning to end.

And lastly, in reply to my saying that I was not an honest man: That was spoken at another time, when Ellis and Savage met me one day on School street in Boston. And I said then, as I hav always said, that I was not an honest man. Yet all through my life I hav tried to be an honest man. But my conscience has always seemed better than my performance. Let me giv you a few examples of my shortcomings: Forty years ago I joined a temperance society, and then I joined a co-operativ society. I promised to discountenance drinking. The members of the co-operativ society believed in drinking, and insisted on selling malt, and so I encouraged drinking by selling malt for the purpose of making beer. Again: A few years ago I got convinced that interest on money was wrong, and yet I take interest when I can get a few dollars in the bank. Do you call that honest? I don't.

But if I am to be compared with T. L. Savage, I certainly feel that I am an honest man, and that he is a dishonest man in that transaction. J. S. VERITY.

[It is necessary to add but a word to the foregoing, save that very few of the many men who know Mr. Verity will doubt his honesty or veracity, even though he does take interest when he thinks the practice of taking interest a bad one. There are no men more truthful in their statements than he. He is Verity in character as well as in name. It is to be regretted that the other side shows a disposition to throw dust, equivocate, and falsify. The better way is to be honest and "own up."—ED. T. S.]

"The Physiologist."

We want to interest all progressiv people in the Physiologist, because it is a paper which may be made productiv of so much practical good. Its particular purpose is to improve the physical condition of people, to heal and purify and bless them, and make them wiser and better, healthier and happier. We all know the need of ampler knowledge respecting a more sensible and scientific mode of life, and of social, sexual, and sanitary reform. There can be no higher nor more imperative duty than the right generation and regeneration of the race. We hav made this work the religion of our life, and our every energy is pledged to its propagation. We count upon the activ aid of all who would bless their fellow-beings and leave the world better than they found it.

We hav sacrificed a hundred dollars for every issue of the Physiologist. We hav experienced two years of privation, persecution, and thankless toil. We hav suffered the poisoned arrows of Comstock, and hav carried the cross of unpopular truth. We hav had our home desecrated and destroyed, and hav had to mortgage every piece of our household property and put the property of a devoted friend in the pawn-shop to pay the printer's bills. But we hav preserved our paper and effectually established our enterprise. The present is promising, and we believe that time has prosperity in store. We hav secured over eight hundred subscribers, and those would carry our little craft if all arrearages were promptly paid. But we hav been obliged to be irregular in our issue, and many hesitate to renew, and some hav lost confidence. Two pages of advertising would alone pay the expenses of the paper. We could speedily make up that if tardy-paying patrons would discharge their dues so we might hav the means of making it a better medium. If all arrearages were promptly paid, we could avail ourself of advantages for increasing our circulation and building up a paying business.

We believe there are plenty of humanitarians and philanthropists who would gladly giv us present aid if they understood our work and situation. We do not want any benefaction. We only ask substantial support upon such a business plan as will giv assured success to our undertaking, and guarantee our helping friends repayment with prospectiv profits on their stock.

We are issuing certificates for six hundred shares in a Physiological Publishing Company, of $10 each, to be paid in quarterly instalments of 50 cents, or yearly payments of $2, as shareholders may prefer. Stockholders are entitled to a subscription to the paper free for every share. These quarterly or yearly payments will meet the current expenses of the paper and put it on a permanent and paying basis. It will be the property of a solid and secure stock company, with always available funds for prompt and regular issue the first day of every month. All matters of business will be under the management of persons of acknowledged ability.

The Physiological Publishing Co. has been duly organized, and is officered as follows: President, Sara B. Chase, M.D.; Vice-President, Mrs. Cynthia Leonard; Recording Secretary, Mrs. H. N. Bush Ewell; Corresponding Secretary, H. Emilie Cady, M.D.; Treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Barmore. For the satisfaction of our country friends we would state that the Treasurer is a lady of means and position, and has justified in sufficient legal bonds to secure the required amount of capital stock. All the stereotype plates and property of the paper are also pledged as security, so that whatever investment parties are pleased to make is certainly safe. Experienced business men to whom we hav made a full exhibit of our books and plans declare it to be a promising project and one that will pay the parties interested at no distant day,

The country is cursed with trashy and pernicious publications. Papers productiv of more harm than good are made to pay. There is a pressing need for such a periodical as the Physiologist, devoted to the holiest interests of human kind, and we are positiv that there are enough progressed and philanthropic people to giv prosperity and power to such a print. We want help to reach the helping hands of that class of people. We count upon the co-operation of all reformers, for our work takes in the range of all real reform. It is a work which would imparadise this planet by peopling it with better beings. It would plant the prophetic possibilities of human perfection in every cradle, and make the mothers of our land the messiahs of a race redeemed from the curse of crime and disease.

Resolutions of Regard.

Mrs. Nettie Pease Fox delivered her farewell lecture to her congregation of Spiritualists in the Academy of Music in this city, on Sunday morning, May 30th, her subject being the spiritual ideal. She handled her subject very ably.

At the close of the lecture Dr. Tilden arose and said it was an occasion that called for some action on the part of those who had been so highly favored in listening to oft repeated inspirations of the speaker during her ministrations here, in view of the fact that she was about to leave us for a new field of labor and usefulness, and in order to organize for that purpose he would move that Mrs. Amy Post take the chair; W. B. Shelly moved that Dr. Dake act as secretary.

The secretary was then called upon to read the resolutions prepared for the occasion:

WHEREAS, Mr. D. M. Fox and Nettie Pease Fox, his wife, are about to remove from Rochester to the city of New York, into a new field of usefulness and influence, therefore,

Resolved, That we, the investigators of and believers in the truths and facts of Spiritualism as taught and promulgated by her so ably and satisfactorily among us during the past two years, do most sincerely regret that the relations so pleasantly established are to be thus severed.

Resolved, That Mrs. Fox we assert to be a medium through and by whom are evolved from the higher spheres of intellectual and spiritual life richest gems of thought, purest pearls of wisdom, and brightest jewels of light; and we verily believe it to be her mission to ennoble, enlighten, purify, and bless all who come within the sphere of her spiritual influence.

Resolved, That the high order of talent which she possesses, the congenial spirit controlling her ut'erance, the beauty of thought, and her sincere and pleasant manner of expressing the same, should win her large, cultured, and appreciativ audiences wherever she goes; and we here affirm that not only scientists and scholars, professional men and cultured women, but also persons of all classes and creeds, must inevitably be made happier and better by attentivly listening to her lectures.

Resolved, That Mr. Fox, by his untiring zeal, great energy, and generous sacrifices on behalf of the cause of Spiritualism and in upholding and maintaining our meetings under the most trying circumstances and surroundings, is justly entitled to our commendation, respect, and good will, and we hope that in the future, as in the past, he will; zealously assist his life companion, Mrs. Fox, and thereby help to make her efforts in advancing truth and disseminating light and knowledge triumphant.

Resolved, That we deeply regret that we are to lose the social influences naturally emanating from the kindly natures of Mr. and Mrs. Fox, both in society and at their homes, and we most sincerely and earnestly wish them great prosperity and success, and hope that in the new circle of society into which they are about to enter they will find warm and cordial friends and earnest co-workers and supporters.

Resolved, That these resolutions be presented to Mr. and Mrs. Fox as a sincere testimonial of our esteem for them and of our appreciation of their labor and sacrifices during their residence in this city, and that a copy of the same be presented to the press of this city, to THE TRUTH SEEKER, Banner of Light, and Mind and Matter, with requests that they publish the same. AMY POST, Chairman.

DR. DAKE, Secretary.

Mass Convention of Iowa Liberals.

There will be a mass convention of the Liberals and Secularists of Iowa and adjoining states at Marshalltown on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, August 27th, 28th, and 29th.

At this meeting a state League, or Liberal association, will be organized, and the good work begun systematically and in earnest. Invitations hav aready been sent to several of our best speakers and organizers, and we promis you that this will be an occasion long to be pleasantly remembered by those there present.

The time selected for the convention is just previous to that which will witness the Bismarck Grove campmeeting, and thus our Eastern friends will be enabled to attend both the meetings and take advantage of all reductions made by the railroads. The convention will be held in Woodbury's Opera House. Fuller particulars soon. In the mean time I want to hear from every Liberal, in the state or out of it, who can attend and who can do anything to make the convention a success.

Let us work like men and women who realize that ours is no task for pigmies to set out to accomplish—the extirpation of superstition, the overthrow of tyranny, and the firm enthronement of justice in the council halls of the state.

Norway, Iowa. E. C. WALKER,
Chairman State Com. N. L. L.

The Brussel's Congress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you giv me room to say concerning the Congress to be held at Brussels in August, that notwithstanding the letter of Mr. Wright and the weight of his opinion, I think it would not only be a shameful, but a ridiculous thing for the League, but especially for American Liberalism, not to be represented there. As for the opinion that the Congress will be a decided failure, I am unable to see upon what it can be grounded, except on the dubiousness that attaches to any new undertaking. It cannot be that the paucity of European Liberals in number, or their coldness, will kill this flower in the bud. Yet should American Liberalism set the example of indifference, and show the white feather it would, in case failure issued from other defections as weak and culpable as its own, hav the consolation of having contributed its share to the discomfiture of a Liberal effort as well as to the jubilation of the foes of free thinking.

It would be useless for me to repeat the valid argumeats advanced by you in favor of a representation of the Leagues. The facts that only discussing for plans of action is aimed at, and that membership of the Congress does not imply membership of the Federation, are enough to do away with any but purely technical, if not false, objections against the sending of a delegation of the League.

Yet should the mind of the "National" be too little awakened to the importance of the Congress, and its duty to attend it through its representativs, it appears to me that a council of Freethinkers or Liberals in New York, or several simultaneous councils in different parts of the Union, should meet at some early day, name delegates, estimate expenses, which need not be large, and by organizing a deputation serve the cause of Liberalism, and save the imperiled honor of American Freethought.

In the hope that you will giv publicity to this conscientious, but deferential suggestion, I am,

Sincerely yours, EDWARD GASTINEAU.

Bigotry and Fanaticism in Zion.

To the Editor or the Herald: Here, from Zion's Herald of May 13, 1880, is a condensed bit of the Christian charity which cropped out in Salem 200 years ago, and lately inspired the ridiculous and unconstitutional law under which Mr. Bennett, of New York has been imprisoned:

The villainous D. M. Bennett, who was righteously sentenced to the Albany Penitentiary for circulating infamous matter through the public mails, has completed his sentence and now proposes to exhibit himself in prison uniform as a martyr to the freedom of speech! Men who account themselves respectable, and some of them like Elizur Wright, who hav held the estimation of their fellow-citizens, are ready to proffer a public reception to one who is, by his own confession, guilty of the lowest acts of sensuality, an enemy to purity, and an open transgressor of law. What sort of a social life would such men and women—for some of the latter join in the ovation to this panderer to vice—secure in the community if their license instead of liberty were once inaugurated?

As this religious editor has done me the honor to admit that I hav "held the estimation" of my fellow-citizens, I will take the liberty, in your hospitable columns, to ask him one or two questions. I do not claim infallibility, and hav made many mistakes in life. One of them was permitting myself to be taken in by the infallible Christian church, which has never to my knowledge cast me out, and I hope to liv well enough to hav it claim me as a Christian after I am dead, though I am proud to avow myself a non-religionist or "pagan" at present, and to be able to assert that I do not liv under a Christian government, and I do not mean to if I can help it.

I wish to ask this citizen of Zion, First, whether he ever has been "by his own confession" a "miserable sinner," and what, if anything, he means by it? Second, what sort of social life should we hav if, when we lately went to war, our young men had accepted the "license" granted by the unchangeable God of the Bible in Deuteronomy xxi, 10–14? Does it become the worshiper of such a God, and the beliver in such a book as his law, to imprison a fellow-citizen for circulating matter through the mails which is far less "infamous?" I, for one, venerate the Bible as containing much of the best wisdom of the ages in which it was written, mixed with much of their barbarism and folly, and not without indecencies which its devotees dare not now ventilate in public. Yet the American principle of the freedom of the press requires that even these indecencies shall be treated with a certain degree of toleration. Should the editor of Zion's Herald, whose name I do not happen to know, be imprisoned, as he might be, for sending the book of Deuteronomy through the mails, bigoted and fanatical as he is, and "miserable sinner" as he probably is, "by his own confession," I would heartily preside at his reception from prison if nobody else would.

Let me say, further, to this Christian editor, that his zeal for "purity" in the post-office has betrayed him into a palpable falsehood. Neither Atheists, nor immoral persons can be converted by lying about them, any more than imprisoning or burning them He says that Bennett has by his own confession, been "guilty of the lowest acts of sensuality." This is not true. What Bennett did confess and regret, perhaps as sincerely as ever any one did who confessed himself a "miserable sinner," was, that he wrote privately some very improper letters to a woman of mature age, which sin, before any public exposure, he confessed to his wife and was forgiven. After his imprisonment some rival publishers bought the bad letters, and, in open disregard of the "Comstock law," circulated them extensivly through the mails. This proceeding I hold to be very disgraceful to the Liberalism which those publishers profess. But if Christians want the credit of it, they are welcome. If there is no distinction between sensual words and "acts of sensuality," then it is a sin, if not a crime, to hav a Bible in one's house. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

May 14, 1880.

MR. M. E. LEWIS, Center Belpre, O., sends me the names of some Marietta Liberals. I should like to hear from our Liberal friends at Marietta direct. There ought to be material enough in that city and Harmar to form a good strong League. The Washington County Liberal League would sound very well, and ought to be gotten up without delay. Who is the active Liberal at Marietta that will go to work, and at once? H. L. GREEN.

The Godly Women of the Bible.—Continued.

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE 19TH CENTURY.

ELIZABETH AND MARY.

These two godly women must be considered jointly, as the account of the miraculous conception of their respective sons runs parallel. Only Luke mentions Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist. Matthew and Mark ignore her entirely, and the wonderful birth of John, which Luke describes so particularly, John the Evangelist following suit, unless we strain the sentence, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John" (John i, 6), to mean that he was born out of due time. We are therefore indebted to "According to St. Luke" for the history of John the Baptist's birth and the introduction of Elizabeth, his godly mother.

Matthew and Luke only mention the birth of Jesus, Mark and John never hinting at a miraculous conception and birth for their divine hero, "Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

The New Testament is not much in advance of the Old as regards obscenity, and I humbly beg pardon of my readers for quoting and commenting on such gross vulgarity; but as my object is to portray these Bible characters and events truthfully in order to show the animus of God's book and the examples church authorities command us women, in all ages, to follow, I cannot, without failing of my duty and purpose, omit the very evidence necessary to establish my position by shunning to declare the whole truth, as repugnant as it may be to my feelings. Then please be prepared for the exposition of the most shocking, disgraceful filth and sacrilegious libel and unholy imposition against a supreme Being—if there be a good one—and humanity that a fiend could invent and propagate, viz., the incipiency and epitome of the "glorious scheme of salvation," ushered in through the parentage of John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ.

The reader is earnestly requested to take his Bible and peruse these interesting narrativs in connection with this review. As Elizabeth's miraculous conception preceded Mary's, it is advisable to begin with the former.

Elizabeth was barren, like her godly predecessors, Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel, Mrs. Manoah, Hannah, and Elisha's Shunamite woman, none of whom could bear sons until after God or a gentleman angel had called upon them for an afternoon's tête-á-tête (Genesis xxx, 32.) Several of these women, including Mary, were, in the absence of their spouses and lovers, visited by the accommodating angel as unexpectedly and suddenly as a clap of thunder breaks overhead in a cloudless summer sky. This especial medical treatment by the Almighty, through proxy, in all these cases is related in chaste Bible language in God's pure word, as the readers of "Godly Women" are already aware.

Scene first, in this sacred drama, opens in Luke, chapter first, verse fifth, in the days of Herod, king of Judea, four thousand and four years after the "creation of the world." The scene is laid in Jerusalem, inside of the temple. The characters represented are the angel Gabriel and Zacharias, the husband of Elizabeth. He was a priest, and had married into the family of the priesthood, as Elizabeth was of the daughters of Aaron. It is declared that "they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless," notwithstanding it is asserted (Romans ix, 10) there is none righteous; no, not one. Sad to relate, "they had no child, because Elizabeth was barren," and, worse still, not likely to become the recipients of such a blessing, as "they were both now well stricken in years." In this unfortunate predicament, as the old priest was burning incense one day according to the custom, there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense. How Zacharias knew him to be an angel, and of the Lord, we are not informed; but when told his errand, the truth must hav dawned upon his mind, as none but an angel or God could hav known that he had been praying all through his married life for a boy without success. Well, this angel commenced business thus: "Fear not, Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John." Then he is told what a wonderful child he shall be. "He must not drink wine nor strong drink, and shall be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb," and much more that the reader much search out from holy writ. Zacharias at first was dreadfully frightened, and, considering the age of himself and wife, expressed his doubts, asking for a sign or test, whereupon the angel declared, with great pomposity, "I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God, and am sent to show thee these glad tidings." The old priest, recollecting this illustrious messenger to Daniel, of lions' den notoriety, became more alarmed than ever, and his quailing and quaking was by no means decreased when told, "Thou shalt be dumb and not able to speak [as if some dumb people were able to speak] until the day that these things shall be performed." This was a punishment because he believed not Gabriel's word. A sad result of unbelief! When he came out of the temple, the wondering people "perceived he had seen a vision, for he beckoned unto them and remained speechless." As soon as the days of his ministration were over he went home to his wife.

This brings us to scene second, where laid we are not told, though the guessing commentators say probably Hebron; neither are we informed (verses 23 and 24) that Zacharias apprised his wife of the facts revealed, or the cause of his dumbness, which leads us to suppose, commentary fashion, that Gabriel had previously visited Elizabeth and communicated to her the glad tidings of great joy, else she would hav been more surprised and questioned her husband.

Scene second opens with, "And after those days his wife conceived, and hid herself five months, saying, Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men." Reproach among men! wherefore reproach, because of barrenness? Such a tradition deserves cremation, for it has subjected every non-child-bearing woman and every maiden in Christendom to the same reproach and censure for being childless! Shame on such a book, such a Christianity, and such a civilization that will permit such an effete, musty, old barbarous relic to govern public opinion in a matter where choice might control the cause of non-parentage in both husband and wife, instead of the commonly imputed stigma—barrenness or incompetency. Scene closes here; loving Elizabeth in hiding and rejoicing for five months. Query: Why did she hide, and who did she hide from, her husband or Gabriel?

Scene third, after an interval of six months, opens abruptly in a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, disclosing a new personage, Mary, a Jewess virgin. Our former messenger, Gabriel, immediately appears upon the stage, on a similar errand as in scene first, with slight variations. Now this young lady, it is said, was already espoused to a man by the name of Joseph, of the house of David. It must be remembered that espoused was in Jewish law valid marriage, and yet when this male angel approached the maiden and poured into her ears flattering compliments, she did not repulse him although she was "troubled" at his presence, and "cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be," when he came in unto her and said, "Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee, blessed art thou among women." Her suspense, however, was of short duration. Gabriel, not wishing to frighten her out of her wits, assuringly and familiarly called her by name, presumably patting her on the shoulder as he soothingly and smilingly said: "Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus." Rather a delicate or indelicate mission for a masculin angel stranger, to a modest, shrinking young virgin! Why not hav employed an angel of her own gender? Why not hav come and broached the subject in the presence of Joseph, some evening, when he was there on a courting visit, or was he not to be consulted on the business jointly with Mary? Surely, the ways of these angels are like God's ways, mysterious and past finding out; and why should they not be, since they are God's messengers? Like other seducers, Gabriel backed up his assertions with numerous false promises and prophecies that hav never yet been fulfilled.

It may be well to digress here to say that one of his statements was correct, according to the record. It will be remembered that Gabriel informed Mary, he being a physiologist and understanding sexual relations or the law of reproduction, that she should conceive in her womb. He thought this good policy, knowing that she was young and unsophisticated and that there were no obscenists in Judea who had forwarded any physiological, alias, impure literature to the boarding-school where Miss Mary had graduated, and fearing that she might imagin that conception would take place in her stomach, throat, mouth, eyes, ears, or nostrils, he specified the location—"conceive in thy womb"—so that no serious mistakes could possibly occur. And this was rendered more necessary, it will be seen as the story proceeds, because "the conception was contrary to the unbroken law of human birth!" Thoughtful, considerate Gabriel, thy foresight and caution were highly creditable to thy humanity and thy angelic wisdom.

The innocent virgin seemed somehow in her ignorance to connect the birth of this son with the co-operation of a man, and so wonderingly but modestly inquired of her divine anointed, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" and yet she was the sweetheart and the betrothed of Joe! Gabriel, nothing daunted, unblushingly answered the fair interlocutor: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee; therefore, also, that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the son of God. And behold thy cousin Elizabeth; she has also conceived a son in her old age, and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren. For with God nothing shall be impossible." This was too much for Mary to withstand; she yielded at once without one thought of her lover, meekly and resignedly responding, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word." What would be said of such a quiescent young lady of the 19th century? Would her story be believed, and would she be commended for her faith and trust in God or be disbelieved and condemned for her falsehood and credulity.

Gabriel, having gained the full consent of Mary, and being a smart business angel, departed without a "thank you, madam," or "good-bye," according to the record, presumably for other pastures, leaving the maiden, and the scene closes, curtain falls.

Some comment will be necessary before raising the curtain on scene fourth.

And These Be Thy Gods, O St. Johns!

AN EXAMPLE OF GOD'S "LOVING KINDNESS AND TENDER MERCIES."—OPEN LETTER TO THE ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL BOARD.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Hon. Randolph Strickland, D. C. Hurd, O. W. Barker, Josiah Upton, Geo. W. Stephenson, and Chas. Grisson, Gentlemen: A few days since some thoughtless little children went into a barn to play, and 'tis supposed that with matches they set the barn on fire. The alarm was given, and within a few minutes a thousand citizens of St. Johns were there with willing hands to do anything that could be done by man. But alas! they were too late. Already the fire had done its terrible work. The barn was consumed, and also one of the children, little Tommy Thomas, who, being unable to escape, was burned to an unrecognizable black mass.

The mother heard the screams of her child, and ran to the barn shouting, "Tommy, come out! run out, Tommy!" but the little fellow cried: "I can't. I'm burning, mamma." The frantic mother ran on the outside to the manger where he had retreated, and tried to pull off a board so that she could get at her child who was crying, "I'm burning, mamma." And O, how she pulled and tried to get at him. But she lacked the strength, and could only listen to the cries of her darling boy whilst he was being roasted alive.

Now I want to say, gentlemen, that there is not a whisky-seller in St. Johns, nor a convict in our state prisons, nor a barbarous wild Indian in the world who, had he been standing near, would not hav saved that helpless child had it been in his power to do so.

According to the Bible, however, "our Father who art in heaven," who boasts of his unlimited power, and who professes to love his children so well, stood by and looked on with the utmost indifference, and never moved a peg to help the little fellow in distress. He wouldn't even giv the mother just a little more strength to enable her to pull off the board, that she might save her child.

But we are told that he was more obliging in the case of Samson. He "blessed him," and being blessed he "went to the city, and slept with a harlot." And when the gates of the city were closed against him by those who sought to kill him, God helped him to escape by giving him strength to "pull up the gates and carry them off on his back."

Gentlemen, don't you think that such a God, who "loves his children," ought to hav given Tommy strength to hav kicked off a board?

And this great "book of truth" says that "three men were cast into a burning fiery furnace, which was so hot that it consumed the men who cast them in. And when the king looked in, he saw four men [one was God or an angel] walking about in the midst of the fire, and not a hair of their head was singed, nor the smell of fire had past on them" (Daniel iii).

If God had walked into that burning barn the same as he went into the fiery furnace, and taken little Tommy in his arms, and as he walked about protected him from the fire, how the mother would hav thanked and loved him!

We hear a great deal about the dispensation of divine providence, and if he had only felt like it, he had a splendid chance to hav made a display of his power in behalf of this poor, helpless, little child. But your merciful God don't do business in these days the same way as he used to. And why? Is he getting old and careless? Was he asleep? Is he getting less mindful of his children? or is the story about saving the three tramps above alluded untrue? And if so, your Bible is a liar, and should be taken out of our school. If it be true, it makes your God a heartless monster for not saving poor little Tommy when he had the power to do it.

Your smutty old Jew book says that this God will damn the poor mother if she don't love him. Yes, gentlemen, your school-book will damn her for not loving the God who stood by and refused to help her. He was able to do it, but preferred to see her darling roast, frizzle, and fry. O what a God is the Christian's God!

When I gazed at the charred and shriveled mass of that which, but an hour before, had been a bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked little fellow, full of life and fun, I felt, gentlemen, that I would like to hav you to look at it, and then look me in the face, and if you felt like it, tell me that you believed it to be your duty in violation of law and justice, to tax one half of the district against their wishes, to pay for the worshiping of such a God and the reading of such a book in our public school.

Do you expect that a God who, unmoved, withstood the tears of the mother, and whose heart refused to soften at the sight of that poor child, and who refused to help and answer this little prayer, begging, crying, and screaming for help, will listen to the tearless, grammatical petition of Prof.

Yntema? If not, why do you permit him to go on with the farce?

A God who will answer the prayer of a learned scholar and refuse to help an innocent little child, is a God for whom I hav no respect.

All who wish to love a God of this sort can do so, but as for myself, I prefer to "tie to" a God who has the ability and the will to help a fellow when he needs help, who, in an emergency like the above, and especially in the case of a little child, would not wait to be called upon for help, with an "O Lord, if consistent with thy will" petition, but who would wave all formalities, and pitch in and make himself useful whenever an opportunity is offered.

The clergy prate a good deal about "God's loving kindness and tender mercies," but just at the time little Tommy needed help it appears that God (if there is a God) did not feel like helping him.

Our Heavenly Father sent a bolt of his red-handed lightning in a Methodist church at Kingston, Ont., April 18th. Divine service was in progress, but the worshipers were very few. The bricks were hurled like hailstones through the interior of the building, causing the devout to duck their heads lively like, and to move with alacrity toward the door. They fled precipitately from the wrath of their avenging God, wondering what in the world he could be so mad about, and why he couldn't just as well hav struck a neighboring saloon. Well, we are told that God knows best.

We are told that little Tommy's soul is saved, and that he is now in heaven. If Tommy was old enough to understand his Sunday-school lesson, and know that God could hav saved him if he would, what, I ask, must be his feelings toward God on meeting him face to face? Do you tell me that he could love the God who saw him burned to a crisp, when he had the power to hav stretched forth his hand and save him? I deny that the poor child can ever love such a God, and I think that he ought not to do so. But we are told that if the mother shall die an unbeliever, that Tommy in heaven will be so happy that he can look down into hell and see his poor mother who tried so hard to save him from burning in torment, and see her weeping and wailing in torment, without diminishing his happiness. And the mother can only be saved, says theology, by loving the God who stood by with his hands, as it were, in his breeches pockets, looking on with indifference, while her poor child was crying for help. She must love this God, and also believe that he was able to hav saved her darling, if he would. Can she love such a God?

Not long since there were some young men who went a gunning on Sunday, and one of them was accidentally shot. The Clinton Independent in alluding to the occurrence said that it is not always that the Almighty metes out such terrible and immediate portions of justice upon the offender, but they are often enough of occurrence that we ought to profit by them. But as Tommy was not playing on Sunday, it becomes quite difficult to understand what God was mad at, and how we are to profit by the Almighty portion of justice dealt out in his case. Perhaps the pious correspondent of the Independent can tell us.

Jesus tells us that "he who believeth not shall be damned," and thy "merciful" God shall say, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels" (Matt. xxv, 41). And thy God of "love" will feast his eyes by gazing at the helpless creatures, his children, while they, in "endless torment," burn in hell, the same as little Tommy burned in the barn. He could hav saved all, but that would not be the kind of mercy with which he has any acquaintance. But this is not all, according to your noble school-book. Your God permitted a devil to run at large, and tempt men to wickedness, so that there may be more frizzling and frying. If God would kill the devil, all might be good and happy. So I ask, If God wishes his children to be good and happy, why don't he kill the devil?

A Heretical Woman Writes a Letter.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav one of my "spells" on me this morning. I havn't had one for years before, so I think I will humor this one and see what will be the result.

I am thoroughly puzzled. In the first place we hav seven churches in our small village on the one hand, and on the other we hav seven "liquor saloons." Two of these churches are Methodist; one American Methodist, one German Methodist. Those churches, of course, are dedicated to God (I almost forgot the capital G). We hav a Swedish church, to which the Swedish singer Nilsson gave a sweet-toned bell; then we hav a Lutheran church, and a Catholic church, and a tabernacle. The Infidels about town call the last a "sheep fold." All these churches are dedicated to God; but we hav another church, the only one built in a grove, called the Unitarian church; this one is dedicated to "Our Father." Now one would think that God would be kind to his children in H. for building him so many nice residences, but he isn't, at least he seems to hav a particular spite at one branch of his family here, and that too at the division that makes the loudest profession of regard for him; viz., the Methodist family. A few years ago, in a fit of anger, he lifted half of the roof of the American mansion and last Sunday night, the only night he claims, of all the week, he got into the most fearful rage this section of the country ever witnessed, and lashed things right and left, put a hole through the family residence of one of his Swedish sons, struck a poor unoffending tree a fearful blow, and set fire to his German Methodists' Sunday residence. Now, what puzzles me is this: Are these blows right and left among God's children meant for love-pats, or is he disgusted with his children in general and the Methodists in particular? I hav almost come to the conclusion that he is so disgusted with Mrs. Hayes' administration and the course she has pursued toward D. M. Bennett that he vents his spite on the houses he owns in that denomination.

But that is not all that is puzzling my brain. Another problem I cannot solve is: Why don't he smash the drinking hells here. Scarcely a day passes but blood flows from some poor victim of those miserable holes. Just now we are having a big lawsuit, caused by the most popular hell in town, in which one man last Wednesday was stabbed in the face, and otherwise hurt so badly that he has been dangerously ill. But, notwithstanding all these brutal exhibitions, those houses stand secure, without even a gentle reminder of their sins. Is it possible that God thinks these saloons necessary to the filling up of his Sunday residences? He can by their means kill off the men and so crush the intellect of the men and women by their hard lots in life as to make fit subjects for the monstrosity yclept religion. The history of that dignitary from as far back as we can trace him has shown that he is fond of both wine and women.

Now if you can set my mind at rest on these points I shall be immensely grateful.

What a nice time you must hav had at the Bennett Reception! How I did wish to be there! It has been so long since I hav heard an intellectual speech or lecture that I hav my doubts whether I could comprehend one now. We are so religious here in H. that we will not pay our money for such things. "If dear Bro. Joseph Cook," or "Our faithful worker Anthony Comstock," were to come here now, they would draw large houses no doubt.

By the way, one of our best and most devoted Christians would make a fit companion for his nastiness, Comstock. She has been up to all the tricks of a woman of the town until obesity compelled her to cease; she has been almost killed by a jealous wife who caught her husband in rather intimate relations with this eminently pious lady, and now she proclaims from the church altar, that the "wickedest thing she ever did was going to hear a Unitarian minister preach in a Unitarian church." Oh, my! isn't it awful!

Now I do not dare expose all of my Infidelity in one letter, but I can't help saying a thing or two on the Infidel side of politics. You can't imagine how much fun I hav with my Greenback papers, although I am so poor I could not pay the postage on this article if a good friend had not sent me the stamps, yet I hav a good supply of that, to me, best of literature—Liberal papers. Just think, every week brings me The Truth Seeker, the Indianapolis Sun, the Commoner, and the Chicago Express. Then every few days some friend who knows my isolation and poverty sends me a package of the other side of the story, so I see all sides, so you can imagin they are a treat. On Sunday my father and mother were in to see me. As they started home I asked father if he did not want to read Graves' big speech, delivered in Indianapolis at the Indiana state Greenback Convention. He brought his cane down with a bang and gave his hat a twitch so characteristic of the man, and in an impatient voice said: "Yes, sir; I'll read it, but I know beforehand what it is; it is the fellow of De La Matyr's big speech. Sophistry, sophistry, from beginning to end, made by a sorehead to try to arouse the ignorant prejudices of the people to help himself into office."

A few weeks since he pitched into the Sun and De La Matyr; he called De La Matyr a "turn-coat." I laughed at him and said, "Yes, he is a 'turn-coat;' he found this Republican side of his coat was the wrong side, so he turned it in and that brought the National side out. But, father," I said, "suppose De La Matyr had been a Democrat and had left that party and joined issues with the Republican party would he not hav been a 'turn-coat' then just as much as he is now?"

"In my mind the only difference would be he would hav put on another coat of the same color and texture, only called by another name. The names 'Demopublican' and 'Republicratic' are just the names for the two old parties; the only trouble they will hav will be about that 'bloody shirt.'"

The Republicans here do not want to talk about that 9th of June convention. That dead Greenback baby is causing the old parties a lot of trouble. They are mad because the little "brat" won't stay dead; it seems to be a kind of devil-fish in their estimation—you kill it in one place and it springs to life in some unexpected quarter, and all its little feelers are gradually drawing and absorbing the very life-elements of both the old parties; and it is such a precocious youngster, and so impudent; and then it is poor, hasn't a particle of aristocratic blood in its veins, isn't a member of any particular church; Mrs. Hayes nor U. S. Grant don't vouch for it; hasn't ever been to Europe; hasn't ever bribed a voter, and, never committed a murder; don't steal from the public pocket, and wants to pay its honest debts. Why, it is a nondescript, hasn't sense enough to know when it is dead; has a passion for living colors, such as green, for instance, and takes no stock in the "bloody shirt."

Now the "upper" classes don't want children you see, they are all full grown, expect to liv forever, and this little "interloper" to be put "into its little bed," so that we big "fellars" can hav some peace. We don't want his finger-marks on our gold tea sets and silver-plated door knobs. He has dirty soldier blood in his veins. Soldiers hav no rights big-bugs are bound to respect. They are our servants, and, as one of our Republican officials in H. says, "they work for us, consequently they are our servants, and servants are not our equals." Goodness me, don't we feel humiliated!

I am often reminded of an incident I read once. An English snob was on board a boat upon which was a keen-witted American girl. This "fellah" said to the girl, "Aw, I don't see any gentlemen of lesuah in Amerwica; don't you hav gentlemen of lesuah?"

"I do not understand what you mean by gentlemen of leisure," answered she.

"Aw," said he, "I mean gentlemen who travel around; young fellahs who don't work for a living; young fellahs like me, who just travel for pleasuah."

"Oh," said the girl, coughing. "Yes, we hav men who travel around and don't work for a living, but we don't call them gentlemen, we call them tramps."

Now this little giant, this little "nondescript," this "dirty" soldier boy, is not a gentleman of leisure; he digs and delves and toils and sweats, works hard, and gets poor pay, and between whiles puzzles his big brain with problems how best to benefit mankind and at the same time be honest and truthful; believes in the golden rule of action rather than the gold dollar; believes women as well as other folks hav rights it is bound to respect; in fact, is a child of the people and has a love for the people that is not made of gold or silver, and is bound sooner or later to win.

Only a Woman.

John the Baptist a Myth Also.

BY ANTICHRIST.

The paragraph in Josephus about John the Baptist, having no connection with Jesus Christ and being at variance with the account in the gospels, we considered of so little importance that we never thought of questioning its authenticity. But we find that E. P. Meredith, in his learned work, "The Prophet of Nazareth" (London, 1864), has adduced most cogent reasons for rejecting the passage as spurious. In an elaborate note on page 508 he says:

Whether a person of the name John did really make his appearance on the banks of the Jordan about the commencement of the Christian era, as stated in the gospels; or whether what is said of him in these productions is a modification of pre-existing tales regarding John the founder of the Hemero-baptists and the Mendai Ijahi, is not a question to be determined in this work, which, throughout, takes these gospels upon their own statements. It may, however, be observed that . . . there are reasonable grounds for doubting whether this John of the gospels is anything more than a myth; or, at most, the founder of the fore-mentioned pagan sects, which had existed many ages before the Christian era.

The author then takes up the passage in Josephus (Ant. xviii, 3,) and gives at length reasons for believing it to be a forgery, among which are the following:

1. It is grossly tautological and otherwise clumsy and inelegant in style, unlike that of Josephus, and very much like the forged passage about Jesus.

2. It is introduced abruptly and breaks the narrativ in a much more decided manner than the passage about Jesus.

3. It makes Herod imprison John outside his own tetrachy, or the Roman domain, in a castle belonging to his foe, King Aretas.

4. The passage is first mentioned by Origen in the third century.

5. No pagan writer mentions John before the third century.

The third reasons above given Mr. Meredith considers proof positiv of the forgery, and so do we. The whole argument covers three pages of small print. The learned author was once a preacher, and this work is a prize essay. He nowhere questions the existence of Jesus and his Apostles in the first century, but this resolution of John the Baptist into a myth casts great doubt on the existence of the other gospel characters. It is another nail in the coffin of historical Christianity.

ST. PETER'S HANDWRITING.

The alleged discovery in a grotto near Jerusalem of a manuscript in the handwriting of the apostle Peter is a clumsy hoax. It is said to bear this inscription:

Peter, the fisherman, disciple of Jesus, the son of God, and continuator of his work, speaks to the people of the earth who listen to the word of the Lord, according to the love, and in the name, of the most holy God.

And the subscription is said to run thus:

I, Peter, the fisherman, in the name of God, finished the writing of the word of love in the fiftieth year of my age, the third Easter after the death of my Savior and master Jesus Christ, son of Mary, in the house of Beliert, the scribe, near the temple of the Lord.

The writing is said to be in pure and elegant Hebrew. Now let us apply a few incontrovertible facts:

1. The oldest Greek manuscript is of the fourth century, and no Hebrew manuscript is older. Some Coptic, Ethiopic, Syriac, and Arabic manuscripts of the fifth century hav been discovered in Egypt in the present century.

2. The Hebrew had become a dead language 600 years before the Christian era, and the language of Palestine was Aramaic or Syriac.

3. How preposterous that a Galilean fisherman could be able to write pure Hebrew two or three years after the crucifixion!

4. Peter was not the Hebrew or Aramaic name of the apostle, but Shemeun Kepha.

The Third Annual Convention of the New York State Freethinkers' Association will be held in Dr. Shattuck's Grand Opera House, in the village of Hornellsville, on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th of September next. The Association invites the Freethinkers of the United States and of Canada to unite with it in general convention and in making the gathering the most important one of the kind ever held in this country. Our Liberal Lecturers everywhere are requested to giv notice of this convention, and arrange to be in attendance. A number of distinguished speakers hav already promised to attend. If Charles Bradlaugh comes to this country an effort will be made to procure his attendance.

Judaism.—Continued.

[Taken from the article on Judaism in Volume II. of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," which we wrote in prison, and which is now rapidly being put in type, and in a few weeks will be ready for our readers. By these extracts some idea of the entire work may be formed.]

WHAT JUDAISM CONSISTED IN.

In its incipiency and in its first stage it was comprised in the worship of Jahveh, who was the family god of Abraham and his son, his grandson, and his great-grandchildren. He was to be worshiped by the rite of circumcision and by burning the carcasses of animals for him to smell, and in abstaining from the worship of all antagonistic and opposition gods. They did not dream that their god felt the slightest interest in any other family, or any other portion of the human race. Other families and other nations were left to get along in this disastrous world the best way they could, without any aid from Jahveh or any other gods, save such as the unfortunate nations happened to be believers in. The descendants of Abraham believed that Jahveh regulated the number of children which should be born unto them; the number of cattle, sheep, and asses which composed their flocks and herds; the products of the soil, and all the enterprises and industries in which they engaged. If they were remiss in obedience to Jahveh, or neglected to closely follow his injunctions, his blessings were discontinued, and afflictions fell upon them. But when they hearkened to his word, their riches increased, their children became more numerous, and their flocks and herds more prolific. Their blessings as well as their curses pertained solely to this life. They seem to hav had no thought relativ to a future state of existence. Their blessings consisted of wealth, numerous children, and victory over their enemies. The direst curses with which they were threatened were loss of temporal blessings, the failure of their crops and herds, a scanty progeny, and defeat in wars with their enemies. Nothing was said about a future life or of rewards and punishments after death. The Jahveh of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and his sons was, according to their views, crudely anthropomorphic. His powers of vision, his sources of knowledge, and his means of power were circumscribed. He was under the necessity to "come down" and take observations of the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah to ascertain whether the report he had heard of them was true, the same as he had done in the garden of Eden to learn what Adam and Eve had been doing, and where they were, as well as to "come down" when the tower of Babel was being built and see what the children of men were trying to do. In the wrestling-match between Jahveh and Jacob, the difference in weight and muscle was so very slight between the two that Divinity, after a contest of several hours, was under the necessity of taking the somewhat unfair and unprofessional advantage of his competitor of putting his hip out of joint in order to secure the victory. This legend inevitably givs the idea that Jahveh's power did not greatly surpass that of Jacob. Jahveh seems to hav recognized the existence of other gods, and he was entirely willing that all the nations of the earth, save the handful of his own chosen people, should continue to worship the gods in which they believed; the only thing he demanded being that his chosen people should regard him as superior, before, and greater than the gods of the nations by which they were surrounded. But this seemed to be hard for them to remember and adhere to. For a thousand years they were almost continually running after other gods, delighting to build altars to these strange gods and bow down to them, and to offer bullocks, rams, and he-goats to them. With all their god had done for them they exhibited an astonishing predilection to run after other gods and to forget their own. This was a noticeable trait for many centuries, and after Moses became their leader and was said to hold daily intercourse with Jahveh, receiving and imparting knowledge and consolation. The greatest trouble he had was to keep his charge from forgetting their own god, which had brought them out of the land of Egypt, and fondly running after the gods and idols worshiped by their neighbors. The same anthropomorphic notions of Deity prevailed, and the same belief that he possessed passions, likes, and dislikes common to the human race.

Moses, in his interviews with Jahveh on Mount Sinai and other places, is believed to hav received a code of laws and instructions for the use and guidance of the people, embodying their entire duty to him and to each ether. Their duty to him consisted in worshiping him before all other gods, offering the flesh of burning animals at prescribed times, attending to certain purifications—more onerous always upon the women than upon the men—keeping the Sabbath holy, wholly abstaining from work on that day, providing liberally for his priesthood, and keeping up, of course, in all cases the rite of circumcision. The duties toward their fellow-men consisted in not stealing, in not killing, in not bearing false witness, in honoring their parents, in not committing adultery, and in not coveting their neighbors' property. As a rule, all things else being equal, the amount of their god's favor and good will seemed to be in proportion to the amount of animal life taken, the volume of blood spilt, and the number of sacrifices made to him. His worshipers had every reason to believe that nothing pleased their god so well as to hav the odor of burning animal tissue reach his olfactories and regale him by their consoling influences. The more blood that was shed, and the greater number of bodies burnt, the more divine favor and compassion were secured. This belief continued a long time after Moses was dead and gone. When Solomon had completed his gorgeous temple for the Jewish god to dwell in, he is said to hav offered, on the occasion of the introduction of the ark of the covenant into the temple, sacrifices of sheep and oxen which were so numerous that they could not be enumerated for multitude. And again, when the temple was dedicated Solomon alone offered a sacrifice of twenty-two thousand oxen and one hundred and twenty thousand sheep. When a realizing sense is taken of the amount of blood that number of animals must afford, and of the dense and suffocating and overpowering smoke and stench that must arise from the number of burnt sacrifices, some idea may be had of the crude nature of the god in which they believed.

STAGES OF JUDAISM.

The religious life of the Israelites, like their political career, may be divided into seven stages or periods:

1. From Abraham to Moses, in which stage the worship and communion of God was confined to a single family when he appeared to the head of the family, or patriarch, and made his wishes known.

2. When the people became numerous and Moses was chosen to be leader, lawgiver, and prophet. He then held communion with Deity for and in place of the people, and from him they were required to receive the will of God, they neither having to commune with him by prayer nor by any other mode save by bringing sacrifices to the priests to be offered to him upon the altar. The people are thought to hav made some advance in civilization and intelligence under Moses.

3. The period when the judges, elders, and military chieftains were the principal rulers, who were the only ones to hold communion with Jahveh. The people were crude and ignorant during this stage, and little more than barbarians. The advance made in civilization, literature, or art was but slight.

4. From Saul to Solomon, inclusiv, when the nation is believed to hav gained its greatest glory, wealth, power, civilization, literature, population, and prosperity. In the reign of the one king, David, if we are to take the statements as truth, the people form a disorganized, poverty-stricken state. From tribes of brigands, without a regular government, without revenue, without literature, and with slight civilization, they advanced to a settled government, an ample revenue, national power, advanced civilization, and greatness. During this period prophets, it was thought, held a conspicuous place in the religious life of the people, holding communication with God and imparting his will to the kings. When these prophets were listened to and obeyed, prosperity abounded; but when the opposit was the case, misfortune and disaster were the result.

5. The decline of national greatness, purity and earnestness of religious worship, increase in idolatry and in disregard for the laws and commands of Jahveh. This stage extends from the death of Solomon to the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, the capture of King Zedekiah, including the capture and carrying away, never to return, by Shalamanser of Assyria, of the ten tribes of Israel. Prophets abounded in this stage, but they did not stay for any length of time the impending destruction.

6 The fifty years of captivity in Babylon, in which the people, though mourning the ill fortune which had befallen them, yet acquired more knowledge and advanced farther in civilization than ever before in the same length of time. The people felt they had been punished for their sins, and were prepared to follow a purer worship upon their return to their nativ land. During this time they imbibed their first ideas of a future state of existence. Prophets abounded during this stage.

7. After the captivity, and during their struggle to re-establish their national power and religion, and including the final victories obtained over them, the destruction of their city and temple, and their scattering to all the nations of the earth. In the earlier part of this stage there was a purer state of worship and less idolatry than during any previous period of their national existence. The observance of rites and ceremonies was the distinguishing feature, but after they were conquered by the Syrians and Romans many conflicting doctrines and sects came into existence, and the unity of the nation was so broken as to preclude political or religious permanency. The people probably progressed in exalted ideas of Deity, and in a belief in a state of existence after death, but the tendency to disintegration and inharmony terminated their national career. What their number was after the final destruction of their temple and holy city perhaps cannot be stated with accuracy; but now, after eighteen hundred years hav passed by, they are estimated at four or five millions of people. The sacrifice of animals to Jahveh was discontinued after their final dispersion, but others of what are called Mosaic rites, the Old Testament scriptures, together with the teachings of the Talmud, the religious views and ordinance of numerous priests and rabbis, gotten up some five hundred years after our era, were the principal religious authorities. The weekly worship on the seventh day—their Sabbath—has been generally observed in synagogs in the various large cities where they hav resided. They hav been subjected to most cruel persecutions from the Christians in various nations, though from those very persecuted Jews their persecutors claimed they obtained their God Jahveh, their sacred scriptures and laws, their Lord Jesus Christ, and his mother, the holy Virgin Mary. It would seem the hight of inconsistency that a people from whom so much had been received—so much that is considered of more value than all else in the world—should be treated with such continued ostracism, persecution, and death.

What do You Believe?

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, May 25, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ., Dear Sir: I trust you may pardon my seeming trespass upon your valuable time, though I cannot refrain from tendering to you my heartfelt sympathy for the martyrdom you hav suffered for the cause of truth and Liberalism. May the God of nature crown you with a resplendant halo of renown in your effort! You are gaining friends rapidly wherever THE TRUTH SEEKER is read. There are several subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER who are very anxious to learn whether you are a Spiritualist or not? By answering the above question you will very much oblige quite a number of your patrons, as well as myself.

Very respectfully, S. E. MOSS.

REPLY.—In a reply to an Inquirer in our last, it is to be presumed we made it pretty clear that we are a Materialist, being of the opinion that everything that has an existence is matter in some of its many forms, and that whatever is not matter does not exist at all. We regard it, with the force or forces which eternally permeate it, and are inseparably connected with it, as the Most High, the All in All, the Supreme Power, the God Almighty, which holds dominion everywhere, and over everything. The universe contains and comprehends all forms of being, life, and existence. It extends as far as space continues, and can hav no bounds. There cannot, in our belief, be any force, life, or intelligence outside of the universe, which inevitably contains everything that is containable. Yes, we are a Materialist of the most pronounced type. None can be more of a Materialist than ourselves.

Still, we are also something of a Spiritualist. We incline to a belief in a continued life. We regard our present existence as a rudimentary state which at the change called death evolves into the ultimate, similar to the change from fœtal life to our present form. This is the way we hav arrived at this belief: We hav on several occasions received proofs of the existence of intelligence disconnected with visible and physical organizations. Believing that no intelligence can be produced save by an organization adapted to such production, we hav been forced to the conclusion that there are invisible organizations capable of producing intelligence. These organizations may be called spirits, but if they exist at all they must be material beings, as really as are our bodies, only in a far more ethereal and sublimated state.

These proofs referred to seemed satisfactory at the time, but we cannot deny that subsequently doubts arise, and whether there may not be some mistake about it, and that there are after all no invisible bodies, no individualities but what are tangible and visible. When, however, it is remembered that half the material composing the universe is invisible, and that the entire substance composing the earth was once invisible, and is capable of becoming so again, we are forced to the admission that invisibility is no proof of non-existence. We hav easily and cheerfully arrived at the conclusion that the powers and possibilities of Matter, or in other words of the Universe, are not to be denied or curtailed. We can admit that in the economy of the universe even continued existence is possible after our crude physical bodies hav disorganized and returned to the elementary principles of nature. We can conceive the possibility that during our present stage of existence, while we are growing and perfecting our physical organizations, we are also growing and perfecting an interior, subtile, ethereal, invisible, but still material, body as perfectly organized, or more so, as our cruder bodies, capable of carrying on the processes of eating, digesting, moving, and thinking, as really as those functions are performed in our crude and rudimental state.

This theory may be true, or it may be untrue, but it is the only theory which, to our conception and comprehension, explains how intelligence separate from physical organizations can be produced and kept up. While it is to be acknowledged that there is much fraud in what are termed spiritualistic manifestations, we are convinced that there are phenomens, and that we hav witnessed them, not explainable on the flippant charge of fraud. Science may some time prove that these do not depend upon invisible organizations; but, until that is done, we can see no theory to explain the phenomena which we hav witnessed, so probable as the one indicated.

This question may ever remain a doubt to those in the physical and rudimentary condition, and we do not pretend to think it advisable to try to see beyond the range of our vision, or to inform ourselves about the facts, if there are any, connected with an invisible state of existence. We are quite willing to wait until we complete the journey of this life and are prepared to enter upon a more pleasing stage of existence. "One world at a time" is a very good motto, and it is well to act up to it. Fortunately, there is plenty here to occupy our entire attention; and it must be regarded better to make the best use of what we now hav rather than neglect it for what we may dream, conjecture, or imagin may be in the summerland or beyond the shining river. There can be no better way than to liv this life as well as we possibly can, performing all our duties faithfully, and with almost sole reference to the here and the now. If we liv this life well, we will certainly be in a good condition to enter upon another stage of existence, if there is one.

We hav seen people who we thought, in their efforts to inform themselves about the possible conditions of another life, neglected the duties of this. We cannot see the propriety of giving up a certainty for an uncertainty. This life is a positiv fact; the other is problematical. Let the best possible use be made of the positive fact, leaving the problematical future till we are done with the present fact. If there is another state of individual existence after this, it is a part of the economy of the universe, and we cannot possibly escape it. When a small boy, we read a short, quaint sermon, something like this:

Text.—"Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither."

In considering this subject, firstly, is man's ingress into the world; secondly, his progress through the world; and lastly, his egress out of the world.

To return: His ingress into the world is naked and bare; his progress through the world is trouble and care; his egress out of the world is, nobody knows where.

In conclusion: We shall be well there if we do well here; and I could tell you no more were I to preach a whole year.

This little sermon is aged, more than half a century, to say the least, but the world has got little beyond it yet. We know about that much now, and no more.

We hav long been ready to acknowledge the benefit which Spiritualism has conferred upon the world in Liberalizing humanity and dispelling the mists and fogs of superstition and error. In this sense it has been a glorious sun in this world of ours. Many think the errors of Spiritualism are equal in magnitude to those of Christianity, but we entertain a different view. With all the errors which may be laid at the door of Spiritualism it cannot be denied that it has done a great amount of good. Its philosophy is agreeable and beautiful, and let us hope it is true.

Hurrah for Europe and the Brussels Congress.

Quite a goodly number of letters hav been received touching the Freethinkers' Congress to be held at Brussels within a few weeks, and nearly all in favor of a representation being made there of the Freethinkers of the United States, but the crowded state of our columns prevents their all appearing in this issue. Sufficient has been learned to convince us that a large proportion of American Liberals wish this International Congress to be recognized from this side of the water, and that a delegation be sent over. Some friends who are already in Europe can undoubtedly be induced to attend, and some who are still to go will join the number, enough in all to make up the number of ten delegates, as named a few weeks ago. We hav consented to be one of the number, if too many of our friends do not say no.

Such Leagues and societies of Liberals and Freethinkers in the United States as hav a desire to be represented in the approaching Brussels Congress are requested to make out and sign a certificate of the following tenor:

To the Board of Directors and Officers of the Freethinkers' Congress at Brussels:

BROTHERS IN TRUTH: Be it known to you that we, the President and Secretary of the , at , in behalf of the members of our organization, hereby authorize the following persons to act as delegates to represent us in your respected body, for conference, deliberation, and discussion upon the best means for promoting the advance of truth and mental liberty in the world. We shall be with you in heart and spirit if not in body. The following persons, or as many of them as can conveniently attend, are deputed by us as delegates and members of your organization:

O. B. Frothingham (now in Europe), Mrs. Ernestine L. Rose (now in Europe), Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, D. M. Bennett, A. L. Rawson, G. E. Hoffman (now in Europe), Alfred E. Giles (now in Europe), Edward Gastineau, Dr. T. S. Andrews (now in Europe), A. Minski.

Hoping that your meeting may be pleasant, and that good results may follow your deliberations, we are

Fraternally yours,

, Sec'y. , Pres.

When signed by the president and secretary of the League or other organization, please forward to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or to A. L. Rawson, Secretary of the National Liberal League, 19 Lafayette Place, N.Y.

The following are the donations received on the European mission:

Many thanks to the friends who hav thus generously contributed for this purpose, and hav pledged to do so. We are sorry to say the above makes up but a small part of what will be necessary to take A. L. Rawson and D. M. Bennett to Europe and back. May we still invite those generous friends who think American Liberals should be represented in that Congress, and who are in favor of our going, to contribute for that purpose. Unless the funds are forthcoming we cannot go. It will not answer to take a dollar out of our business. It would be far better to add something to it. If all who are able will help a little the matter can be easily accomplished. As it is desired to get away as early in July as possible, our friends are requested to remember us in time. We hope to be not forgotten.

Four New Books

Just issued from THE TRUTH SEEKER Press:

THE JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE between Prof. W. F Jamieson, of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the Rev. Jacob Ditzler, D. D., of Kentucky. Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings, May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages givs an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrines, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only. Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

THE CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS. A Radical Romance, by Mrs. J. E. Ball. This pamphlet of over one hundred pages is a pleasing, animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY. By Voltaire. Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly five hundred of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages, price, only 25 cents.

AN OUTLINE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS. By W. S. Bell. There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century; and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office for these four interesting books.

A MISTAKE was made in last week's issue as to the price of Mrs. Burns' Liberal Hymn Book. It is, in paper covers, 15 cents; in boards, 25 cents. We again say what we said before, thousands of copies of it should be sold.

Letter from "Antichrist."

BROTHER BENNETT: Inasmuch as the sales of the "Revelations of Antichrist" by THE TRUTH SEEKER during your imprisonment hav fallen somewhat short of what the author hoped, please accept another hundred copies, unbound, as a further donation to the Defense Fund by ANTICHRIST.

[Many thanks to this generous friend. More than once hav we thus been placed under obligations to him. May he liv many years and happily!—ED. T. S.]

The American Astronomical Clock.

We recently passed a very pleasant evening at Tammany Hall, on 14th street, in witnessing this wonderful piece of mechanism, as advertised on another page. It is unnecessary to repeat what is there said, it being only necessary to say that the statement there made is not at all exaggerated. Felix Meier, the maker, is indeed a wonderful mechanic. He resolved, when he undertook this great enterprise, to excel the world-renowned Strasburg clock, made some three centuries ago. After devoting over ten years principally to this great achievement, composed of over two thousand wheels, he finally accomplished his object in a most masterly manner. Besides the clock arrangement, it represents in miniature the complicated operations of the solar system, including the motion of the earth on its axis, and the moon revolving around it. The automatic part of the production is also marvelous in itself. As a piece of fine carving, the case is rarely excelled. The following letter is one among the many that hav been received in reference to it:

CHICAGO PUBLIC SCHOOLS,
CHICAGO, Nov. 13, 1879.

Mr. F. Meier, My Dear Sir: I cannot find words to express my admiration for your marvelous clock. I hav stood before it spell-bound for hours. I wish every man, woman, and child in the community could see it.

Sincerely yours, DUANE DOTY,
Superintendent.

MRS. NETTIE PEASE FOX has commenced a series of lectures to continue for several weeks, before the Second Society of Spiritualists at Masonic Temple. We had the pleasure of hearing her last Sunday morning. Her subject was, "Science, the Providence of Humanity." Her discourse was a sensible one. She handled her subject skilfully.

Ever So Little.

"The world do move," and so "do" the Republican party. Here is the bait thrown out to Liberals in the platform just hammered up at Chicago. The Convention affirms in plank:

4. The Constitution wisely forbids Congress to make any law respecting an establishment of religion, but it is idle to hope that the nation can be protected against the influence of sectarianism while each state is exposed to its domination. We therefore recommend that the Constitution be so amended as to lay the same prohibition upon the legislature of each state, and to forbid the appropriation of public funds to the support of sectarian schools.

Col. Ingersoll was not a member of that Convention for nothing, and we see his potent finger in this plank. Now if his candidate, Blaine, had been nominated, there might hav been some chance of obtaining such an amendment; but to make a proper political balance, measures and men, and the one diametrically opposed to the other, the Convention ought to hav squatted Edmunds on that platform—the man who champions the God-in-the-Constitution amendment in the U. S. Senate. Under Garfield and Arthur, Baptists both, if they ever come within gun-shot of having any chance to influence such an amendment, we shall see how heartily this plank will be accepted and carried into Constitutional law by them. T. C. L.

Buckeye Brevities.

THEODORE WHEATON, Allens, Miami county, O., writes: "After this coming campaign I believe Liberalism will grow faster than at any other time in its history. While I propose to keep the matter before the people of this vicinity, I shall await a more opportune time to attempt forming an auxiliary. A failure would be a serious drawback to future efforts." There are a number of Liberals up there, but they seem to be troubled with that peculiar weakness of the knees and backbone so prevalent among Liberals elsewhere. Come, gentlemen, brace up! Mr. Wheaton is working hard to further the cause, and I hope our friends up there will lend him a hand in getting up a League as soon as practicable. As Mr. Wheaton is not overly blessed with this world's goods, and has besides a large family to support, I request such of our Liberals who do not preserve their Investigators or TRUTH SEEKERS to mail them to him. He pledges himself, on the honor of an Infidel, to put them where they will do the most good.

WILL the gentleman who wrote over the non de plume "Disciple of Ingersoll" in the Miami Democrat, of Pigna, O., please send me his name and address? There ought to be a first-class League at Pigna.

MR. SHELDEN E. COOKE, Chillicothe, O., writes: "Nothing would please me more than to get up an Auxiliary, could we maintain one. But I must demur at present, because such an organization would, from loss of interest, die out in time, leaving us to be laughed at by Christians unless sustained by one or more salaried officers, whose business it would be (like a preacher's) to constantly arouse the membership into life and activity for the sake of obtaining the salary. It is my experience that men (especially business men and poor men) will soon weary in well doing, will tire of any work, unless receiving compensation in some form. Mere fame does not answer. The priesthood understand this question thoroughly. They, themselves, keep their churches alive and in working order solely for the sake of the salaries, or contributions they are to get for so doing. . . . Can you refer me to any method whereby a League can be kept active and working without paid officers?"

A pertinent question, which I submit to our Liberals for consideration and reply. My experience has been the same as Mr. Cook's; until the Liberal Leagues of the country follow the example of some Free Religionist societies, and employ a salaried lecturer or teacher I fear that none of them is safe from the dry rot of apathy and indifference, which sooner or later makes its appearance.

MR. D. N. MORLEY, Lebanon, Ohio, writes words of encouragment, and sends a small remittance, toward defraying expenses of stationery and postage. This is the second time that gentleman has come to my assistance. If there were more Liberals like him in this state something more could be done in the way of pushing on the work. Printing, stationery, etc., cost money, and it is a trifle wearying in the long run to pay it all out of one's own pocket. I hav never asked, and shall never ask for one red cent for any services I may render the Liberal cause. I giv them freely. But hereafter I decline to answer any letters unless postage stamps for the return are inclosed. That's flat.

CHAS. J. HERBOLD,
Cincinnati, O., June 8. Ch. O. S. Com. L. L.

George Chainey.

This brave young preacher, of Evansville, Ind., who has recently renounced Christianity and proposes hereafter to preach the religion of science, has accepted an invitation to speak at the Hornellsville Freethinkers' Convention. Mr. Chainey would like to spend some two or three weeks about that time lecturing; and the Liberals who reside on the line of the railroad between Evansville and Hornellsville and in central and western New York are requested to correspond with Mr. Chainey and engage his valuable services.

The subjects upon which Mr. Chainey will lecture are the following: 1. The Church of the Future; 2. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll; 3. The Value of Agnostic Religion as Revealed in the Contradictions of Unitarianism.

Mr. Chainey writes, "This last lecture is prepared with forty letters before me on my case from different members of our [the Unitarian] denomination, each one of which contradicts every other."

Mr. Chainey is a fine looking young man, as I see by the photographs which he sent me, and as he will hereafter get little aid from the church, I hope every Liberal will send and get one of these photographs. (Cabinet size, 40 cents; card size, 25 cents.)

The publishers who are getting out his sermons will hav them ready for delivery in a few days. H. L. GREEN.

Comparativ Mythology.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Within the last century Dupies, Volney, and Taylor hav taken the ground that Christianity is as one with the solar mythologies. Later along, R. W. MacKay, in two volumes of "Progress of the Intellect," excellently set forth much in this relation. Dr. Inman in "Ancient Faiths" and other works has also presented the ancient mode of doing Lord solarwise in correspondence with the physical or physiological modes of being in personifications by them of old time. So, too, Payne Knight in "Symbolical Language of Ancient Art and Mythology." The learned Freemasons, as Dr. Oliver in "Signs and Symbols" and "History of Initiations," hav also found many things significant of a common origin of all the religions. Of late years, others hav been mining in the old fields, as the Rev. George W. Cox in "Aryan Mythologies." A Catholic writer in his "Keys of the Creeds" givs a solar view of Christianity as the true one in conjunction with the sex relations as the basis of all the religions whence the spiritual evolutions hav arisen. J. P. Lundy, in "Monumental Christianity," from a Christian standpoint of "God's word" to gather up the fragments so that nothing be lost, differs so little from the heathen that he appears almost utterly submerged in the many waters of early Christianity so unlike to heathendom as flowing from the common fount. If the Hebrew fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, as per Paul, and were [all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea with the Christ-rock following them, it may be rather difficult to do this conglomerate or pudding-stone of the Bible, sometimes called the rock of salvation.

St. Paul calls it "that spiritual rock and that rock was Christ," mystically the Stone of Israel and the moving heavens or Sinai by the showing of "time and faith." No wonder then that Colenso found such short commons of the literal rock for two or three millions of people and much cattle.

Is Jesus historical, or is he only a mythical person shading off into Christ the spirit, or simply the person of a drama in the name of the Lord or the wisdom of those days? When all is within the vail of the ancient wisdom, and wisdom was justified of all her children, all we can say is that the hero-God of Christianity is clothed in the mythical drapery of those days, and that often the letter killeth where the esoteric wisdom giveth life. Hence we must wait for more light to decide whether Jesus was of flesh and blood or incarnate in personification of the sun, as was Adonis, "our Lord," mystically slain.

Says Lundy: "It is a most singular and astonishing fact sought to be developed in this work, that the Christian faith, as embodied in the Apostles' Creed finds its parallel, or dimly foreshadowed countepart, article by article, in the different systems of paganism here brought under review. No one can be more astonished than the author himself. It reveals a unity of religion, and shows that the faith of mankind has been essentially one and the same in all ages."

Here, then, is the whole groundwork granted by the learned Christian, though the Mosaic compiler of "God's word" had said that "their rock is as not as our rock, themselves being judges." But when "the Lord came from Sinai and rose up from sin unto them," when "he shined forth from Mount Paran, and came with ten thousand saints, and from his right hand a fiery law for them," he had rather a solar look. So, too, when he came from Teman and the holy ones from Mount Paran" and so, too, "when his glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise." On the same wise did Ezekiel behold him as he "came from the way of the East, with a voice like a noise of many waters, and the earth shined with his glory." Who was he but the sun, with the sky-father, when the seventy elders of Israel saw him, "and, as it were, the body of heaven in his brightness?" Nor less when "there went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured?" Who was he but the sun as set forth in "the revelations of St. John?" Here was the first of natural kingdom of heaven in conjunction with the subjectiv or spiritual, constituting the gospel, of the kingdom visible and the kingdom invisible should reflect each other—the kingdom of heaven within as well as the heavenly father who rode in excellency on the sky by his name Jah, and more or less incarnate in the various humanity of flesh and blood.

Among the new workers serving truth wherever found, on heathen or on Christian ground, are Anderson in "Norse Mythology," and Julia Clinton Jones in the "Valhalla." In these we shall find the sun altogether lovely and chiefest among ten thousand. Says Anderson: "Myth is the oldest form of truth, and mythology is the knowledge which the ancients had of the divine. The object of mythology is to find 'God and come to him,' or as Paul would say, 'That they seek the Lord if happly they might feel after him and find him," seeing that on every hand he is as one with us in all the modes of being." Says Mrs. Jones: "Baldur, the sun-god, was innocence—light of the world—the personification of the summer sun, slain by the long dark winter of the North." So was Adonis slain by the northern winter, Boar; and the mythical Jesus of St. John is slain from the foundation of the world by the same movement of the heavens as in personification of the conflict between Baldur and Loki, or God and Satan. In the sides of the North was the mansion of Lucifer or Satan, who would exalt his throne above the stars of God, as per Isaiah. As Loki was received in Asgard—home of the gods—so was Lucifer cherished in heaven till for striving against the light he was cast out by the invincible sun-god. Thus did Satan, like lightning, fall from heaven. As Loki descended on earth and brought forth the serpent, so Lucifer fell from his high estate as that same old serpent called the Devil, and Satan came down to the earth, having great wrath, with woe to the inhabitants of earth on the short commons of the winter sky.

The Persian machinery used by St. John would be equally applicable in the "Norse Mythology." Likewise, as Gabriel with flaming sword stands at the gate of heaven, so stood Heindal at Asgard's portal; and as he in dreadful Ragnarock sounded the summons on great Gjallerhorn, so shall Gabriel, with his trump, call the quick and the dead to judgment . . . even so to us comes our day of doom when Satan shall be loosed out of his prison. . . When there shall be war in heaven and Michael and his angels shall fight against the dragon, whose angels shall fight with him, when the earth shall be consumed, and the heavens depart as a scroll when it rolled together, and when time shall be no more." Thus the Valhalla.

How is it possible to separate Biblical mythology from the heathen when the parallels move so aptly side by side, and the goats are gathered in the sign Capricornus, and the sheep in the sign of Aries, the ram, or the lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, the goats going down the brink of everlasting woe, and the sheep to fresh woods and pastures new, provided in the regeneration or resurrection from the old things passed away? How shall we know how to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, and sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea, without the heathen chorus, or a little more faith in Jesus? At each spring Easter equinox a new heaven and a new earth were created. In the "astronomy of the ancients the nativity of the world was brought within the grasp of astrological computation, and the sign Aries was supposed to be upon the meridian at this great natal hour." In apt season the Lord himself descended from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God. Behold, he cometh with clouds, and there shall appear the sign of the son of man in heaven, and he himself coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, for as the lightning or sun cometh out of the east, so shall the coming of the son of man be. Mystically or mythically, he was alway the coming man in the regeneration or resurrection from the descent into hell, and those men of Galilee who saw Jesus go up in a cloud would see him come again as they had seen him go.

Now let us hav a word from the "Anglican parson and Catholic priest." He says: "It has been my function to advocate the claims of faith. As a man I am not the less alive to those of the intellect, and indeed, as I go on you will find that it was on grounds rational rather than religious that I adhered to the profession of my creed so long after the dissipation of the early illusions under whose influence that creed received my implicit adherence.

"In plain language, I conscientiously remained an officiating priest of the Catholic church even while convinced that the authority and doctrins of the church are founded altogether in what would commonly be regarded as an illusion. And in the letters which will follow this one, I propose to show you the sense in which and the reasons why I and every thinker who deserves the name are compelled so to regard them, to put you in possession, in fact, of the keys of the creeds."

This he proceeds to do by developing the old nature-worship, physical and spiritual, whereof the sun in the times and seasons had his kingdom on earth as it is in heaven, or in the Father's house of many mansions. He finds that "Jahveh or Jehovah denotes both sexes in combination." Dr. MacKay in "Lexicon of Freemasonry" also shows the make-up of Jahveh or Jehovah in the he-she of the Lord. Kuenen, in "Bible for Learners" givs the ineffable name as Yarweh. This is the name given under heaven whereby we must be saved when transubstantiated in the name of Jesus, Christ, or the Holy Ghost, or all in combination, with here a little and there a little, or not much.

"Surely, if there be anywhere a visible manifestation of God which can be accepted as the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person, it is the kingly orb on which we depend utterly for light and life, and all things needful to existence." It is the sun who is in all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and he is personified in a thousand influences of the great spirit,

> That changed through all, and yet in all the same,
> Great in the earth as in the ethereal frame.

It is the sun who moves in parallel "with the main circumstances narrated in the life of Christ, from his conception and birth to his ascension and reception into heaven."

So little is there strange and recondite in these facts that it is a perpetual marvel among the initiated how even the least incredulous of the laity continue to ignore them—a marvel not unmixed with apprehension as to the result that would follow from their becoming enlightened. The blind impetuosity on the other hand with which Protestant sects indignantly denounce idolatry, pagan or Catholic, while themselves offering palpable homage to the sun under the name of Christ, is to us a never-failing source of amusement.

I am glad to see that the Philadelphia Spiritual paper, Mind and Matter, is publishing considerable to show the identity of Christianity with the solar worship of the ancient mysteries, for surely the Spiritualists should be so much enlightened as not to be kept in bonds to the name of Christian Spiritualism, but should walk with open vision in the sight of all Israel and the sun. C. B. Peckham.

Again in the Field.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Please announce in The Truth Seeker that I hav decided to again enter the activ field of labor as a lecturer on Spiritualism and Liberalism as well as a physician and magnetic healer. I am a thorough Spiritualist and, I hope, a Liberalist also, although not a Materialist. If my oldtime friend Bro. W. F. Jamieson has not converted the good people of my old state (where I lived fifteen years) I shall be pleased to hav a few words to say to them on the relations of the Spiritual and Material theories of evolution.

For the summer and fall months my address will be at Redwood Falls, Redwood county, Minnesota. Those desiring my services either as a healer or lecturer will please address me as above. I am on my way West now and shall be in Minnesota by the 10th of June. I intend to return East again in due time.

Yours fraternally, John Brown Smith.

A Few More Words for E. A. Chapman.

Friend Bennett: I would like to say a few words in response to E. A. Chapman in your issue of June 5th. I am certainly obliged to him for his generous confession that Elmina criticises him fairly, and hope all Liberals will try to be liberal, broad, and charitable. We are seeking for truth, and it is only by exchanging thoughts and experiences fairly that real truth and fact will be won. I, for my part, would rather not gain a victory over one who thought differently from myself, if by winning it I was the means of leading any inquirer away from truth, and into the swamp's bogs and fens of error. No, I would yield even to the exponents of the old Bible mythology if they could prove to my satisfaction that Adam married his own flesh and blood, in the form of a woman made from his rib, that Elisha cursed little children, and persuaded his fetich to send she-bears to tear them in pieces, or that Solomon was a good, pure, true man, and yet claimed ownership of the bodies, souls, and hearts of one thousand women, or any other of the monstrous things the book calls divine and holy truths. I want truth, even though it conflicts with all I hold dear, precious, and holy. So if friend Chapman can prove we liv after death, I am ready to believe, and glad and willing to do so—if 'tis there truth is.

But I can not understand how Mr. Chapman can reconcile all that seems so improbable and wonderful with the known laws of nature. Will he tell us how all the millions and billions and quintillions of human beings who hav lived and died in the world during the countless ages since it has been inhabited are able to employ and enjoy themselves on "this earth?" And why is it that we do not find them more advanced in knowledge of all kinds than the living one? If one man could liv here right straight on for 5,000 years, in full strength of body or mind, and grow, progress, develop, and learn all the time, just think what a mass of information he would possess! True, we now stand upon all the acquired wisdom of the past, and, in a manner, begin where our fathers left off, but we all hav to spend years in learning even that hoarded information; and by the time we reach the threshhold of true knowledge, we are beginning to go down the hill of life, and must giv it all up, whereas if we could go right on for ages and ages there would be such grand powers of mind developed as we can not now even conceive of. But do any of the supposed spirits ever manifest anything of this superiority to their human living companions? It is not Materialists who "fix the limit to progression," but rather those who with ages and ages of continued life show us so little of real progress.

We will suppose for instance that Edward Gibbon is still living, with "this earth as abiding place," and with all his ardent love of history thrilling his spirit, and with the power of not only reading all later historical works than his, but also of going to the place he would learn about, and calling around him the people themselves, and knowing real facts. Just think what a history not only of the "Decline of the Roman Empire," he might write, but of the whole world, and of prehistoric ages and times, as well.

I did not intend to convey the idea that the "misfortunes and accidents of life were equal to the blessings," by any means. No true observer of nature and her laws would declare this, for all that liv liv for happiness, and the pain and sorrows are accidents, and

> "Though the eye may be dimmed with its grief-drop awhile,
> And the whitened lip sigh forth its fear,
> Yet pensiv indeed is the face where the smile
> Is no oftener seen than the tear."

But I did say misfortunes, sorrows, and miseries are just as much fulfilments of nature's promises as are the joys and blisses, hopes and pleasures that are showered upon us. All are the results of circumstances, and are inevitable under certain environments and conditions. As there is nothing perfect, law is continually violated. But I doubt that we can take our choice always, as to harmonizing with a wrong or a right law. Our actions depend upon the will, and the will is controlled by organization and surrounding influences. I do not think I look on the "dark side" as often as the average individual does, but I do not shut my eyes to the failures, and say that nature always works for the happiness of man or beast, tree or flower, nor do I believe in the philosophy of any ism that rests its issues on dreams, visions, and imaginary effects.

Our friend spoke in one of his letters of a desire for a glass of beer, and that desire being gratified the thirst increased, till he became alarmed and sought for the cause, and found that a drunken spirit was using his organism. Now, to me, the case looks entirely different. Had it been me, I should hav resolutely refused to drink that first glass, for both hygienic and moral reasons, but had I drank it, and found the taste increasing, I should hav thought a wrong condition of health called for the stimulus, and that the continued increase of appetite resulted from gratifying an impure longing. We all know a propensity nourished and fostered is apt to increase and grow. I think our friend will find it hard to prove that any spirit was the cause of his appetite. If the manifestations, so many of which we hear and read of, really occur, without thaumaturgical human skill, I own there is something wonderful, mysterious, and incomprehensible about them, but am willing to wait for time and science to explain the phenomena. Bring in the evidences and proofs for and against and let us see if we cannot make some new and valuable discovery of a force as yet not comprehended and understood. Let us do all this in love, kindness, and toleration, and with an earnest desire for truth, rather than a selfish victory.

"Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end and way;
But to act that each to-morrow
Find us further than to-day.
Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Cheering Words from California.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Inspired by the untiring zeal and magnificent energy of H. L. Green, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Liberal League, and in memory of the triumph of the heroic Freethinker, D. M. Bennett, over the Christian fanatics, Benedict, Comstock & Co., I determined to go to work and organize an Auxiliary League of the National Liberal League in this city. I am happy to say that my effort has been crowned with success, that the big-hearted and spirited Liberals of San Francisco nobly responded to the call. I think we hav the most unique and remarkable auxiliary in the list of nearly two hundred now united and devoted to the mother League. The signers are true men, and represent the following nations: United States, Italy, France, Germany, England, Mexico, South America (Columbia), and Canada. Is not this cosmopolitan? Is not this a hopeful sign for the great and glorious cause of Freethought, which means justice for humanity?

The following are the names and professions of the charter members in the order as signed: Byron Adonis, journalist; G. B. Cevasco, editor and proprietor of La Voce del Popolo; Charles Durand, journalist; I. N. Choynski, merchant; Dr. Geo. H. Fowler; W. J. McCormick, merchant; J. M. Pimentel, editor and proprietor El Tecolote (Spanish daily); J. L. Hatch, journalist; F. Epson, editor and proprietor La Sociedad; Dr. G. C. Hoadley.

I could hav procured a hundred names to the call, but did not deem this necessary. When we get our charter, which I sent for to-day, we will call a meeting, elect our officers, and then it is the intention of each charter member to go among his friends and procure new members. Dr. Hoadley has a list of forty-eight members of a former Freethought organization, of which J. L. Hatch was President. This body will join us as a unit when we receive our charter. San Francisco has, without doubt, more Freethinkers than any other city of its population in the republic, and they are to be found alike in all nationalities.

Now that we hav finally made a move, I hope that the National Liberal League will be proud of us, and that its honored and revered President, Hon. Elizur Wright, dwelling by the Atlantic, will accept a hearty hand-shake from the Freethinkers dwelling by the Pacific.

Bennett, we hav sympathized with you and suffered with you in your incarceration in the penitentiary whither you were unjustly sent by that infamous spirit of religious fanaticism which has deluged this beautiful earth of ours with innocent and precious human life, that spirit accursed which has slaughtered poor humanity because it dared to think, dared to be free. We congratulate you upon your liberty, congratulate you that the fresh air and the golden sunshine, the green fields, and all nature are yours again to enjoy and feast your eyes upon. We glory in the heroic devotion with which the Freethinkers East, West, North, and South hav stood by you in your hour of terrible ordeal. THE TRUTH SEEKER livs, you liv, you are restored to your faithful, devoted wife and true friends. Your enemies tried to crush and ruin you; your friends said they should not. You hav triumphed and your enemies are vanquished and humiliated. The infamous persecution which you hav suffered has united us Freethinkers from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf of Mexico to the far Northland as we were never before united. In the National Liberal League we are a band of brothers warring for simple justice for every human soul, regardless of creed, color, or nationality.

Please accept $1 for THE TRUTH SEEKER fund.

Unflinchingly in the ranks of Freethought, Yours,

BYRON ADONIS.

Goody-Good Hugh Hastings.

The daily Truth, the second day after Ingersoll's lecture, contained the following:

Our eminently pious contemporary, the Commercial Advertiser, owned and edited by the distinguished and pious Hugh Hastings, whose piety, however, does not date back to his youth, if we are to accept with credence the statements made in a certain letter of which we hav a dim recollection and to which his signature is attached, is terribly exercised at the prospect of a complete undermining of public morals by the publication of the "blasphemous harangues" of Col. "Bob" Ingersoll.

Hugh Hastings seems to hav an especial aversion to the daily newspapers "which are publishing long reports" of these harangues. This means Truth, for no other paper published what could be called a long report yesterday. Hastings does not mention Truth by name, for that would advertise it to the public, and somebody would learn that there is such a paper as Truth. [N. B. Hasting's paper circulates 2,000 copies per day, and Truth circulates 40,000. We are, therefore, very sorry we are not designated by name in Hasting's valuable advertising medium.]

Hastings, with unconscious humor, remarks that Anthony Comstock has been swift to pursue D. M. Bennett "for the writing and publication of the book called 'Cupid's Yokes,' in which there was not one vulgar passage," and calls upon him to go for Truth upon its Ingersoll publications. We speak of this as humorous, first, because Mr. Bennett did not write "Cupid's Yokes;" second, because the Commercial did not know it was a clean book, or that Bennett had been persecuted until, at the risk of Anthony Comstock's vengeance, Truth published the fact; third, because the Commercial, to use the metaphor ironically, threw a slipper after Bennett when he was outrageously and unjustly convicted, and waited for Truth, which it now wants punished for blasphemy, to defend him before it recognized his innocence.

But the Commercial would hav us prosecuted for blasphemy. When a jury of twelve men can be gathered who will condemn the open, honest, and truthful discussion of religious questions as blasphemy, we are ready for Anthony Comstock, or Hugh Hastings himself for that matter, to come on with their prosecution; but they had probably better not do so before, for some one might get seriously worsted in the encounter. It wouldn't be Truth.

But what nonsense, at this day, to speak of Col. Ingersoll as blasphemous, or predict an undermining of public morals by his "harangues." Compare the man Ingersoll, in any of his relations, with Comstock or with Hugh Hastings, as Hugh Hastings has drawn his own portrait, and the contrast will be so brilliant in favor of the orator that the kind of piety the other two deal in will seem excessivly stale, flat, and unworthy.

However, some of our correspondents hav endeavored to prove to us the greater profitableness of piety, and perhaps their manifold letters hav so touched Hugh Hastings' heart that he thinks he discerns in his religious "boom" many fat advertisements from the business houses of the faithful.

Public Prosecutors.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: At the risk of being considered a bore I am tempted to write you about public prosecutors. In a neighboring state a public prosecutor is reported as saying of one of the intended witnesses in a recent trial, "that he was afraid to put her on the stand lest she should do more harm than good."

"During the late war, at the court martial held in this city for the trial of a reporter charged with prematurely publishing information of the movements of our naval forces, by which our opponents were enabled to frustrate our intentions, after the members of the court had been sworn in, the President, a gray-haired veteran, proceeded to administer the oath to the judge-advocate. He said, 'You are not to forget that you are the representative of the people, and of the prisoner at the bar as well, for he is one of the people whom you represent. While it is your duty to bring to our knowledge all facts having a bearing on his guilt, it is also your duty to inform us of everything that may come to your knowledge tending to prove his innocence. You are not to stand here in the light of a persecutor, but must act without bias or prejudice.'"

Another writer declares: "About three years ago an ex-United States district attorney said, 'During my term of office I hav had convicted and sent to state prison more than two hundred persons, who, if they had been defended by a competent lawyer, would hav been acquitted. But it was not my business to look out for them.'"

"How often do we read in trial reports of the tact and ingenuity displayed by prosecuting attorneys in augmenting, twisting, and turning simple facts so that they will present an unfavorable aspect to a court and jury. Would it not be well for the community if our district attorneys and public prosecutors were instructed in the claims of justice as well as the duties of office, in order that innocent men may not be unjustly convicted to swell the pride of office!"

The above are mainly extracts from communications which appeared in the Sun newspaper, to be followed by some remarks of my own which were omitted for reasons I hav explained to you. Yours truly,

New York city. W. B. SICKELS.

[There is no question but what large numbers of persons tried for various crimes and sent to our prisons, are innocent of the charges made against them. While serving our time as a convict and coming in contact with many others serving out their various respective terms, we came to the conclusion that fully twenty-five per cent of the convictions of our courts are unjustly obtained. Some from inadequate counsel, some from perjury, but more because of the poverty, obscurity, and want of influence on the part of the accused. A man without money, influence, and friends stands but little chance of receiving real justice. It is a lamentable fact that our courts are more the propagators of injustice than the dispensers of justice.—ED. T. S.]

Letter from E. C. Walker.

BRO. BENNETT: Attend the Brussels Congress by all means; go as one of the most honorable and honored representatives of American Freethought.

The minions and penny-a-liners of Comstock & Co. all over the country are shrieking about the "notorious Bennett." Let us unite and take the odium out of that adjective as applied to the martyr of free mails. Bennett, Rawson, and Frothingham will make an excellent trio of delegates. The emancipated minds of all the earth must combine into one solid phalanx of liberty-lovers and justice-lovers.

Fraternize as the undaunted co-workers in the same great cause, never forgetting that those who lift the sword of revolt against the old world tyrants are working with us for the redemption of humanity from the slavery of ignorance and superstition, from the thrall alike of priest, and king, and thief. Let no narrow contracted ideas of religion keep us from extending the hand of sympathy and encouragement to the struggling patriots of Russia, Germany, France, England, Ireland, the integral reformers of America. Get out of the dwarfing valleys of provincialism on to the broad and broadening plateaus of cosmopolitanism.

Norway, Iowa, May 3, 1880. E. C. WALKER.

Liberal League Items.

FOR a short time we had, in name, a "Liberal League of America," but it appears by the following communication that we are now to hav one in fact. I can see no objection to our Canadian Liberals organizing auxiliary Leagues. The following was received by the writer from John Parkhurst, of Aylmer, Ontario: The Liberals of this place and neighborhood hav desired to form a Liberal and scientific association, and I write to you for a copy of by-laws, rules, and regulations such as are used by the Liberal societies in the United States, together with all other necessary information that may be requisit."

A MOST valuable tract for circulation has just been published by Bro. S. B. McCracken, editor of the Rational Appeal, entitled "The Second Coming of Jesus Christ." It was written, to my knowledge, by one of the best minds in the Liberal ranks, and I wish it might be read by every orthodox minister and church-member in the country. It can be procured of S. B. McCracken, 76 Seitez Block, Detroit, Michigan, for eighty cents per one hundred copies. Reader, do not fail to order a few of these most valuable tracts.

I THANKFULLY acknowledge the following contributions to aid me in the Liberal League work: Robert S Shoemaker, $1; A L Thompson, 75c; W M Robinson, $1; J H Hughes, $5; J E Baum, $30; E B Foote, Sr., M.D. $5; Cash, $2; S S Clark, $1; James C Lehmer, $3; Peter Soule; $1; Cash, $1; E C Curtis, $1; V J Borrette, 50c; Mrs J A Miller, $1; Sophie B Robinson, $1 50; Barber Creek L L, $1; John B Beel $1; Cash, 50c; M Reiman, $3; M G Shoemaker, $1; Seth M Tibbits, $2; Elmina D Slenker, 25c; M Babcock, $1; Dr J Munson, $1; R McIntosh, $5; Cash, $1; John Cosgrove, 50c; Cash, $1; Joshua Benest, $4; Hiram Wither, $4; Joseph York, $2; A H Thurston, $1; John M Price, $1; Shawmut L L, $10; Hume L L, $6 50; L Spaulding, $1; A B Bradford, $5; Mrs Larkin, 30c; Alex Cochran, $5; John Warr, $1; A L Alison, $1; B F Grove, $1; L D Dutton, $1; H Olsen, 25c; E Sweetney, $1; W H Coffin, $2 40; J C Shannon, $2 50; M Severance, 50c; Paine Hall L L, $10; Wm A McAdam, $1; J T Gilman, $1; Pulaski Carter, $2; John Tindall, 50c; John Dixon, 50c. In all, $124 up to June 2, 1880. H. L. GREEN.

Wants to be God.

M. Babcock, in closing his address which was delivered at the Opera Hall at Battle Creek, before the Spiritual and Liberal Convention, startled the audience by saying: "I want to be God, and I want to be God for the reason that I believe that I hav a better head and a better heart than the orthodox God, and with the power which he is said to possess, I can beat him in managing the things in this world. I would burst open the prison doors and set the prisoners free, first making them all good. I would close all of the byways and paths that lead to sin and ruin, smash the whisky kegs, and forever wipe out the damnable traffic in the demon of the still. I would feed the hungry, clothe the naked, send universal joy into every hamlet throughout the whole world. There should be no old maids, for I would make every girl good looking, and every man good and noble, able and willing to support a wife. I would destroy all implements of war, and unite all men and women in brotherly love. I would forgiv and save all that now are in hell, and after having wiped out the flames of hell, I would kill the devil and Anthony Comstock." (Prolonged applause by the audience.)

Mr. Babcock again took the stand the next day, and said: "I hav repented. I suppose that all gods repent sometimes. On reflection, I hav concluded that I would be a good God, a God without revenge or wrath, so I now declare that if I were God, I would not kill either the devil or Anthony Comstock. I would reform them, send them to heaven, restore the devil's original tail and set it to wagging, with Bundy [he was present], Abbot, and D. M. Bennett united in brotherly love, with Anthony at every waive of the devil's tail nodding approval at what I had done."

Mr. Babcock's last speech was well received, but in the minds of some it was a question if the restoring and forgiving of Anthony Comstock was not showing too much mercy even for a god. A LISTENER.

IT is to be regretted that notice of the approaching World's Congress of Liberals at Brussels did not sooner reach the Liberal public in America. It is imperativ that the National Liberal League be represented in that Congress, and more time is needed to raise funds to pay expenses of delegates. But let the Board select the delegation, and we will trust to the cosmopolitan spirit of American Freethinkers to do the rest. There is one thing in the Call which needs explanation. Why is the Masonic organization included among those invited to send delegates? Is it reckoned as a Liberal society? Certainly it is not such, in this country, at least. It requires belief in a supernatural God, and uses the Bible in its exercises. The Grand Orient of France has recently left God out, and for this wise action has been almost universally condemned by other Masonic organizations. For instance, the Grand Lodge of Iowa, at its last session, officially denounced the Orient for its liberal action. Bigotry and superstition rule here as well as in other popular organizations. E. C. WALKER.

Letters from Friends.

BRISTOL, WIS, June 8, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Your card of the 5th of June just received. I rejoice that in spite of Christian hate you are a free man. Your imprisonment intensified the opposition of thousands toward the Christian system of mental slavery. Abbot will soon sink to the obscurity which he so richly merits. He has proved himself the chief Tory of Freethought. W.

ALLIANCE, O., June 9, 1880.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: Unlike the "angelic Sara," I admire—in other words, I like—both you and your writings, and hav an interest in all the work you are doing. I freely confess my admiration at the risk of losing my reputation among the "saints." Am familiar with your papers and books, and through them with you, for they find a warm place in our hearts and home. Am also one of Abbot's "favored" 5,000, and hav the opportunity of seeing you as "others see you." So I know what I say when I sign myself an admirer. ANNIE E. EDWARDS.

ANGOLA, IND, June 2, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: It is with a much lighter heart I address you now than at any time before for more than a year. You are again free, again at your post; you hav been proudly received, and I am thankful, and hope your future may be peaceful and useful.

I was reading a part of Ingersoll's lecture, "What Shall We do to be Saved?" and was pleased until I came to the closing remarks, "That a man that neither smokes, drinks, nor chews is no company for either man or beast." How can a man of his good sense and moral courage in some respects advocate such an idea as that? It was really shocking to my sense of right—such filthy habits to be extolled by so great a man and before such an audience. I do think if he really did utter that sentence it will do more to injure our cause than "Cupid's Yokes" or any advocate of Freelove has ever done. Of course he has a right to express his sentiments; but truly great men hav great weaknesses.

I am glad to see by THE TRUTH SEEKER that your new books are selling so well. When I receive mine I will tell you what I think of it. I think you hav great reason to be proud of your standing and proud of your friends. You hav suffered for a good cause, but I think not without reward.

With many good wishes for your future happiness, I am, as ever, your true friend and a true friend of the cause you advocate, S. J. MINER.

LARKINSVILLE, ALA., June 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: There is a strong and growing disposition in this section to find out and know the truth. Being an Infidel myself, I am often made a confidant of by those who are not quite willing to openly avow or declare their belief. In fact, all of the best informed and most competent people are decidedly anti-orthodox, and all they need is a little more moral courage, which in a few years more I hope they may obtain.

I would like to write you a long letter if I thought you only had time to read it. I never see anything in your paper from the sunny South, and it might be inferred that there were no sympathizing, Liberal-minded, or even thinking people here; but it is a mistake, and I hope before long to send you several new subscribers as evidence of the fact.

Yours respectfully, W. B. SHELTON.

GRANT, PA., June 5, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: As I hav not written to you since you were sent to prison, I now gladly welcome you home to liberty, to your office, and to your dear wife, who must hav suffered almost as much as yourself in your absence. Long may you liv and continue to send forth your paper to enlighten thousands upon thousands who hav not seen nor heard of the new gospel of truth. I hav taken your paper from its first issue, and expect to take it as long as we both liv. I cannot get along without THE TRUTH SEEKER, as I am seeking for truth wherever found, whether on Christian or heathen ground.

Please find inclosed $8, to be applied as directed.

Yours for the truth, MARY A. SHEPHERD.

FORT DODGE, IOWA, June 6, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I wish to ask Col. R. G. Ingersoll a question through your valuable paper. In a sermon preached in this place on the evening of the 23d of May last, by the Methodist minister, he made this statement: "That while in conversation with an eminent divine in Chicago a few days ago, he told me that, in conversation with Mr. Ingersoll, he (Ingersoll) told him (eminent divine) that he had never delivered a lecture in the United States in opposition to the Bible but what he had had his misgivings." Now I want to know if that statement was ever made to eminent divine? Col. Ingersoll has many warm friends in this place, and we believe the story false, either first or second-handed, and the Liberals of this place want to know which.

It is rather late for congratulations, Mr. Bennett, but please accept mine on your release from that orthodox hell of Albany, and from the hands of that pimp of perdition, Tony Comstock, the devil's right bower.

Yours for the right, H. W. SANBORN.

[As Col. Ingersoll may very likely never see the above inquiry, and if he should, would scarcely reply to it, we will take the liberty to say that the "eminent divine" lied like a Christian. Col. Ingersoll has never had any misgivings concerning what he said about the Bible unless because he had not pictured its falseness and deformity in as dark color as it really deserves.—ED. T. S.]

GUNNISON, COL., June 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I called on your wife at your office last winter and expressed my sympathy for you, and felt very bad to think I was unable to assist you financially, but my prospects are brightening now, and I can at last read my own paper instead of sponging on you. You hav had my heartiest sympathy all through your unjust martyrdom, and I hope you will not be molested again. I admire your frank, straightforward principle, regardless of the Mrs. Grundy element in society. I only wish that you took less notice of what that element croaks about you and the large, intellectual, truly solid class you represent. I think you can hardly afford to spend so much time and ammunition in killing off such exceedingly small game. I would let Abbot, Cook, Comstock, and their clique go to thunder and pay no more attention to them than the moon does when the dogs bark at her. All the sensible class will after a while gravitate toward the truth, and we need not fear the result. But I do not wish to dictate. I like the paper as I do bread and meat, and it is only occasionally that I throw out a crust or a bone from it. Please change its address from Del Norte to Gunnison. Yours truly,

WARREN RICHARDSON.

PHILADELPHIA, PA, June 9, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find $1, which you will please accept toward defraying your expenses to Europe. This donation is from James Hampson, with his best wishes for your welfare.

Hoping you are enjoying good health, I remain,

Yours in friendship, W. F. PORTER.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: It makes me very happy to know that you are now a free man, still able to work in the vineyard of freedom. Having myself been in prison for seven years, I understand what you hav suffered. I was afraid that you would succumb to the sufferings, for the penitentiaries and institutions in this country are more barbaric than in my fatherland, Norway. Yours truly,

MARC THRANE.

CIRCLEVILLE, O., May 31, 1880.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Friend: Reading the very trite and appropriate spirit of welcome to you, expressed by your many warm-hearted and sympathetic friends on the liberation of your person from prison to your home and devoted wife, I felt inspired to pen the following poem, as manifesting my union of spirit with you and with all who have at heart the final emancipation of mental and old creed-bound slavery to religious opinions bred and born in the dark ages of the past by designing priests and cunning, selfish men. You will be pleased to learn that my wife and myself are growing more and more disgusted with the old fogyisms of the Christian churches and their false theological doctrins. We are in a transition state, as are tens of thousands of good people of our day and time, and, our lot being cast here where the church element bears rule, we are obliged to observe more silence than is agreeable to our progressive natures, or else to starve or be quickly reduced to beggary, or, in other words, we must at least suffer losses which we are illy prepared to meet.

I am much indebted to you for both the paper and the splendid new book, "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," but, my dear friend, I am not able to spare any money at present. I can tell you it goes hard for a man of my age and inexperience to be cast out into a crafty world with the idea of doing anything but to meet the necessities of life.

LIBERTY'S CHAMPION.

O Liberty, Liberty! Sweet the sound.
Let it echo the world around.
Let tyrants tremble in their tracks.
Their prison bars and torture racks
No more shall stay the march of right,
Nor lead us back to darksome night
Of superstition's slums and lies.
And pious sneaks, in thin disguise,
Pretending war on the obscene,
When truly this is what they mean,
To persecute the good and great,
Whose cutting truths they fear and hate.

Liberty's champion, free again
To fight for truth with might and main.
Long may our hero, Bennett, liv,
Lessons of Freethought yet to giv!
Downtrodden millions, bound to creeds,
Whose persecuting, fiendish deeds,
With jealous hate, that Infidel scheme
Which will, in time, all men redeem
From musty Bible lore and creeds
And all its persecuting deeds
Outwrought by Comstock, kith and kin.
Steeped black in antichristian sin.

PROPHETIC.

I see a sword hung by a thread
Just over Comstock's double head.
A self-abhorrent hell is sure
For him (poor devil) to endure.

Uplifts its hydra, monster head,
And shakes its hands with gore red
From bleeding wounds to Bennett given,
Whose day of gladness hath arriven.

Why not?
Since greater power he finds to-day
Against the church which had its say
To thrust him into dismal jail
Because he dared church lies assail
With missiles of pure truth and right.
But now he's free again to fight
O d superstition's sordid crew
Of Christian, Pagan, Gentile, Jew.

Then shout,
Hurrah for Bennett, loud and nigh.
No, never let his spirit die;
It is the right against the wrong.
His is the spirit of our song.
Be Infidel to church and state,
"God in the Constitution" hate.

We say,
Let all Freethinkers, to a man,
Work to cripple the powers that scan.

E. D. BLAKEMAN.

BELLOWS FALLS, VT., May 31, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I inclose check for three dollars, to pay for the first volume of the book which you wrote while in prison, to which place you were sent for trying to improve the human race. I lent some TRUTH SEEKERS, containing your two last letters, to a church-member in this place, and he told me that they contained more humanity than had been preached in the pulpits of this place for the last ten years. N. ARNOLD.

PLEASONTON, IOWA, May 27, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Receive the compliments and well wishes of Dr. and Mrs. Hamilton to yourself and Mrs. Bennett. Hoping that your domestic happiness may, in the future, be undisturbed, and that your paper may be perpetuated for humanity's sake, I remain, Yours truly, A. HAMILTON.

BART, PA., May 23, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Every true lover of free thought, free speech, and freedom of the press must rejoice that you are again at liberty. No one believes, not even Christians themselves, that you were persecuted for mailing an obscene pamphlet. That was a mere pretense, as every one knows who is familiar with the case.

"The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" came all right. I hav read the most of it, and am much pleased with it. He who will read that book carefully, throw away his prejudices, and let his reason hav full sway, can come to no other conclusion than that the gods are all myths, and the Christian God, the God of the Bible, as much of a myth as the others.

And then what becomes of that mythological old book, the Bible, that Christians worship as their idol? Christians are very severe in their condemnation of the worship of idols, but if there are any greater idolators than both Catholics and Protestants, I don't know who and where they are. Bah! worship that old, bloody, barbarous, obscene book! Far better would it be to worship idols of wood or stone, dogs or crocodiles, than this old fetich book, that no child should ever be allowed to read, let alone ever be taught to worship.

There is perhaps not an Infidel, at least not one that is outspoken in his opinions, but has suffered persecution in some way or another. I can say with truth, in an experience of fifty years as an unbeliever, that I hav never met with a true believer in the Bible and Chrstianity that was tolerant, not one. My own nearest and best Christian friends are not tolerant. They hav said, "What is the use of arguing against the Bible? It does no good; it only makes enemies." The plain inference to be drawn from their treatment is that unbelievers hav no rights which Christians are bound to respect. This is as true to-day as it was five hundred or a thousand years ago. Both the press and the pulpit are positiv proofs of the truth of this. Had the press been untrammeled, your case never could hav happened. To the eternal and shameful disgrace of many popular papers, let it ever be remembered, and never be forgotten, that they either encouraged this outrageous prosecution and persecution, or remained silent, with a very few noble exceptions, and suffered this out, rageous business to go on. A little thunder, a few flashes from the secular press, would hav nipped this hellish business in the bud.

If the Christian religion is genuin, and the Bible an inspired book, given by God himself, why should Christians fear a full and fair investigation of its merits? If it is all that is claimed for it, it would need no earthly power, no temporal props, but would stand on its own foundation, like the solid rock, and all the powers of hell, if there are such powers, could not prevail against it. But the fact is, it was always a fraud, a gigantic delusion and humbug; and the only difference between it and all other frauds and delusiv humbugs is that it is the biggest, the mightiest, and most profitable of them all.

But thanks to the truly honest, enlightened, scientific, and noble men and women of the times, this gigantic delusion has begun to totter and is on the downward move, so that it is only a matter of time, and not a long time either, when it will cease to be a power in the world. Recently a doleful article appeared in the New York Times lamenting the decline of Christianity and throwing out suggestions in the way of props. Also a long article appeared in Harpers' Monthly to the same effect, fully acknowledging the decline of Christianity.

Here I must say a good word for Mr. Macdonald for the able manner in which he conducted THE TRUTH SEEKER during your absence, and the gallant fight he made for free thought and freedom of the press. It was most faithfully conducted, and he deserves the thanks and kind remembrance of all Liberals and friends of Freethought. And the other boys, I presume, hav done their duty faithfully, and should be kindly remembered.

Inclosed find $5, $2 for the second volume of the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," and the remainder for the paper for next year.

Very truly, your friend, I. KING.

LUDLOW, ILL., May 29, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: It is with unexpressible pleasure that I welcome you home again, and according to promis I inclose the money for your new book, and fifty cents for the "Cincinnati Convention." Wishing you a long and prosperous life, I remain, Your true friend,

MRS. MELLIE G. NEWKIRK.

FALL RIVER, MASS., May 10, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND D. M. BENNETT: I congratulate you upon your admission into the free air once more, and trust you may hav no more such sad experiences as the past has been. I think you must feel like one who is beginning a new life. I hav thought of you a great deal since you hav been shut in from the sweet influences of liberty and the glad sunlight.

You hav bitter and persistent enemies besides Comstock and the church at his back, but I beg that you will meet them in kindness and gentleness; it is the best way to disarm them. With kindest wishes for your continued health and happiness, I am, very truly, your friend,

SUSAN H. WIXON.

MUSCATINE, IOWA, June 4, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Our Christian governor recommended May 29th as Decoration Day (Saturday), but notwithstanding his excellency's order several cities of our state observed Decoration Day, May 30th (Sunday), and the following account from Iowa City speaks for itself, showing that freemen don't take orders from their servants.

Here we had an address from the governor and, of course, had to hold forth Saturday, and it stormed all day like all forty, but the day following—Sunday—was beautiful; so I take it, the Lord frowned on Saturday.

Preachers hav about lost their grip, and in a few years we may expect to see the dawn of peace.

The following notice appeared in one of our papers: "Mr. K. O. Holmes delivered the address Decoration Day, Sunday, May 30, 1880, at Iowa City, and notwithstanding the fact that the pastors of several of the churches, after the close of their morning services, advised the members of their churches not to attend, it is estimated that over 4,000 gathered at the cemetery, being the largest audience ever known to turn out on any former Decoration Day."

Respectfully, W. M. KENNEDY.

BLUFFTON, O, June 6, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Our quiet and peaceful part of God's vineyard was to-day put in alarming excitement, caused by the all-wise ruler and special conductor of this world. A mile east of our village the Christians (known as the Evangelical church of God) had assembled to praise, worship, and ask blessings. God blessed them to-day in a way that I do not want to be blessed. He caused the wind to blow so hard that the church could not prevail against it; the roof flew off, part of it, with other heavy timber and brick, falling in upon the people, injuring twenty-eight, some severely. The preacher got his portion. He had three ribs broken, and otherwise hurt. It seems strange that God would destroy his own house, and when it is full of his elect. Why did he not wait until some other time when there were no people in the church? God must hav done this on purpose, for there was not another house, tree, or fence-rail moved. This should certainly be a caution to people who take their wives and children to church.

Yours for truth and Freethought, D. S. FEMLER.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 5, 1880.

ILLUSTRIOUS CHIEF: I deeply appreciate the honors you hav conferred upon me, and only regret that I am not more worthy of them. Your letter was a great but exceedingly pleasant surprise. Being entirely unexpected, the pleasure was all the greater.

Vol. I. of the "Gods and Religions" and a bundle of THE TRUTH SEEKERS of the 29th ult. received this morning. Numbers of the latter I hav already distributed among my friends. Cevasco of La Voce and Manguzzi of La Scintilla were delighted with the article, and wish me to say that they are with you in the noble cause. Both highly complimented THE TRUTH SEEKER. They speak English fluently. This (Saturday) evening I shall visit some of the high chiefs and spread THE TRUTH SEEKERS among them. Signor Fugazzi, President of the Garibaldi Guard, will keep THE TRUTH SEEKER in his office, where all friends can see. It will be a pleasant duty for me to do all I can to bring your superb journal before the Freethinkers of this city.

The "Gods" is a magnificent volume. Hav already glanced over it. You are a man of exraordinary energy and prodigious working capacity. How in the name of goodness you accomplish so much is a marvel. Your works, private correspondence, editorial labors, social calls, etc., and yet you continue as ceaseless in toil as ever! For the present of the "Gods" ten thousand thanks, and also for your photographs. I will carry both about me, and the one taken in prison garb will serve to arouse whatever eloquence is in me, when showing it to friends, in denunciation of the accursed bigots who wrongfully robbed you of your liberty and sought to crush you. The manner in which the Freethinkers stood by you is a heroic event in the history of our country. The devotion to you was sublime. Tell me anything in the world's record more touching, more faithful, more loving. You could reward no one, offer no largess, confer no titles, grant no estates, and yet in your prison garb you had that which the monarchs of the earth in vain seek and long for—the affection and undying devotion of free and brave souls. Hav you thought of this in its deep, deep significance? The world has never, never seen more heroic devotion. You ought to feel, not as if you were a "bigger man than old Grant," to use a political witticism, but as if you were born to illustrate the profound love in the human heart for a human being wronged and outraged as you hav been. Cynics rail at poor humanity, but it is true to justice and mercy, when not weighed down with bigotry and shackled with the falling chains of superstition. Chief, I wish I could speak to you, instead of having to write, then I could express the passion and power in my heart; then I could paint a picture of the crimes, abominations, and bloody horrors of that merciless thing called Christianity, which has sought you and thousands, yea, millions of victims as sacrifices on the bloody altars of religious demonism. We will meet one day, and until then I shall deem it a great honor to be occasionally remembered by you.

I sincerely trust you will be able to go to Brussels. I shall see what can be done here toward raising a fund for expenses. Chief, we hav had terrible times here for the past three years, and now we are in the midst of uncertainty and doubt. The real estate market is duller than it has been for ten years, and the savings banks are loaning less money than ever before. The Bank of California and Bank of Nevada hav greatly curtailed their working capital and clerical force, and the house of Rothschilds has just withdrawn its agency from here for good. Thousands are out of employment. The few bonanza rings hav all the coin, and the masses are whistling to keep their courage up. Our "best climate in the world" is cursed in some way and no one seems to see through the trouble. I mention these facts so that you may see that the Freethinkers suffer with others, and that you may know why it is we do not better than we hav done. The Liberals here are loyal followers, but under the circumstances our friends at the East do not hear from them as if times were flush. In fact, Chief, the weaker here are driven to the wall, and it is only the few strong, resolute souls that hold their own or hav the heart to do anything outside that connected with the fearful struggle for bread and butter. Still all are hopeful, and "we may be happy yet;" to be personally merry, I quote from the unknown facetious author of the quotation.

My regards to Chief Rawson, also to Mac, who so bravely carried on THE TRUTH SEEKER during your paseo in purgatory. Is not H. L Green a ceaseless worker in the good cause!

I cannot help commending the esprit of the charming Freethinkess who so graciously entertained her friends at the residence of Mrs. Fernandez. I shall be glad to be remembered to Miss Tilton and to Mrs. Fernandez, and I know that the day will come when the ranks of Freethought will be honored with bevies of just such noble women—women of heart and soul, of culture and intellect—who in their heart will despise the theological frauds and clerical buffoons of Christianity. We must cultivate a refined and elegant social life in the Leagues, while never wanting in that aggressiv and royal manhood that conquers and subjugates.

W. S. Ray has just returned from New York. He was at the Chickering Hall ovation, and gave me a graphic picture of that great affair. Ray wishes to be remembered to you. He tried to meet you, but was unable, although he called at your office. He is one of the charter members of our League and a Freethinker of the true stamp.

I hav the pleasure of forwarding you the shadow of a chaste and unsophisticated reveler in the realms of Freethought. He is just as pious as the Lord made him, and the good Lord knows that the piety market will never be able to make a "corner" in that article so far as the original of the shadow is concerned. The photograph is sent as a reciprocity for yours, so much appreciated.

Courteously extend my kind remembrance to your wife, who I hope is in excellent health. You must feel splendid to be free once more. I hope you will lecture this winter. You will receive royal fêtes. By the way, if Mrs. Bennett would appreciate a lovely piece of coral from the South Sea Islands—where I found my heaven on earth for two years—I will try and send it to her by some friend going to New York.

Hav I exhausted your patience? Yes. Well, I will close this with the heartfelt wishes of the League 190 for you and yours.

May the Lord love you and not call for you to soon. I am off to my French supper, and then—well, heaven will direct my "saint"-ly steps. BYRON ADONIS.

DUFFERIN COLLEGE, LONDON, ONT., June 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I need scarcely say how entirely my sympathies are with you in your recent tyrannical and unjust imprisonment. However, the bigots hav made a false move. In England they are setting up a united howl about Bradlaugh. Meantime I think Freethought progresses steadily, if slowly, against the great conspiracy, the root of which is simply ignorance.

With heartiest good wishes, believe me, dear sir,

Yours very faithfully, G. W. GRIFFITHS.

BELLEVILLE, WIS., May 30, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT: Friend and martyr to the cause of human happiness, your note came to hand requesting remittance due THE TRUTH SEEKER. I wish you much joy and many congratulations upon your release, and heartily hope the Christian bigots will let you alone hereafter.

This world is beautiful, yea, beautiful; and any one who thinks it is not is an ignoramus, and has yet something to learn. To that class who think the world is limited only for themselves, and that by sending our most noble and honest human beings to prison because they happen to hav some new ideas or different opinions from their own, I would say, Try the prison for a year or so and then come out and tell us how you feel before you make another final decision upon an unbeliever.

"We want not a word whispered here
In pity for our unbelief,
Or sorrow that we cannot share
The views that giv their souls relief.
Our thoughts to us are none less dear,
Nor less convincing and sincere,
Than theirs, so rigid and austere."

Many good wishes for yourself and lady. I am deaf, yet a friend to you. PHEBE A. SMITH.

HANSON, KY., June 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find one dollar. I hav had great sympathy for you in your troubles. I hav been a constant reader of your paper since it started. If I liv to see the 10th of June I will hav been on earth sixty-six years. I hav been a close observer, and hav seen all the changes, political and religious, of my time. I find nothing better to believe than Infidelity, and nothing better to read than THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Yours for light and truth, DANIEL HAYNES.

PARIS, ILL., May 10, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Old Friend: THE TRUTH SEEKER has just reached here, and your escape from the clutches of your enemies officially announced. I hasten to present my earnest congratulations, in which my daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Byrns, most heartily join. Many of your old employees hav called on me to say they wished to be remembered by you as sympathizing in your troubles and rejoicing in your release, little Jimmy Mitchell in particular, who, by the way, has been afflicted with the loss of sight ever since he left your employ.

Fraternally yours, J. A. WALTHALE.

DENVER, IOWA, June 5, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: In reply to your kind letter of the 31st ult., permit me to say, that though thanking you heartily for your offer to send me, on trust, "Gods and Religions," how they hav cursed the world! I here inclose you a postal order to pay for both volumes.

What progress Liberal principles hav made during the past year. Liberals themselves are astonished, and at it the church stands aghast. The friends of civil and religious liberty are rising up everywhere, and, standing closer and closer, are determined to withstand the power that "loveth to oppress." Nearly two hundred Leagues organized, in which Spiritualists and Materialists work hand in hand in this great cause for liberty, justice, and humanity! What the average membership is I know not, but the little one over which I hav the honor to preside numbers more than 260. What has caused this waking up—this shaking off the dust of antiquated institutions? Was it the mealy lectures of the "cultured" secessionist, who from being much petted fancied himself a leader, and hastened to jump, coward-like, upon one most unrighteously struck down? What folly to suppose that the reasoning, thinking mind needs or will accept of a "leader." No! the Sumpter gun that roused the free—whose startling sound floated over valley and mountain, over forest and plain, reverberating among a thousand hills, and which shall continue to sound till man is free, was the shamefully striking down of D. M. Bennett. Yes, free thought, free speech, free press, freedom, was struck down with you. Then those for whom you suffered, rose up from sleep. Stand erect, and fear neither the tyrant's threat nor the coward slanderer's venom. Our sentinels and sharpshooters are awake, and the base hypocrit who fires on his former friends as he deserts to the enemy, must be good at dodging.

History repeats itself, and for your encouragment look at that other noble martyr led through the streets of Boston with a rope round his neck, by "5,000 gentlemen of wealth and standing." Was the truly noble Garrison or the antislavery cause crushed? No! The result was the very opposit. Again, in the tabernacle in your city, at which I was a witness, were freedom and antislavery "crushed," in the breaking up of the anniversary meeting of the American Antislavery Society, by a gang of 600 rowdies, composing the "Empire Club," led by Isaiah Rynders, whom James Buchanan and the United States Senate afterward rewarded for his services by making him U. S. marshal? Was Abolition silenced? No! but on the contrary it was given a power irresistible. So with you and the Liberal cause you are nobly advocating. In the simple negro language:

"De harder dat dey knock you down
De higher up you bounce."

Yours truly, M. FARRINGTON.

EUREKA, CAL., May 28, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: "Home again" were the first words which greeted my eyes on opening THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 8th. While in one respect they almost make me leap for joy, in other respects they induce sad reflections. It seems incredible that in this enlightened century a man should be taken away from home and friends and be imprisoned for opinion's sake, and yet such has been the case. It seems impossible that a people who boast of their freedom should quietly look on when a fellow-citizen is dragged to prison for exercising the rights of a citizen. It is still more astonishing that in a republic in which all religions are represented, a few pious frauds of a certain class should be allowed to run the wheels of government, and dictate to the highest officials how to act in certain cases. We may look with disdain upon monarchies, and take pride in the thought of being free men, but alas! what does our freedom consist in? In going barefoot when we hav no shoes.

I hope you will spend a part of the remainder of your life in waking people up upon that subject. You hav done good service already in that direction; and although your contemporaries may not laud you to the skies on account of it, future generations will do you justice and appreciate your labors. I am glad that you were honored with a reception. It shows that there are some men who appreciate your labors, that there are some men who hav honor and strength of mind enough to stand by an oppressed man, even at the risk of being called obscene. It shows that the world moves.

I assure you it would hav been a great pleasure to me to hav been at the Reception and shaken hands with you, but since distance obliged me to forego that pleasure, let these few lines go in my place and congratulate you on your return. May the remainder of your life flow on in peace! You hav the sweet consolation of having done your duty toward yourself and your fellow-men. You hav asserted your manhood, and hav shown the world that even prison bars will not deter you from doing your duty, and that you would rather lie within prison walls with honor than outside of them with disgrace. What a glorious world this would be if there were many men like you!

Inclosed you will find postal order for five dollars, the price of your new work, which I subscribed for some time ago. Giv my best respects to Mr. Macdonald. You owe him much for conducting THE TRUTH SEEKER so ably in your absence. Wishing you many and happy days, I remain, Sincerely yours, ROBERT GUNNISON.

PERU, FLORIDA, May 1, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT: I hope I may congratulate you on your release from the Christian dungeon, where you suffered for our liberties. It will depend upon the exertions of all that love to breathe the air of liberty and to enjoy the free exercise of their mental faculties to prevent the repetition of religious persecution.

If one or more of our Liberal friends want to buy a well-established home, with Southern fruits of many kinds, in our "land of flowers," at half its cost, they may apply at once, with stamp, to Yours, KARL ENGLER.

ALLIANCE, OHIO, May 10, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: It is probable our town enjoys—or suffers—more or less of a reputation for Liberalism in the community at large. Be that as it may. A few friends met together here, about the hour when you were gathering at Chickering Hall, for the purpose of adding somewhat to the wave of sympathy which has risen to meet Mr. Bennett, from the free spirit of the land.

Personally you are unknown to most of us, and for your personal acts we are not responsible, but we know that the law has been set at defiance in your imprisonment, and therein hav we been outraged and insulted. The following preamble and resolutions, after an animated discussion and prolonged consideration, were at our second meeting unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, We consider the late most unjust imprisonment of D. M. Bennett as an unmistakable menace to personal liberty everywhere within the jurisdiction of our government, and the failure of our President to be moved to clemency by the large number of petitions proves that church and state are combined to crush out those rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution, first of which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; therefore,

Resolved, That we fully realize the critical condition in which we are placed, and that we feel the necessity of combination among Liberals throughout the country in fighting to the bitter end, if need be, the battle of free thought, free press, and free mails.

Resolved, That we agree with the Attorney-General in his advice to the President, that Mr. Bennett was guilty of no crime, but that he was convicted and punished solely as the exponent of Liberal principles and publisher of an Infidel paper.

Resolved, That as the church has proved itself an enemy of our liberties, and the old political parties are powerless to protect us, we commend to the consideration of our friends the necessity of organizing for mutual defense under a new banner of politics.

Resolved, That we welcome back to home and friends, and to the editorial chair, that veteran of Freethought, D. M Bennett, and hope he may never again fall into the hands of that pliant tool of Christian bigotry and hatred—Anthony Comstock. G. W. THORNBURGH, Pres.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed find money order for five dollars, for which please send the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" to our address. Must hav both volumes. Accept our hearty congratulations on your safe return to home, friends, and business. We are astonished and more than glad to see that you are not broken-spirited after your unjust treatment, and enjoy the old-time vim with which you renew your good work. May you liv a thousand years to carry on the good cause. Keep Tony and his infamous conduct before the people. Our kindest and best wishes to Mrs. Bennett and yourself.

Fraternally yours, J. and A. E. KIRK.

SHELBY, MICH., June 3, 1880

BENNETT: You certainly feel bored by so much correspondence, and your mental stomach is surely cloyed, and if you and your lady will only come out here I will feed you both for a month on country goodies, such as ham and eggs, oatmeal pudding, country made bread, and flaky pies, made of cherries and gooseberries and pie-plant; and you shall hav all the maple sugar you can eat, and a nice clean bed to sleep in, and a new mosquito bar nicely hung. I'll treat you the best I know how, because I want to see you and talk to your wife, because I believe she is a faithful and true woman. I want you to understand I don't take stock in any other kind. My brother, C. A. Gaines, and Mr. Gale both liv at Hart—our county seat—and would be ever so glad to see you both. Now do come, and you won't regret it. MRS. L. G. TOMES.

[Thanks to our kind sister for her invitation. We would be very glad to pay her a visit could we conveniently do so. —ED. T. S.]

The Nest and the Star.

A SONNET.

"Thou art low in the grave, Anatoth, but love is with thee there.—George Eliot."

Like as a sea-bird to the billows bending,
With unmoved wing he's never-tiring soar
Till eve's lone star, with deep'ning twilight blending,
Lights the dear nest upon the far-off shore;
Of wondrous music of the soundless deeps,
To starry legions dancing on the waves,
All mindless flies to where his loved mate keeps
Watch o'er the home for which he the ocean braves,
Even so, my soul, soar I at twilight hour,
Winged with love and hope to thee as well.
Not in the world's wide orb lives there the power
Which thought can ever weave in fancy spell
To lure from where earth's dearest treasures are
With thee, my love, my life, my dream, my star.

CHARLES BRADLEY.

"The Reading Magdalen."

BY ALHAZA.

In early days perhaps thou wert fair and meek,
A pitying statue in a murderous age,
Or leaning where some fragrant missal lay,
Thy snowy bosom rested on the page.

Thou wert religion with an aspect sweet,
Plucking the thorn from every brow of care,
But pondered soon o'er many a bloody scroll,
Tossing with glee thy wild, disheveled hair.

'Twas once its silken beauty seemed too coarse
To wipe the tears that washed the Savior's feet;
But to a serpent turned each glittering curl
To strangle thought and every impulse sweet.

And thou didst read, with wild and furious joy,
Of towns besieged, of sacred walls laid low,
Of women murdered who had safety sought
In dark towers—burned by fiends from realms below.

Like vile Aholibah, thy shoes were red,
But not with work of rich, empurpled dye;
But trampling on the wounds of martyred saints,
Thou didst enact the will of God on high.

Then, resting, gloated o'er a crimson page
Of Alva's fury in a harmless vale,
When the dread shrieks were heard for many a mile,
With scarcely one to bear the sickening tale.

And thou canst now peruse a pamphlet vile,
Written to poison every honest joy,
But canst not tear the conqueror's wreath away,
Nor one fond hope or cherished thought destroy.

ON EXHIBITION DAILY AT
TAMMANY HALL, 14th STREET, bet. 3d & 4th AVES., N. Y.

THE WONDERFUL AMERICAN
ASTRONOMICAL CLOCK.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CLOCK.

The clock is eighteen feet in height, eight feet wide by five deep, and weighs five thousand pounds. There are required in the construction of the clock two thousand wheels, besides the great number of shafts, pinions, and other machinery necessary to complete the grand combination. The clock is run by weights which weigh seven hundred pounds, and is wound up once in twelve days. The case or exterior of the clock is entirely of black walnut, and is elegantly carved or engraved in designs appropriate and symbolic of our Republic. Above the main body of the clock is a marble dome, upon which Washington sits in his chair of state, protected by a canopy which is surmounted by a gilded statue of Columbia; on either side of Washington is a colored servant in livery, guarding the doors, which open between the pillars that support the canopy; on the four corners of the main body of the clock are black walnut niches containing human figures, emblematic of the march of life; the two lower ones are supported by two female figures with flaming torches; one of the niches contains the figure of an infant, the second the figure of a youth, the third of a man in middle life, the fourth of an aged graybeard, and still another, directly over the center, contains a skeleton, representing Father Time. All these figures hav bells and hammers in their hands. At the end of every quarter hour the infant strikes upon the bell which he holds in his hand. At the end of each half hour the youth strikes; at the end of three-quarters of an hour the man, and at the end of each hour the graybeard. Death then follows with a measured stroke to toll the hour.

The clock shows local time in hours, minutes, and seconds; the difference in time at Chicago, Washington, San Francisco, Melbourne, Pekin, Cairo, Constantinople, St. Petersburg, Vienna, London, Berlin, and Paris; the day of the week, calendar day of the month, month of the year, and seasons of the year; the signs of the zodiac, the revolutions of the earth on its own axis, and also around the sun; the revolutions of the moon around the earth, and with it around the sun; also, the moon's changes from the quarter to half, three-quarters, and full; the correct movement of the planets around the sun. The inventor has a crank-attachment to the clock, by means of which he can hasten the working of the machinery, in order to show its movements to the public.

A large music box, manufactured at Geneva expressly for this clock, begins to play at the same time that the skeleton strikes the hour, and a surprising scene is enacted upon the platform beneath the canopy. Washington slowly rises from his chair to his feet, extending his right hand, presenting the Declaration of Independence; the door on the left is opened by the servant, admitting all the Presidents from Washington's time, including President Hayes. Each President is dressed in the costume of his time. The likenesses are admirable. Passing in file before Washington, they face and raise their hands as they approach him, and walking naturally across the platform, disappear through the opposite door, which is promptly closed behind them by the second servant. Washington retires into his chair, and all is quiet, save the measured tick of the huge pendulum, and the ringing of the quarter hours, until another hour has passed.

Excursion parties and every man, woman, and child from the East, West, North, and South visiting the city of New York should not leave without seeing this WONDERFUL WORK OF ART, THE GREAT AMERICAN CLOCK. On exhibition daily in TAMMANY HALL, East 14th street, from 10 A.M., to 10 P.M. Sundays 2 P.M. to 10 P.M.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington Ave., New York, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

ALL true greatness of mind depends upon the culture of the affections—their nurture, their exercise, and their development.—Self Formation.

LET no one expect to combine the incompatible advantages of an honest, straightforward course and of a hollow, insincere conduct.—Samuel Bailey.

How strange and sad is the laxity with which men, in these days, suffer the most inconsistent opinions to lie jumbled lazily together in their minds!—Coleridge.

IT is a low and contracted view of the doubtful word utility which regards rather the enjoyments of physical convenience than the general well-being of the species.—Hallam.

I HAV never desired, nor do I desire, to disturb the contentment nor the faith of any one. But when these are already shaken, I desire to point out the direction in which I believe a firmer soil is to be found.—Strauss.

GOD knows I'm no the thing I should be,
Nor am I e'en the thing I could be,
But twenty times I rather would be
An Atheist clean
Than under gospel colors hid be
Just for a screen. —Burns.

NATIONALITY is not a virtue, but is an ordinance of nature and a natural bond; it does much good; in itself it prevents none; and the experience of history condemns every attempt to crush it when it has once been really formed. —Goldwin Smith.

WERE half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts.
—Tennyson.

DOTH any man doubt that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, as one world, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition and unpleasing to themselves?—Bacon.

DEATH has two aspects—dreary and sorrowful to those of prosperous, mild, and almost genial to those of adverse, fortune. Her countenance is cold to the young, and youthful to the aged; to the former her noise is importunate, her gait terrific; the latter she approaches like a bed-side friend and calls in a whisper that invites to rest.—W. S. Landor.

"Is Saul also among the prophets?" Oh for a man that will stand up and say, I want to be good, honest, virtuous, and upright, loving my neighbor as myself, helping my fellow-man along the rugged road of life, simply from a love of doing these things for their own sake, and not because he fears eternal torture in hell and hopes for a reward of a golden crown in heaven!—Paine.

THE doctrin which, from the very first origin of religious dissension, has been held by all bigots of all sects, when condensed into a few words and stripped of rhetorical disguise, is simply this: I am in the right and you are in the wrong. When you are the stronger you ought to tolerate me, for it is your duty to tolerate truth. But when I am the stronger I shall persecute you, for it is my duty to persecute error.—Macaulay.

POWER creates tyrants, and the instinct of tyranny appears to be implanted in both man and beast. Only educational culture and a true development of the graces and virtues will repress and suppress it. Only the thought that all men should be born free and equal, that all are natural inheritors of equal rights and privileges, will giv that truly broad and refined charity which Christianity has ever failed to bestow upon her votaries and the nations under her rule.—Elmina D. Slenker.

AUTHORITY IN RELIGION.—Jesus, it is said, in giving the Sermon on the Mount, taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes. What was his authority, then? Not official authority, for he was not yet known to be the Christ—hardly yet known to be a prophet. Not merely the authority coming from an imposing manner; not an authoritativ air or tone or manner, certainly. That was precisely the tone and manner which the scribes did hav in their teaching. But the authority is in the sermon itself. The truths are so wonderfully distributed and self-evident that they carry conviction with them. Jesus sees so plainly all that he says. There is no hesitation, no obscurity, no perhapses in his language. He is like one describing what is before his eyes, what he knows to be true, because he sees it while he is saying it. It is, in short, the authority which always attends knowledge. He who knows any thing, and can speak with certainty, carries conviction with him, though we do not suppose him to be infallible, nor is it thought necessary to believe him so in order to giv him this authority.—J. F. Clarke.

HUMAN NATURE.

Within a dell
Where cowslips dwell
A love-lorn frog
Sat on a log.

With sighing croak
His love he spoke
For Polly Wogg,
A lady frog.

She swore that she Would faithful be—
And never wed
Aught else, she said.

And as she spoke
A fatal stroke
Kerflopped her frog
From off his log!

With piercing shriek
The maiden meek
Leaped from her log
Into the bog.

His murd'rer bore
To distant shore
Her lover dead
With riven head.

And skinning him
He served each limb
All broiled on toast
To hungry host.

But in that bog
Upon a log
Another frog
Loved Polly Wogg.

And such is life—
Come death, come strife,
Our Polly Wogg
Loves t'other frog.

Notes and Clippings.

Most people are like eggs—too full of themselves to hold anything else.

The Detroit Free Press says that one explosion of a powder mill is as good as a dozen.

Victor Hugo defines Paradise, "Where the parents shall be always young, and the children always little."

It would improve some people very much if they were as careful of their daily life as they are of their orthodoxy.

No two things differ more than hurry and dispatch; hurry is the mark of a weak mind, dispatch of a strong one.

It is not in the bright days, but only in the solemn night, that other worlds are to be seen shining in the long, long distances.

"Goodness!" said a Parisian, when the bill for the expenses of his wife's funeral—a little bill of six thousand francs—was handed to him; "I had almost rather she had not died!"

A couple of New York city reporters spent the night in a cell with a man who was doomed to be hanged in Connecticut recently, and in the morning the prisoner was perfectly willing to die.

An ordinary woman's waist is thirty inches around. An ordinary man's arm is about thirty inches long. How admirable are thy works, O Providence! The design argument is thus beautifully illustrated.

The Rev. Dr. Tyng, Jr., ought to be at the head of a female seminary. The deep interest he takes in the ladies of his congregation qualifies him for such a position. There are many clergymen in the country equally as well qualified.

Cyclones, freshets, and torrents of rain are again ravaging the West, while on Monday snow fell at Minneapolis. The summer has thus far been one of alternate droughts and floods, while midsummer heats in May hav in some places been followed by June snows.

The following curious directions to worshipers in the church of St. Michael and All Angels, at Chiswick in England, require some explanation: "During prayers all are requested to kneel. The kneelers should be hung on the hooks provided for the purpose by those who hav used them."

A recent traveler in South Africa has placed in the hands of Dr. Cameron, M.P., a whip more formidable than the "cat" of the British navy, with which he says that the missionaries near Lake Nyanza are in the habit of flogging refractory converts. Perhaps they are trying to whip the love of Jesus into them.

The Christian Intelligencer boldly accuses the Rev. Henry Morgan, of Boston, of issuing a book which is so immoral that it ought not to be carried in the mails. It purports to be an exhibit of the iniquities of Boston and of the Roman Catholic confessional. The paper says of the work: "It is one of the most unclean and corrupting publications we hav ever seen."

It sends a chill of horror through the veins to read of the murder of an infant by its mother in France, on Sunday. Taking the infant babe by its legs, she in cold blood dashed out its brains against the floor. Then with the assistance of her mother she calmly buried it. Having concluded this solemn social duty, these two pious gentlewomen went to church and performed their usual devotions.

There are persons who call it a dispensation of Providence when a Sunday excursion train is thrown off the track, or a Sunday excursion steamboat blows up, and excursionists are killed. What do they call it when a church blows down on Sunday, fatally wounding the pastor and injuring twenty persons? This is what happened to the Rev. Mr. Stroul and his church at Mt. Cary, Hancock county, Ohio, on Sunday.

Calls for clergymen are frequently heard from the frontier, but not often for the kind described in the following passage from the Aurora (Nev.) Herald: "We are sorely in need of a pastor, but we don't want any cheap trash. We want a good, muscular Christian, who can snatch sinners by the scruff of the neck and drag them howling up the plane of righteousness, and who will not drink more than he can hold. Such a man will get a right smart layout here."

Presbyterian feeling in Glasgow has been excruciatingly outraged by a resolution of the shareholders of the Tramway Company to run cars on Sunday. Dr. Jeffrey, a prominent light of the unco' gude, in the city where the returns of drunkenness and bastardy are about the highest in the world, told his congregation lately that he hoped none of them would be found in those impious vehicles on a Sunday, and if possible never on a week day, and pledged himself to abstain from them always if possible.

In the Court of Appeal, before Lord Justices Brett, Cotton, and Thesiger, the further arguments in the case of the Chamberlains vs. Barnwell, which was an action for libel brought by the Rev. William Henry Chamberlaine, vicar of Keevil, in Wiltshire, against the Rev. E. L. Barnwell, resident in the same county, who had charged the plaintiff with acts of gross immorality toward the youth of both sexes in his parish, were resumed. The arguments having concluded, their Lordships reserved judgment. —English paper.

Another bank defrauded and another church in mourning. This time it is S. M. Waite, President of the First National Bank of Brattleboro, Vt. He has committed forgeries to the amount of $250,000, and ruin will be brought upon many of the stockholders. It is very fortunate for such Atheistic villains as Ingersoll and his admirers that these crimes were not committed by a Freethinker. Such an unusual event would hav made food for the religious press and pulpit for a year, and the direct connection between forgery and Infidelity would hav been pointed out with great gusto and minute particularity.—Truth.

While the alleged Boy Preacher—he is said to be over thirty years of age—has his hand in at Talmage's Tabernacle, why should he not bring his revival campaign to a close in a blaze of glory by converting Talmage himself? According to some of his ministerial brethren in Brooklyn, who ought to know, Talmage is an untruthful man, or, in still plainer English, a man who tells lies. But the Bible affirms that all liars shall hav their portion in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. If, then, Talmage is the sort of man his ministerial brethren make him out, he stands in as great need of conversion as any other Brooklyn sinner. We commend Talmage's case to the consideration of the Boy Preacher.

Tears, chemically considered, are a weak solution of chloride of sodium and phosphate of lime, the overflow of the lachrymal glands, caused by the contraction of certain muscles. A writer who has analyzed them "as a weapon" says: "The best method is to hold the head erect, look the cruel tyrant in the face, and let the tears flow down while the lips feign a smile. If the head be bent forward the tears will be likely to run down the nose and drop off at the end, and that spoils the whole thing, for the eyes get red, and the nose sympathizes with the general moisture, and gets a sort of raw look at the end. To use tears with effect requires, in fact, judgment. The effectiveness is gone as soon as any 'mopping' begins. A light hysterical sniffle may be permitted, if artistically executed, with a gasping sob, but no polishing off of eye or nose is admissible."

Anthony Comstock, Secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, wrote a sharp letter to Captain Tynan, of the Fourth Precinct, in reference to a gambling saloon said to exist in Gold street. Detective Carr, of the precinct, investigated the matter, and discovered that the complainant in the case was a habitual player of policy, who carried on a neat little system of blackmailing by complaining every time he lost money against the house, and claiming more than he lost. In the present instance, John Henry Smith, would not submit to the extortion, and the appeal for the assistance of Comstock's Society was made. Justice Smith discharged the prisoner and reprimanded the complainant, saying, "Go home, and do not show your face here again. I would not convict a dog on your testimony."—Herald.

Although cases of burying alive are very rare, they nevertheless happen now and again, and it is fortunate that there is a good test for the total absence of vitality in a corpse. Electricity, which is now being applied to so many useful purposes, also enables us to distinguish between life and death, because for two or three hours after the stoppage of the heart the whole of the muscles of the body hav completely lost their sensibility; that is to say, when stimulated by electricity, they no longer contract. If, then, an electric shock be applied to the muscles of the limbs and trunk, say five or six hours after the supposed decease, and no contractil response ensues, it may be certified that death has occurred; for, says the Medical Press and Circular, "no faint, nor trace, nor coma, however deep, can prevent the manifestation of electrical muscular excitability." This is no new fact, but it has recently been brought forward again.

The methods of finding the distances of the stars of stellar parallax is one of the interesting problems of modern astronomy. In the days of old the stars were supposed to hold the same position in regard to each other from age to age, and were therefore called fixed stars, to distinguish them from planets. Nothing can be further from the truth. The telescope shows that the stars are in constant motion, but that the rate of motion is so slow that thousands of years must elapse before the eye can perceive any change. Some stars are coming toward us and some are receding from us. The sun which is only a star, is moving, with all the planets in his train. Our earth, which is but an atom among atoms, is whirling, no one knows whither, through illimitable space. Even the serene heavens above us is this same space pervaded by an infinitely subtle ether, whose particles are seething and surging like the waves of the stormy sea. The motion of the stars once established, it must follow that some of them are nearer to us than others, and very persistent and painstaking hav been the efforts to find out which of the shining suns of space are our nearest neighbors. Success has, however, crowned patient labor. Among the 50,000,000 stars that glimmer in the firmament there are about a dozen stars visible in our latitude that hav a parallax ranging from a tenth to a half a second. It would be natural to suppose that the brightest stars are the nearest, but this is far from being the case. The nearest star in the northern heavens is a double star of the fifth magnitude in the Swan, known as 61 Cygni. The brilliant Sirius is nearly twice as far away. The nearest star in the whole heavens is Alpha Centauri, a bright star near the south pole. This has a parallax of nine-tenths of a second, and is twice as near as any other star. Its distance is computed as more than 200,000 times our distance from the sun, or nearly 20,000,000 of millions of miles. If such be the inconceivable distance separating us from the nearest star, what idea can the finite mind form of the immensity of space intervening between us and the more remote? Vigorous work is now being done in stellar parallax by what is called Bessell's method. A star with proper motion, or one that has been found to approach or recede from the sun, is selected, and its position is compared night after night, by means of the micrometer, with other small stars in the vicinity having one proper motion, and therefore presumed to be further away. The star with proper motion will change its position in regard to the more remote ones when observed from different parts of the earth's orbit. Some interesting and intricate work of this kind has been successfully completed at Mr. Seagrave's private observatory by Mr. Waldo and Mr. Seagrave. The problem was to determin the parallax of a star called Theta Cassiopeta. This, by measuring its position and distance from two small stars in the vicinity, was found to be less than one-tenth of a second. These enthusiastic astronomers worked upon the problem from the first of Septemb r, 1879, to the first of November, 1879. During that time they made measurements of each star on 120 nights. A trained eye, keen perception, and mathematical precision, as well as patience and persistence, were involved in the solution of this delicate and intricate problem. These are the means by which astronomy has won its most brilliant triumphs and those who would become practical astronomers must giv their nights to observation and their days to study.

Theology Irreconcilable With Justice.

A LECTURE DELIVERED BY ISAAC PADEN IN THE CITY HALL AT WOODHULL, ILL., APRIL 11, 1880.

SUBJECT, "Can the theological views of the fall of man through Adam be reconciled with justice, and leave God possessed of all the attributes of a kind, loving, and honorable father (parent)?"

My Respected Friends: I trust you hav come here to hear what I shall say upon one of the most interesting questions now agitating the religious world. As the question stands, I shall take the negativ side, and giv you my reasons why it can not be done. First, I will say that I hav given this problem to quite a number of theologians within the last twenty-five years, such as Rev. Thomas of Chicago, Rev. Edward Beecher, when living in Galesburg, and his brother, H. W. Beecher, and many others of talent and education. Rev. Mr. Haney, pastor of the M. E. church of this place, took the question under consideration, with the following leading questions:

First. What was man's condition in a moral and refined sense before the fall, and in what sense was man in the likeness of God? Did he hav a knowledge of what was right and wrong, and the sense of shame and modesty, or was this the result of partaking of the forbidden fruit? If so, how can such a change be considered a fall?

Second. Did God know when he put Adam and Eve into the garden that there was a devil running loose, seeking whom he might devour? If so, can a man be found so despicable as to place his children where they would be exposed to death, and withhold protection from them?

Third. Is not the knowledge of good and evil the basis of man's reasoning powers above the animal? If so, is it a blessing to man, or a curse? If a blessing, is it a gift from God, or the result of disobeying his command under the advice of the devil? If a curse, wherein would man be better off without this knowledge?

Fourth. Do not courts of justice refuse to recognize crime in an act committed by a person who is not capable of judging between good and evil? If so, is man more merciful and considerate than a theological God?

Fifth. What was the nature of the death Adam and Eve died? If a moral death, how could they loose a moral life before they had one by conforming to the rules of right between man and man?

Sixth. If the sacrifice of Christ's body was to repair the breach made by Adam's fall, was this plan of redemption ordained, and a fixed fact before man fell, or forced upon God as an after necessity? If before, how could Adam hav done otherwise and not derange God's plan and design?

Seventh. If the Jews had obeyed God's command, "Thou shalt not kill," how could God's council and foreknowledge hav been carried out? Does not theology make wilful murder indispensable for man's salvation? See Acts ii, 23.

Rev. Mr. Haney failing to open the merits of the case by not reading or quoting the questions, and the leading questions under these circumstances, I hav been prevailed upon to ventilate this perplexing problem, and shall do so to the best of my ability. The question is now fairly before you.

As I am a fearless Freethinker, I will giv you my creed. I acknowledge no infallible authority on earth, but hold that all past acts and sayings claimed to hav been done and said by the gods of nations are subjects and matters for our consideration, under a right to bring all things, past and present, before the throne of reason for investigation; and I know no better criterion or standard of right than to test all things, and hold fast to that which has a tendency to elevate man, and discard that which has a tendency to degrade either God or man in their scale of existence, and I grant this same right to all others.

First. What are the views or claims of theology on the fall of man? It is claimed a man by the name of Adam and a woman by the name of Eve were the first two human beings that ever lived upon the face of the earth, and that they started out upon the path of life direct from God's hands, full size, morally perfect, and happy in the image and likeness of their maker, God.

Second. It is claimed Adam and Eve fell from the high state of moral perfection to that of total depravity, and all mankind fell with them, and that man in his natural state is corrupt from the crown of the head to the soles of his feet—shaped in iniquity, and in sin conceived.

Third. It is claimed that this "fall" of man was brought about by Adam and Eve eating the fruit of a tree called the knowledge of good and evil, which their God had forbidden them to do—"For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Fourth. It is claimed that this tree and the tree of life stood in the midst of a garden in which God placed Adam and Eve to keep and dress. While thus engaged, a serpent, called the devil, entered the garden and told Mother Eve a pack of lies, and under the advice of the devil she ate of the forbidden fruit, and gave also to Adam, and he did eat, and by this act man fell; and lest they put forth their hands, and eat of the tree of life God put a guard about it to keep man from eating and living forever. Here, I will say, had God been a thoughtful and dutiful father, having a desire for the best interests of his children, he would hav put this guard around the tree of knowledge of good and evil and given them access to the tree of life; then man would never hav known enough to be damned or saved. Here, upon this neglect on the part of God as a father rests the fall of man and all the results arising therefrom.

Fifth. It is claimed that in order that mankind might be redeemed and made fit subjects for heaven, it was indispensably necessary for God to clothe himself with a body of flesh by a connection with a female virgin, and be put to death as a sacrifice for sin; and theology makes a belief in this essential to salvation, conferring endless damnation upon all unbelievers.

The first thing under consideration is the word "God." What does it represent? "God" is the title name of all objects of worship, persons or things, real or imaginary, physical or spiritual, dead or alive. Before the days of Abraham gods were held to be many, and their home was supposed to be just above the sky. They frequently associated with both men and women, intermarrying with the daughters of men—giants and men of renown being the result.

To make access more easy to the home of these ancient gods, and to take vengeance on them if they wished, the people under King Nimrod undertook to build a tower to the sky. To this the gods objected, and in council said, Let us go down and stop this thing, for there is no restraining the people, when they are one, from doing as they imagin to do. All this and much more is found in pagan history, besides in the Bible (Gen. xi; also, Josephus).

Abraham was a son of Terah, a pagan prince, who kept three representativ god-images in a room of worship. Abraham, his son, contended with his father and protested against the idea of a plurality of gods. Abraham claimed one was Chief, or God, and all others were his servants or angels, and the quarrel with his father ended by Abraham destroying two of his father's images or representativs and leaving his father's house when about seventy years old and becoming the founder of the Jewish nation, the same as Luther left his mother church to become the founder of Protestantism. Abraham's God is now known as the Jewish God. Theologians claim that he made the man Adam and the woman Eve in his own likeness and image and put them in the Garden of Eden, and a serpent—who, they claim, was once an angel in heaven, but rebelled against God and thereby became a devil, and was cast out of heaven—entered the Garden and told Mother Eve a pack of lies. The question is now ready for discussion.

First. What were the lies this serpent told Eve? Theologians say he told her that if she ate of the forbidden fruit she should not die, as God had said. Here theologians are driven to their wits' end to show what kind of a death they died while in the garden, as Adam lived some nine hundred years after and died a natural death. Paul claimed it was a physical death, and that Adam brought death into the world. From this some claim that Adam's sin is the cause of all death, animal and vegetable. Others claim it was a separation from God's presence. Scarcely two agree. Adam and Eve being dead is no proof that the serpent lied, because eating the fruit should hav produced death the same day they eat thereof, in accordance with God's threat. As this is not the case, there is no evidence that the devil lied, while there is conclusiv evidence in the facts named that he did not lie. The result was just what the serpent said it would be. Their eyes were opened and they came to know good and evil. Under this realizing sense they saw their low condition and commenced to elevate themselves above the animals by covering their naked forms. Nothing like death is the result. As for Adam dying a moral death, he could not until a moral life was formed by conforming to the rules of right between man and man. As for a separation from the presence of the God of the universe, this would be impossible, although with the theological God it may be otherwise, as we read that Adam and Eve hid themselves from his sight behind some trees in the garden.

That the serpent who invaded the garden was the same angel who was made a devil out of for rebelling against God and then cast out upon the earth as a roaring lion, I deny, and propose to prove an alibi by showing that this angel had not at that time received his office as devil, and did not for a long time after, therefore, the serpent in the garden was not the devil that was made out of an angel. Theology tells us that when Adam and Eve were put into the garden they were the first and only people on earth. When this angel rebelled and became a devil the earth must hav been inhabited, for this record says that when this devil was cast out, it was said: "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and sea, for the devil is come down unto you."

Second. As for the origin of man, there are two theories—one creativ or theologic, the other, development or scientific. Theology claims that God created man out of the dust, full size, like himself, and perfect. Science claims that man had his origin in a lower grade of animal life. Progression from a low grade of animal life is similar to the cultivation of our choice apples from the wild crab. Evolution teaches us why some human beings are so much more animal and brutish than others in these generations and nations—they lack cultivation. Yet man has become a noble being. H. W. Beecher says, "Man as a fallen being should be ashamed of himself, but as a progressiv being he has something to be proud of." This is very true.

Third. Theology claims that the relation between God and man is that of father and child, parent and offspring. Under this relation, the law of justice demands of all parents and fathers that they protect these children and offspring. This law is imperativ upon all parents, and is found in animals as well as man. Should a serpent make its appearance to a hen on a dungheap (if she is not a theological hen), she would not remain quiet and see a serpent swallow her chickens as the theological God did when a serpent, the devil, entered the Garden of Eden and encountered Adam and Eve. The cow in the pasture, should she imagin her calf in danger, is immediately at its side to protect it. Did the theological God show the same parental care? He did not if theology be true. See the wild bear of the forest; disturb her cubs and theology can't save you. If theology be true, God is lower in the scale of fatherhood than man or animal. Should any think I am speaking irreverently of the God of the universe they make a mistake. It is the theological views of an imaginary God I find fault with, and wish it so understood. The theological view of God is far below that of the heathen; nowhere in pagan history hav I found such a low, degrading representation of the character of their gods as I find in Jewish history—where God's disposition is represented as being below the lowest grade of ravenous beasts—a savage tyrant under the passion of anger. I will giv you a few Bible quotations: "He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places" (Lam. iii, 10). "I will pour out my wrath upon them like water" (Hos. v, 10). "I will be unto them as a lion; as a leopard by the way will I observe them [his chosen people]; I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps; and will rend the caul of their heart and them will I devour like a lion" (Hos. xiii, 7, 8). These and many more equally degrading pictures of God are found in the Jewish history. I ask, are such representations true or are they imaginary? I, for charity's sake, pronouce them imaginary. Yet the writers of the Bible, in their low state of development, may hav been honest in their ideas of their imaginary God. But in this day, a god or man who would place his children where he knew they were in danger of death and not protect them, destroys every particle of our reverence for him. Some may claim in the cases quoted that God was justified on account of the wickedness of the people. But where was the wickedness of Adam and Eve to justify their exposure without protection against a ravenous devil (if theology be true), before whom they fell an easy prey, as two innocent lambs in a sheepfold would fall into the jaws of a ravenous wolf in the absence of a careless shepherd? Come down to the logic of theology as to man's fall and it can be comprehended in a few words: God set a trap (baited with a sweet apple), the devil sprung it, and man was caught. Absurd and ridiculous as this appears, it yet covers the whole theological ground.

Fourth. As to endless damnation, which theologians claim was brought upon the human race by Adam's fall, it is not found in the sentence passed upon Adam, further than that he was informed his origin was dust and that he should return to dust, not to endless damnation. No such idea was taught by Moses, nor was it thought of for thousands of years, and I pronounce it unjust upon principle. The offense claimed is too small. It would be the same as to hang a man for killing a mosquito.

Some theologians claim Adam not only entailed death upon man, but upon all vegetable and animal life. Such an idea is not worthy of a remark, yet I hav heard it preached. I will now say to this audience, change is a law of nature. Life never dies, and matter never grows less; therefore they are eternal. All physical forms are subject to the law of change, called death. Even the earth and the seasons change, producing, as we call it, life and death in the vegetable kingdom. Each form has its mission. The mission of a cornstalk is to produce an ear. The life in the stalk does not die, but passes into the ear, the corn is gathered, and the stalk, withered and dead, goes back into the earth from whence it came. The same with human stalks, or bodies, whose mission is to produce or individualize spirit. At the dissolution of the body, called death, the life passes into the individualized spirit.

form, and is gathered—enters a spiritual mansion suited to each one's condition, subject to progression—and the body of clay returns to the bosom of its Mother Earth.

Fifth. What kind of fruit did Adam eat? Some say it was an apple, that Eve ate the apple and gave Adam the core, which stuck in his throat at the head of his windpipe, and can be felt in every man's throat. This is not theology, but no less foolish. If this fruit was eatable, it must hav been choice, and God did not intend his children should taste or otherwise be benefited from a knowledge of good and evil.

Is this the treatment of a kind and honorable father? I answer, No. Suppose a father points out to his children a tree in his orchard and says, You may eat of all the trees but that one; it is sweet. If you eat of that tree I will punish you with death. None but a savage would make such a threat, and none but a demon of the lowest grade would execute such a threat for the first offense. Some claim his honor was at stake. No honorable father will make such conditions for himself. The fall of man, as claimed, is a slander on God.

Here let me correct a prevailing error. I hav heard theologians say there was not a scientist on earth but had lit his taper by the light of the Christian church. Others say that in the absence of Christianity the world would be destitute of moral goodness and civilization. I will say, without fear of refutation, there is not a precept leading to moral goodness and civilization taught in Christianity but what was taught and practiced by pagans hundreds and thousands of years before Christianity was known, and the same with all the rites and ceremonies in the church. Yet she may hav made some good selections, but giv credit where it is due.

As for a tree and its fruit, giv me the name of a tree and I will giv you the name of its fruit. The original writer may hav intended, by the garden scene, to hav illustrated a grand and noble principle; but theologians hav thrown their mantle of mystery over it, and what truth there is in it is hard to find.

It is a well-known fact that parables, fables, and symbolic illustrations were the ancient style of speech, and historical figures and images were used. A lion was power and strength; a dragon, war, power, and strife; a lamb or dove was mildness and innocence; a serpent was subtlety and wisdom, as can be seen from what Christ said to his disciples—"Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves"—a beautiful illustration. He being a medium, his controlling spirit assumed the form of a dove and lit upon him and was his guardian through life, an emblem of his disposition and life. A tree represented a principle from which it took its name; and as there is a possibility of the garden scene being true in a symbolical sense, I will defend it as such.

First, I will say that we already hav some half dozen translations correcting errors, and one now in progress, which proves positivly that the Bible as it is worded is not reliable as history. See the book of Job, which represents God and Satan as two gamblers in a game of guessing at the expense of an honest man, playing tricks on him to see how much he could stand. This book had its origin in pagan fables, such as Æsop's, only on religious subjects. As a real fact it is ridiculous; and so is the garden scene. Both accounts hav their origin in pagan fables. Job was a pagan prince. Therefore the character or figure which the transcribers or translators supposed represented a garden was the earth, as can be seen by the four rivers, symbolizing the four quarters of the earth, which was then understood to be flat, and also from the fact that no trace of this garden, or of such trees in history as are said to hav grown in it, can be found. The figure of a man and woman represented the human race, and they were named Adam and Eve as individuals. The tree of knowledge of good and evil was named after the two great elevating principles. The tree of life was the great animating principle throughout the universe, the same as the tree of liberty is emblematic of our national rights.

The flaming sword, turning every way to guard the tree of life, shows the impossibility of living forever physically. The serpent was wisdom, man's greatest teacher. As for wisdom crawling upon the ground and eating dust, has not that been the treatment she has received at the hands of man under the claim of the priesthood? Rev. Edward Beecher, while living in Galesburg, Ill., said in my presence that he had tried to make the reconciliation, but could not; and he did not believe Adam fell any more than he did. "If he fell, he fell up, and mankind has been falling up ever since Adam's day. The idea of man's fall, as claimed," he said, "compromises the character of God, and cannot be true." I asked why he did not preach his honest belief. His answer was prompt and to the point—"We preachers hav to feed the people with that which they can digest; if not, they will throw it up." A truer statement was never made by a preacher.

I now close my argument so far as concerns the fall of man, leaving the theological view of man's redemption untouched, claiming that I hav made out my case, and that my position is tenable and accords with one-half of the preachers' honest convictions.

As for the knowledge of good and evil causing man to fall in any sense, it is false. This knowledge is the root and foundation of man's reasoning powers, the basis of moral goodness, of civilization, education, virtue, modesty, and refinement; and to claim that God, in the capacity of a father, did, in any age of man's existence, directly or indirectly, forbid man to exercise, or in any way to become possessed of, a knowledge of good and evil whereby he is enabled to discern between right and wrong, is a slander and insult upon humanity and common sense, and destroys all that makes a father honorable, loving, and kind.

As for the theological claims that the crucifixion of Christ's body on the cross was to repair the breach made by Adam's fall, that is a matter to be hereafter considered, but is no less false in the manner in which it is held.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 1.

"If each woman would claim and hold complete ownership of her own body, preserving herself pure from every merely sensual thought or approach, permitting herself to incur the risk of motherhood only when all the conditions are favorable for a wise parentage and a pure offspring, there would soon be scarcely a crime left on the calendar, and the serpent Sensuality, with 'bruised head,' would flee from the Eden of the human race."

If we cannot at once do all these things, we can begin to try and do what we can. We can begin to think purer thoughts and liv purer lives. We can lop off a branch here and another there of the tree of lust, and we can dig around it and cut off a portion of the roots, thus, little by little, destroying the whole, root, trunk, branch, and limb. We can strive to keep our minds busy with good and pleasant thoughts, and our hands at work achieving good and great deeds. We must strive to rise each day a little higher, to make our loves more pure and unselfish. We must study the laws of health, and learn the fact that of all forms of intemperance the world has ever known that of sexual intemperance is the worst, the widest spread, and most terrible and fatal in its results.

It is a well-known fact that our worst habits are the very ones that we hedge about most carefully with veils of secrecy and walls of darkness. Every attempt to investigate or to throw light upon the evil is met by determined and obstinate opposition. "My body is my own, and it is no one's business what I do with it," cries one. "Its my own lookout if I injure myself," says another. "I guess I know what is best for me," says a third; and all these firmly believe in individual personal rights, and think they are justified by nature's demands and claims in their intemperance. Very few realize how little we know of Nature and her laws. Adaptivness is one of the most common attributes of all living organisms. A sudden change in climate, food, or other important particular that would be sure death to plant, animal, or man, may be brought about slowly and gradually, and so become seemingly natural to it and of no apparent injury. Now we of the human race hav adapted ourselves to so many different conditions in life that we find it almost impossible to go back to nature's truest and best laws. And it is only after long ages of wrong and intemperate living that we begin to realize we hav stepped aside from the right track. There has been a dimly recognized idea prevailing for a long time that sexual excesses were eating out the vital forces of humanity. All along through the ages now and then one has seen this dreadful evil in all its naked deformity; and from these few occasionally steps forth a brave, fearless spirit, and boldly proclaims his knowledge to the world. A "Cupid's Yokes," or some other startling essay, bursts into being and stirs up the moral cesspool to its very dregs. What is the result? Do the people bless their savior and heed his warnings and teachings! No! "Crucify him!" "Crucify him!" is the cry. "He is teaching immorality, obscenity, and Free-love. He will ruin the pure and innocent minds of the young and pollute the souls of the elders." So the man is tried, convicted, and punished for telling unwelcome truths, and the world complacently folds its hands, draws closer the veil between the light of knowledge and temperance and the darkness of ignorance and intemperance, and by continued indulgence increases desire in the present generation and fastens it on the next as a fatal gift of inheritance. Look around you, my friends, and see the consequences of the ignorance, lust, and gratified passions of mankind. Weak, feeble, and delicate mothers, suffering from all kinds of "female diseases," some the result of lives they themselvs hav led, and some inherited from lustful parents, grandparents, and great-grandparents. Can you find just barely one strong, sound, well woman? I hav carefully watched, for ten long years, for barely one, and hav not yet found her. True, dress and other wrong conditions hav done something toward producing this sad state of female debility among our wives, mothers, and sisters, but these are but as a drop in the bucket when compared with that greater sin against nature—sexual intemperance. The reproductiv organs are the most important, most carefully delicate and sensitivly organized, of any portion of the body, for nature always seeks most diligently and earnestly for the best and surest means of perpetuating the species.

Everything in plant, animal, and man has to bend to this one object; and hence it is that so much depends upon a true knowledge and right usage of these most important portions of the human system. Nature will adapt herself to great and long-continued abuses, but she always has her revenge, if so we may call it. She inflicts her penalties on every transgressor of her laws each time they are violated. Intemperance, sexually as well as in liquor-drinking, creates an imperativ demand for more and still more indulgence, till it becomes so strong in many people as to be beyond personal control, and is really a disease, and should be so treated by society, and the victim should be restrained by force or imprisonment until cured or relieved.

Personal freedom is one of the most precious and priceless of all the privileges and blessings of man; but this birthright of the race is sacrificed when an individual trespasses upon the rights of others. And this is done whenever by personal, selfish gratification a man or woman wrongs a child out of its inheritance of a sound mind in a healthy body. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. Parents who violate the sexual laws by a too frequent indulgence of passionate impulses cannot create pure, strong, and healthy children. All pleasures that are innocent in their effects, and make us better and happier, are good and legitimate; but no matter how strongly we crave or long for the gratification of any feeling or passion, if we know the result will be future suffering, evil, or wrong, we should restrain ourselves and practice a resolute self-denial. There is a joy in conquered passions that far exceeds all that which springs from gratified appetites when they lead to known evils.

"Let us, then, in reverence bowing,
Honor most of all mankind
Such as keep their great thoughts plowing
Deepest in the field of mind."

A Plea for Free Debate.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: There has been an interesting discussion going on through THE TRUTH SEEKER upon Spiritualism and Materialism. Some Liberals, I perceive, deplore such a war of ideas. Why should they? How can any one who professes to believe in free discussion object to controversy about Spiritualism? Some writers imagin that such debates will prevent Spiritualists and Materialists working together. Who should care for a union of effort on such terms? I believe the Roman Catholic church sacrificed freedom of opinion, and its free expression, to unity. No, no; let us hav no suppression of free utterance, no matter how much benefit may be thought to accrue from the policy of silence. If there is a Spiritualist in this broad land who will be less my friend because I candidly and earnestly advocate Materialism and combat Spiritualism, then I will be obliged to get through life without his or her friendship, notwithstanding I set a high value on the good will of my fellow-beings. On the other hand, if there is a Materialist who cannot co-operate with a Spiritualist who is not a bigot and who is a Liberal, because the Spiritualist believes in a summer land, it seems to me that that Materialist needs to be reconstructed.

I am glad that there are Spiritualists and Materialists. Let the world understand, once for all, that, in their respectiv fields, thought is unfettered and speech is forever free as the air we breathe. No temporizings; no sacrifice of conviction for the sake of repose. Both systems are revolutionary; both seek the truth by different routes. If the Spiritualists hav a truth which the Materialists hav not, that fact alone is sufficient to warrant a conflict of thought between them; and, for my part, I rejoice that THE TRUTH SEEKER comprehends the situation and is true to its name. Why, look at it! The editor went to prison for a principle. Was he not advised to let "Cupid's Yokes" alone and attend to his legitimate business of editor and publisher? D. M. Bennett could hav avoided prison by avoiding an unpopular question. His devotion to the principle of free speech gave him the right, in his judgment, to sell a book. He scorned compromise. It was his business to sell that book. If it was a little matter, he was not to blame for that. The church was "little" enough to punish him for his truth, and thousands of us hate that church more than ever because it has dared to lay its hypocritical hands on our ark of liberty.

Can a truth seeker consistently refuse to consider any question, any problem, which is engaging the attention of millions? Not in enmity, but in friendliness, should all inquiries be conducted. It is in this spirit that I approach the discussion of modern Spiritualism. If it is in my power to put Spiritualists to the very testing that they claim to be eager for, they ought to thank me. For more than thirty years they hav been saying, "Prove us." I propose to do my best at it. As I believe the mass of them are sincere, they will not shrink from close investigation, but court it. We can employ ourselves in the examination without belittling each other.

One of the strangest reasons given for not discussing the questions of immortality and spirit communication is, "We find in this life sufficient to exercise our entire abilities, strength, and energy." I accept that. I, too, hold that "one world at a time should be our motto and our rule of action." It is because I hold these statements to be true that I am willing and anxious to debate the question of future life and all it implies. Let Spiritualists be satisfied, in any way, that there is no positiv proof of a spiritual world, and they will doubtless join the Materialists in making this one pleasanter. The mind naturally clings to undisturbed ideas. Satisfy the mind of a Christian that his Bible is not the "word of God," and that his heaven, hell, devil, and God are myths, and he is prepared to accept this world for all it is worth. If you want old ideas to remain, let no whisper of doubt or debate be heard.

Is it not a trifle inconsistent for a writer to object to debate about another world and then to argue against the existence of such a world himself? He commits logical suicide.

Let there be no embargo on thought or speech!

Yours respectfully, W. F. JAMIESON.

What Next?

The pen of this perhaps all too ready writer has been taking a needed rest. For two years it had been busily engaged in defense; sometimes in attack, but only for the purpose of defense; sometimes in the enunciation and advocacy of principles, but mainly drawn out to strengthen the defense.

Now Mr. Bennett is out of prison; Heywood is pardoned; Dr. Foote has paid his fine; Abbot, the principal assailant, is hors du combat; Bundy has been shamed into silence; Comstock has been driven to his own nativ barnyard heap; no more victims present themselves for defense, and the Defense Association has adjourned to meet only on call when needed. What shall such a writer do? Is Othello's occupation really gone? Must so old a dog learn new tricks? Not by any means. The rebellion in the Liberal ranks being quelled all along the lines, and the rebels lying stiff and stark on the battle-field, volunteers for the union will take their honorable discharge, return to the ranks of the people, and resume their not yet forgotten trades. So I will mine.

War, either of defense or attack, especially attack, never was my best hold, my normal condition, nor in any way my attraction. Not of my own motion did I choose the soldier's trade. I was drafted. I seemed to be an apparent innocent forced in to defend principles where angels feared to tread; yes, really good, pure, beautiful, highly-cultured angels fairly trembled with fear lest they should soil their pretty wings defending the very principles they had advertised as newly imported, fresh right out of heaven. Well, at the conclusion of this fight, fool as I seemed to be for rushing in, I am still able to say—and to sing—I don't "want to be an angel and with the angels stand." It seems to me their white robes are rather more bedraggled than my breeches and brogans, and ever so much more than if they had sailed fearlessly in. Any how I would not accept an invitation to a wedding party in Paradise looking as they do—that is, if they hav wedding parties in Paradise, which I am told they don't, and I half suspect that is what makes it such a happy country to liv in. But if I had come out of a drawing-room wake, or a highly-cultured Kilkenny affair, smutted as they are for all the tucking up of their skirts, I should hav to be bathed, barbered, shampooed, and laundried all over, even if Lung Choo, child of the sun and descendant of Confucius, charged me $1 50 a dozen for the lavation. But all that is past. Leaving the old dirtflingers in their suds, what cause shall I espouse next?

When I was first recruited in the late war, I heard some complaint that "Leland is too severe," and it has been running in my head recently, now that the struggle, or one stage of it, is over, I ought to apologize for not putting on gloves when I boxed a sham Liberal over the head, or for not taking off boots when I kicked a retreating coward still farther to the rear. I don't know but this is due to THE TRUTH SEEKER readers, who hav been so kind to me, so patient with my vagaries, and so appreciativ of my well-meant efforts to get a hearing for first principles and secure the best good of the whole Liberal cause, especially my determination to uphold its living, working heroes, and drum its drones and incapables out of camp. Also, hearing so much of the blessings of peace and the shame of strife among Liberals, I felt still more struck under conviction, and saw, or thought I saw, the error of my ways. So penitent did I become that I began to formulate some nebulous shapings of a contrite statement, and the dim and dawning terms which some kind of an apology should take. Indeed, I just now took up my apologetic pen, and poised it in readiness to condense my mental cloudland into something solid, to receive impressions from the angels of peace, as it were, when a friend placed under my contemplativ vision the following clipping from the New York Telegram:

THE POLEMICS OF JOURNALISM.

The history of journalism is the history of war. Journalism is war. Its aims, its methods, its triumphs and rewards, are those of war. There may be newspapers that attain to a fair degree of success entirely owing to their excellence in the material and fundamental departments of journalism. There is one thing needful to the perfection of their success. They need something to fight, something to fight for. A cause, a clientage, a principle, a party even, in the lack of a worthier object of allegiance, is required to endow the form with the spirit of journalism, and to giv the crowning symmetry to the editor's vocation. All the great editors, the captains in journalism, whose exploits the Telegram has recorded, hav had this point in common—they were good fighters. The independent journalist is none the less a soldier because he drills with no party. He is the greater soldier. He commands a corps in the army of progress instead of a regimental division. There is danger in the present fashion of reaction from the occasional verbal intemperance of the rude and vigorous pioneer journalists. There is danger that the press may fall into less excusable euphemism and finicism. The pungency and flavor of latter-day editorial writing is diluted with something too much of "our esteemed contemporary."

I read that bit of journalistic wisdom, at once flung my goose quill out of the window, and resumed my old familiar pen of steel. As long as I am a journalist, I hav enlisted for war, and the whole war. "Journalism is war." Liberal journalism is pre-eminently militant, and must be in the nature of things and in spite of wishes for peace. That "polemic" is the portrait of Mr. Bennett exactly. "He is the greater soldier." He led the van, and thereby became prisoner of war. His paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, is a fighting journal; and if we are enjoying some degree of peace just now, it is because this journal, its editor, and his assistants and correspondents hav conquered that peace. If there are specks of war remaining, some Abbot and Bundy guerrillas still skulking in the Underbrush, they too will be smoked out, and all their paths shall be peace.

But, after them, what? Why, new causes for war will arise, new claims, new propositions, new principles to be discussed, new measures to be fought out; and the fighters who survive will be both those who hav "fit" and are fit. When there is not something to controvert, something to debate, something to form an arena of opinion to wrangle in, journalism will be stale, flat, and unprofitable, and the mission of THE TRUTH SEEKER will end. Very few readers in the good time coming, if it comes too good, will pay three dollars a year for a journal that has only the feeble, uneventful annals of peace, harmony, and accord to report; and that vista of the future which has not the prospect of so much as an intellectual shindy in it will be very uninviting. No use issuing a prospectus of such a calm.

There is the National Liberal League too—it is a fighting institution. Organization as well as journalism is war. The League was organized to contest something, to make good a claim, to fight its way with other organizations, till it shall conquer its rights against all other organizations which impose wrongs. The League comes to bring not peace but a sword, or, at all events, a sword first with which to conquer peace. I hope, now that so many of the common enemy are under our feet, to giv some attention to the League. I hav always been a student of organization and an advocate of the application of the forces of organization to the propagation of Liberalism. I hav always been aware of the immense results that can be accomplished by organization, and of the weakness and worthlessness of any class of reformers without it. Before the persecution began against Mr. Bennett, I was a warm Index man, and was charmed with Mr. Abbot and with the work and prospects of the League which he had established. So now, disbanded recruit as I am, unpensioned and on the half of no pay, I return to my first love, and hope I may be able to say many good words in favor of the League, its work, and its development into a first-class power. Mr. Abbot himself has lost faith in organization. The high-toned, cultured classes, he says, won't organize and won't let him run the organization if they do. He is immediately put into a minority of one, and so, in his view, organization is a bad thing. He concedes that it is only the uncultured classes, the roughs of Liberalism, fishermen and sailmakers, who can organize and succeed. Mr. Underwood takes the same view. He is dead against tag-rag and bobtail. He relies on the individual—no need of Leagues. Teach the individual, convert the individual, lecture to miscellaneous audiences of individuals, publish books and papers, and society will take care of itself. Well, given time enough, this is approximately true, but we need to save time in the propagation of correct principles as well as of new potatoes. Why go slow on the individual plan when we can do ten years' work in one on the organized plan? The difference between individual effort and organization is the difference between hand labor and machinery. We will let Mr. Underwood continue swinging his old scythe, while advanced Liberals organize Leagues and walk into the Christian ranks with a McCormick Reaper. The League has paid all its cost already. It justifies its being by its works, and it will make itself more and more felt from now on. It is sufficiently harmonious, too, at the present moment. There are no dissensions in its ranks since the casting out of its devils by Beelzebub.

Individual effort, then, is good in its place, and organization is good in its place. One is not to be taken, and the other left. One is the left hand, the other the right. Let them wash each other and work together for good. So journalism and organization are another pair of hands; both are mailed hands and adapted to war. Let them also cooperate and build up each other. Journalism is semi-organization with radical lines out in all directions from a center. The Liberal League is organization with cross lines all around the center. That makes the web complete, and all orthodox flies will eventually accept invitations to walk into the parlor of our organization.

Still I advertise for proposals—what shall I write about next? Who hath his quarrel just? And has it to let?

T. C. LELAND.

A Misstatement Corrected.

It was stated in THE TRUTH SEEKER—by Mr. H. L Green, we think—that Hon. A. B. Bradford had published his lecture before the Pittsburgh Liberal League, and that those wishing copies should write to him. This was a mistake. The lecture, which was such an admirable statement of the League's purposes that we reprinted it in these columns, was published by the Pittsburgh League, and those desirous of obtaining it should address Robert Peet, 13 Boyle street, Allegheny City, Pa., the Secretary of the League.

The Princeton Meeting.

Everybody is invited to attend the Second Annual Convention of the Union Reform League, at the Town Hall, Princeton, Mass., July 4, 5, and 6, 1880. This League is a union for mutual aid, defense, and growth of the various progressiv movements. Vital topics, such as government, land, labor, finance, usury, marriage, sexology, free speech, press, and mails, will be discussed from the most radical standpoint by such representativ men and women as Stephen Pearl Andrews, Henry Appleton, of New York; A. H. Wood, of Lunenburg; Ezra H. Heywood, of Princeton; Josephine R. Stone, David Wilder, J. W. Stillman, J. H. Swain, E. B. McKenzie, of Boston, and others. Board, $1.00 to $2.00 per day at hotels and boarding-houses. Executiv Com.: John Orvis, John M. Spear, Josephine R. Stone, E. H. Heywood, Henry Appleton, Joseph H. Swain. Officers, John Orvis, Pres.; S. A. Vibert, Sec.; Henry Stone, Treas. Address J. Flora Tilton, Princeton, Mass.

A Correction.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Ever since I sent those lying statements of T. L. Savage's for publication I hav felt guilty of spreading before the public a vile and false slander against two of the best and truest Liberals in the country, Mr. J. P. Mendum and Horace Seaver. I now wish to atone, as far as possible, for my indiscretion. I refer to Mr. Savage's inquiry, which I say was made on School street, in the presence of Charles Ellis, namely, "Why do you try to defend those men, Mendum and Seaver, if you are an honest man?" I then replied that I did not profess to be honest. He also said that "Underwood knows these men are crooked."

I hav once before defended Mr. Mendum against these false charges, through your paper.

Mr. Bennett, you know that I hav always defended Mr. Mendum honestly, all through the Paine Hall troubles, from the time of the Altman trouble. I hav always seen that there was nothing wrong but misunderstanding between the trustees. I now repeat again that I hav never yet seen the first crooked thing against Mr. J. P. Mendum or Horace Seaver, and I hav no doubt but that the court will soon so decide.

I regard Messrs. Savage and Ellis's charges against Mr. Mendum as not only false, but childish and foolish, with not a leg to stand upon. Yours respectfully,

Cambridge, Mass, June 19, 1880. J. S. VERITY.

Abbot's Last Kick.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The following is a copy of a letter I just mailed to the Index for publication, but, judging from past experience, I do not expect it will be published in that journal. Please giv it a place in your paper:

SALAMANCA, N. Y., June 19, 1880.

F. E. Abbot: I hav just read in the Index of June 17th your comments on the notice of the next Annual Freethinkers' Convention, and I am pained to see the disposition you exhibit in those comments. It is sad to see one whom I once so highly respected, and who for many years did good work in the Liberal cause, so demoralized that he appears to be endeavoring to undo all the good he ever did.

The notice you refer to originated with me, and if there is anything wrong about it, I am responsible for it. Since the organization of the Association, as the Corresponding Secretary, I hav been intrusted with procuring the speakers, and I hav always tried to obtain the very best in the country. I remember at one time cordially inviting F. E. Abbot.

Your insinuation that I am a Freelover is beneath my notice, and you would blush to make it if you were the man I once considered you to be.

As to the notice, I stated that the persons named "were expected to attend," and I still hope and expect they will. A majority of them hav already promised to be present. You claim I hav done injustice to Dr. Adler and Mr. Underwood. Let us see. On June, 18th inst., Mr. Underwood wrote to me: "If I remain East, and am not suffering badly from the malady that affects me every summer, I will attend and speak at the Convention. You may announce that I will probably be present, and if I find I cannot, I will so inform you by or before August."

I hav not heard as yet from Prof. Adler, but as he wrote me last year a kind and gentlemanly note declining to attend the Convention on account of some previous engagement, I hope we may be able to procure his attendance this year, for I know of no one in the Liberal ranks for whom I hav a higher respect than for Dr. Adler. He is doing what but few Liberals are, I regret to say, putting his Liberalism to practice, and I hav too exalted an opinion of this friend of humanity to believe that he would refuse to present the views that he entertained to any respectable audience of his fellow-citizens.

And the persons named are not the only eminent speakers that we expect to attend this Convention. We wish to get together a number of thousands of free men and women, and our desire is to procure the best thinkers in the various schools of Freethought to address the great meeting. If our Free Religious friends expect to become a power for good they must not fear to go out into the world and preach their new gospel to the people of the world. And we not only desire to obtain the attendance of Prof. Adler, but also that polite, learned, and gentlemanly preacher of New Bedford, William J. Potter, who is soon, I am pleased to learn, to take charge of the Index. He will be invited to be with us. And all will be done that can be done to make the Convention one of the best and most important to true Liberalism that has ever been held in this country. We wish Mr. Abbot was inclined to help us in place of trying to injure the movement.

I must say you are not easily pleased. If I had invited and named as speakers in my call or notice persons who were known as Freelovers, and who were not generally considered the best representativs of Freethought, then you would certainly hav condemned me. And now that I am trying to engage the very best Liberal speakers to be had you also condemn me. But for one thing I must thank you—for publishing a notice of the Convention. And you can be assured that it will be a success.

Respectfully yours, H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y., June 19, 1880.

[The contemptible notice in the Index which Mr. Green refers to, and which no gentleman would be guilty of writing, reads as follows, after quoting the advertisement and mentioning the names of speakers expected: "The managers of this Convention are the same disreputable clique of Freelovers and repealers who successfully carried out their conspiracy to capture the National Liberal League at Syracuse, but they hav the shrewdness to keep themselves in the background, and to use the names of others before the public, without authority, we are persuaded, in at least the case of Dr. Adler and Mr. Underwood. If so, these gentlemen will repudiate this impudent and unauthorized use of their names for purposes with which they cannot sympathize." This is a tissue of falsehood from beginning to end. The man who wrote it is an infamous liar and slanderer. Whether Freelove is good or bad, there is not a man who pretends to advocate it who has anything whatever to do with getting up the Hornellsville meeting. There is nobody keeping "in the background." Abbot has been so chagrined and maddened at his righteous defeat at Syracuse that he has lied and snarled enough since to sink a ship, provided lies and snarlings would do it. Let the Liberal public rejoice that his weekly lies (and weakly also) are nearly at an end.—ED. T. S ]

How About the Brussels Congress?

Many hav requested Mr. A. L. Rawson and the editor of this paper to go to Europe and help represent the Liberals of the United States in that International Congress. Many societies hav also duly sent in certificates of representation. It promises to be a meeting of some importance. We hav received within a few days a letter from Charles Bradlaugh, saying the secular societies of England would be represented in the Congress, and that he would himself be one of the delegates.

We are willing to go, we are willing to lose the time, but hav not the necessary funds. It takes money. We cannot walk over, nor swim it. A few friends hav shown their generosity, but the great body are indifferent. Not one tenth part enough of funds hav been sent in. Our Christian opponents are furnishing funds for sending hundreds of the poor, overworked, and underpaid clergy over to hav a good time; but the Liberals of the United States seem not disposed or not able to send over two delegates to the Freethinkers' Congress. Straws show.

We would not say a word about funds if we had them on hand and could safely spare them from our business; but we hav them not. It is the dull time of the year for selling books and renewing subscriptions, and every dollar received is needed to keep up the daily expenses of the paper.

We make this last appeal. If there are others who feel disposed to contribute a little toward the trip proposed, let them remit early such donations as they feel like making. If enough remittances do not come in to send two, one will go. If not enough to send one, the money will be returned to the donors, or used as they direct.

Shall we hear from our friends or shall the enterprise be abandoned? If one in ten of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will send one dollar, we can go; but if money for at least a considerable share of the expenses is not received, we will conclude to stay at home and say no more about going to Europe. Our friends are the ones to decide this question.

T. L. Savage for the Third and Last Time.

BOSTON, June 19, 1880.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER, June 19th, J. S. Verity says, "Either T. L. Savage or J. S. Verity is an infamous liar." I wish to say a few words in reply. In all courts where evidence conflicts, the party is to be believed who tells the most reasonable story. In regard to the meeting at my house, Mr. Ellis has been a member of my family the greater part of the time for the past four years. Mr. Underwood made us a friendly visit on September 20, 1879, and on the morning of the 21st attended, with Mr. Ellis and myself, the lectures at Parker's Memorial; saw Mr. Verity, and spoke with him. I hav never heard any person deny that fact. Now the point Mr. Verity wishes to make is that I said there was a meeting in which Mr. Underwood read and decided to publish those letters, which is not true. He (Verity) says he has tried to be honest, but fell short. Would it not be logical to say he had tried to be truthful, but could not. He reminds me of the man that would not lie for twelve and a half cents, but would tell eight for one dollar. A person acting in the capacity of a spy, in my opinion, would be in a state of mind capable of stating almost anything. If I was caught playing the jackal for the leaders of spurious Liberalism, I would not make any claim to truth or honesty. I do not wish to represent either Mr. Ellis or Underwood in any connection with the publication of those foolish letters, as I well know how capable they both are to speak for themselves. Mr. Underwood has already given his opinion, and no doubt Mr. Ellis would if called upon, and as for myself, I saw and read one of those letters a year before their publication, and considered it a very foolish affair, and dismissed it from my mind. In your remarks you seem more ready to giv credit to a man who has shown himself to be dishonest, and advise the better way to own up and be honest, in which I heartily agree; and the sooner you take a small dose of that medicine, and recommend your friend J. S. Verity to do likewise, the sooner true Liberalism will take the stand and giv you that support which morality and truth are entitled to. THEO. L. SAVAGE.

REPLY.

Mr. Savage makes but a poor attempt to invalidate Mr. Verity's word. It will be impossible for him to do it. There is scarcely a man who knows Mr. Verity that will try to accuse him of being capable of falsehood. The flings about his dishonesty are simply contemptible. There is not a more honest man in the country. The little joke about eight lies for a dollor is pointless. The fling also about being a "spy" is quite uncalled for. Mr. Verity did not play the part of a spy in any sense of the word. The letters under consideration had been published and were then a lagitimate topic of conversation. Mr. Verity, stepping into Mr. Savage's pawn-shop, very naturally mentioned them. Seeing Ellis's ear-marks in the blackguarding, lying, slanderous sandwiches between the letters, he asked if Ellis did not write them. Savage said, "Yes; he did." He also imparted the information that Underwood had met Ellis at his (Savage's) house, and looked over those letters, and decided to publish them, and further that at the time this conversation took place Ellis was in Chicago helping Bundy on the Journal [fixing up Bennett's letters for further publication, with more Ellisism interspersed, of course.] He was the R.-P. Journal's "special agent."

This information imparted by Savage is undoubtedly correct. In fact not one of the parties interested hav attempted to squarely deny it. The dodging, prevaricating, dust-throwing, etc., that hav been resorted to hav only confirmed the truth of Savage's original statement. He admitted before Underwood that the letters were in his house, and that the matter of their publication had been considered, and that Underwood went there and spent a part of two days and a night. Of course he had an object in going there. Ellis is not supposed to be so near a friend of Underwood's—like Abbot—that he should be hobnobbing with him without an object. There is but one reasonable conclusion that can be arrived at—those letters were the great attraction, and not Ellis or Savage; and the extraordinary interest the bosom quartet subsequently manifested in the letters confirms it. They expected to "crush" the writer, and wished to do it. Underwood's remark at about that time to a prominent Massachusetts Liberal that "Bennett must be crushed," tells in sonorous words what the purpose and hopes of the quartet were. Their subsequent conduct has only corroborated it.

But it is unnecessary to dwell longer upon this unpleasant subject. Everybody is tired of it. The facts are before the people, and they undoubtedly understand the whole business pretty correctly. Let the four coadjutors hav all the glory to which they are entitled, and "let us hav peace." Let not the subject be referred to again.—ED. T. S.

Brother Bell Busily Breaking the Bread.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been kept quite busy since I left home on the 17th day of April. I gave a lecture Sunday, April 18th, in New Haven, Conn., before the Ethical Society and the League, which, combined, gave me a good audience. The prominent and earnest workers here are Mr. F. E. Hermance and A. S. Welch. Next night I gave a lecture in Morrisania on "Hell, or the Modocs in Heaven," to a small but appreciativ audience. May 25th and 26th I gave three lectures in Oil City, Pa., to comparativly small audiences. A singular circumstance occurred there between myself and an old-time friend whom I had not seen for twenty-five years. The gentleman, D. W. McLane, who corresponded with me and secured me to lecture in Oil City, was an intimate friend of mine twenty-five years ago in a place not far from Oil City, and when I went to Oil City I had been in conversation with him a long time before I once thought of identifying him with the D. W. McLane of "ye ancient time." He did not hav an equal chance of recognizing me, as I was a boy of sixteen years of age when he last saw me. We enjoyed a hearty laugh at the manner in which our eyes were holden, and instead of calling it a miracle we mutually voted ourselves stupid. May 28th and 29th I was in South Cleveland, and to small audiences spoke twice under the auspices of the League. There is good prospect of a large field there, and it will not be long before the lecturer will hav a good hearing when he visits South Cleveland. I remember that it was while here that the iron gate swung outward for you. I spoke of it briefly in one of my lectures, and my remarks were greeted with hearty applause. Mr. C. M. Peterson and Mr. John Pyke are activ, outspoken and intelligent men, and talk pretty freely on free speech, free press, and free mails.

From South Cleveland I went to Findlay, O., and gave three lectures. I had a pretty good audience on Sunday, and smaller audiences on the succeeding evenings, but there are nevertheless some very stanch Liberals here. I may mention Messrs. Taylor and McKinnis, who took hold of the matter of getting lecturers. Mr. McKinnis deserves especial praise for his magnanimity in sustaining the course of lectures at the time and place when supported. All honor to William McKinnis! Here I assisted in forming a League.

From Findlay I went to Ottawa, and gave two lectures, but, like Jordan of old, it is a hard road to travel. The community has no interest in Freethought. The people seem to act upon the motto, "Every man for himself," and make laudable efforts in keeping their eye single upon the main chance. Dr. C. E. Beardsley, a man of keen observation and vigorous thought, and a very superior physician, shouldered the responsibility of my lectures. But orthodoxy smells the battle from afar, and will not turn out if the court clearly understands herself. Dr. Beardsley has had other lecturers visit this point.

From Ottowa I went to Ravenna, Ohio, and gave three lectures under the auspices of the Portage County Liberal Association. We had very good houses, and some interest was manifested. The gentlemen who are officers in this society expressed a desire to form a League, and assured me that they would, as soon as they could get the voice of the Association, organize a League, which I suppose they hav done before this. Mr. Heighton, R. A. Hasbrouck, and George Flath are men of the most Liberal and radical type. Mr. Heighton, president of the Association, and who, by the way, is a good musician, favored the audience one evening with a song, accompanied by the violin. But the pious of those present thought the song profane and blasphemous (emphasis heavy on e in blasphemous) because it was entitled, "The Devil Is Dead."

Mr. Hasbrouck, the secretary of this Liberal organization, is enthusiastic, and persistent, and young. Mr. Flath has a most excellent mind, and bids fair to make a man of distinction in whatever profession he may adopt.

My next lectures were at Angola, Ind., and when the Liberals there come forward and pay me what they owe me I may hav some good word to say for them.

Joliet, Ill., was the next point where I went to hold forth. Mr. George Lynn, a prominent Liberal of this place and an acceptable correspondent, I believe, of THE TRUTH SEEKER, invited me to come to Joliet and lecture. Mr. Lynn is pretty well known through THE TRUTH SEEKER, and his abilities speak for themselves. I found him a gentleman of polite manners, and outspoken in his Liberal views.

My next appointment was at Elgin, Ill. Here I had one of the finest public halls to speak in, and I am very happy to say large audiences were at all of my lectures. There are so many excellent men at this place that I can not name them. With my assistance they formed a League.

It was in marked contrast when I came from Elgin to Ottumwa, as the latter is the most dead to the Liberal cause, considering the number of Liberal papers taken there, of any place I hav ever been in. Some very noble men there, but somehow no united action can be effected. The League was not organized until after my third lecture. Mr. Chilton, Mr. Lindsay, and Mr. Walker are the most activ Liberals here. I must mention my landlord, ye host of the Revere House, a man of heavy caliber, putting the scales down at three hundred pounds, and with a brain corresponding to his stomach, a man of grand intellect, but not activ. It is a common saying that if you can get him mad, as was customary long ago to get Jehovah, Mr. O. D. Tisdale can make the finest stump speech of any man in Ottumwa.

Bedford, Iowa, is my present field of action. I shall giv three lectures here. June 15th and 16th, I shall lecture in Harlan, Iowa; June 19th and 20th, in Winterset, Iowa; June 23d, DeWitt; June 27th, Hume; July 1st, Macedon; July 4th, Marengo. I am happy to thus be able to report business. I hav met but one or two Abbot men, and what seemed to trouble them most was that they wanted a "clean religion." At one point where I lectured I met a professed Liberal and reader of the Index several times, and each time he was laboring under the influence of fire-water, but he never for one moment forgot his shibboleth, "We want a clean religion." Yes, and he needed one. Abbotism is about dead. Bundyism is sickly, and the other brethren, like Grant, will be left behind to meditate on former glories.

Bedford, Iowa, June 10, 1880. W. S. BELL.

Liberal News Items.

I WAS pleased to see a notice of Mrs. Eliza Boardman Burns' Liberal hymn book in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is a valuable collection of Liberal hymns, and should hav a large circulation.

THE Hornellsville Liberal League has promised to make perfect and extensive arrangements for the Freethinkers' Association.

THE good work that brother Byron Adonis has accomplished in San Francisco, organizing Auxiliary Liberal League No. 190, should stimulate the Liberals of a hundred other towns to follow his noble example. Friends, organize! organize!

THE prospects are that a number of thousand of Infidels will attend the Hornellsville Convention; and from a Christian standpoint that Convention should be good missionary ground. And the orthodox people of the state are requested to choose their best man to attend this Convention as a "missionary," and defend the Christian doctrine and demolish Infidelity. If the request be complied with the missionary will be attentively listened to. Truth has nothing to fear from investigation. She welcomes it.

MR. J. N. BUCHER, Sandyville, Tuscarawas Co., O., writes: "At my place we want a League, but we are not strong numerically, though alive and working wherever there is an opportunity. The church has been trying social pressure here, but we are holding them level and getting more converts than they are. There are a few of us who express our opinions freely and do not care who hears them. We tackle our reverends whenever they show themselves, and they now make themselves scarce, when they see any of us coming. I should like to see Ohio move up in the Liberal League column a little faster. Our county has one League at New Philadelphia, but there is no life in it."

THERE is an old saying that there is no evil but results in some good, and this adage is exemplified in the imprisonment of D. M. Bennett. If Mr. Bennett had not been imprisoned probably we should not hav had "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." So we can giv Comstock a little credit after all. "Giv the devil his due." For the last few days I hav been looking over the first volume of this work, and it is surely a most valuable production. It is as interesting as a novel from beginning to end, and is most valuable as a book of reference. Mr. Bennett has not only given us his own valuable contributions but also the best things that hav been written upon the subjects treated of by the best thinkers of the present and previous ages. No Liberal who desires to be well posted on the issues that divide the Liberal and orthodox world can afford to do without this great work. It is a Freethought theological library in itself. I can not understand how Mr. Bennett can afford to sell the work so cheap.

The Reason Why Folks Don't Go to Church.

Why are the churches so poorly filled? How shall the masses be reached by the gospel? These are questions that hav excited a deep interest in religious circles for the past few years, especially in our large cities. Ministers hav preached about it. The religious press has theorized in regard to it. Ecclesiastical councils and conferences hav listened to essays and joined in discussions concerning it. But, in spite of all that has been said and the little that has been done, the pews remain empty, and no two authorities seem to agree as to the reason or the remedy. It occurred to the Herald to go to the absentees themselves for the reason. Certainly it is a common-sense supposition that the man who doesn't go to church knows better than anybody else the reason why. Why speculate about what may be known? The first step towards remedying any difficulty is to ascertain its cause. It has been ascertained by repeated counts, and is, indeed, a matter of common observation to those whose duty or pleasure takes them among the churches, that, taken altogether, and on a fair average, not more than one-half the sittings are regularly occupied on Sunday, and that in many of them, built and maintained at a large expense, the proportion is much less than this. It was ascertained not long ago, upon the basis of an actual count made and published in the Congregationalist, that in ten orthodox churches in Boston city proper, representing an invested capital of fully $2,000,000 and an annual outlay, aside from interest, of nearly $1,000,000, with a seating capacity of some 8,000, but a little over 3,000 persons were in attendance on a pleasant Sunday morning. Add another thousand to the aggregate for any possible mistakes, or for more favorable conditions, and the showing is still sufficiently suggestiv, not to say startling.

What is the reason for this state of things? To get at a basis of fact, representativs of the Herald were directed to interview a large number of fairly typical persons of the so-called middle and working classes, who do not habitually attend church, with a view to ascertaining: 1. The reason why; 2. If church-going has ever been their habit, and in what denomination; 3. Any experiences, either mental or in the nature of the preaching or church management, that operate to prevent their going; 4. Their idea of the best use of Sunday. The reports of these interviews are before us, and we hav prepared a digest of them for our readers, giving in most instances the exact language, and in all cases, the fair substance of the replies. The reasons are obvious why the very poor and the vicious classes do not attend church, and the inquiries were, therefore, mainly prosecuted among the intelligent, industrious, well-to-do great middle-classes—those whom we suppose the church authorities to mean when speaking of "the masses." The first case given is that of a young man of twenty-eight, with a wife and two children, an accountant, with a salary of $1,200 a year; a clean-cut, bright fellow, with fine tastes and irreproachable character, a model husband and good citizen.

"And so you want to know why I don't go to church?" he responded to the inquiry. "Well, I appreciate your desire for exact information, but I don't know as we hav ever drawn up and declared our reasons, hav we, wife?" appealing to the little lady who was an interested listener. "The fact is," he continued, "we can't afford it; that is, we can't afford to hire seats where we want to go, and we hav natural antipathies to dead-beating it. If it was absolutely indispensable to our souls' welfare for us to go to church somewhere, of course we could find a place. But we don't so regard it, and the places that are open to us under conditions where we would feel comfortable are the ones where we havn't the slightest desire to go."

"There are seat rentals within your means, of course?"

"Yes—and if one church, and one preacher, and one service, were as good as another, it would be all right. But, hang it, they ain't. And nobody can make me believe that it is my duty to go and hear a man who murders the king's English, or preaches through his nose, or reads a dull essay, or flaunts in my face doctrins that are abhorrent to me. I won't do it, that's all. I was brought up in an orthodox way, and don't dissent from the main facts of religion, as I understand it. I would like to go to church, for the habit of the thing and for the good it does me, under proper conditions. There are the free seats and the free churches, of course. But how does a fellow feel in them who is in the habit of paying his way? It's a potter's field for the living—that's about the size of it. Now, when we want to go to the play or a concert, my money is as good as anybody's. For $1.00 I can hav a seat as good as Crœsus, and feel like a man in my right to it, as I sit beside him. There are no broad aisles, nor pew ownership, nor caste divisions in other places of public resort. A fellow would feel about as much at home to stumble into a swell club-house as go into a swell church. As for Sunday, I devote the day religiously to getting acquainted with my family. I hav, of course, several other good reasons for not going to church, but these are enough, I take it." As the reporter wasn't instructed to argue the case, he conceded that they were.

The next type selected was a lady—a widow in moderate circumstances, cultivated, clever, and mentally "emancipated." "You know that, officially, I can't be impertinent," said the reporter, "especially to an acquaintance. So please proceed and tell me why you never go to church."

"Well, then, I don't go to church because I had too much of it in my youth. It was church morning, afternoon, and evening, and prayer-meetings beside, forever and ever—amen! I came to dread and then to hate it, and the first use I made of my freedom—my marriage, you understand, or you will understand, if you get the right kind of a wife, was to stop going to church, except now and then to hear the music. Besides, I like new things, and it is the same old story from the pulpit."

A music teacher, a single lady of education and refinement, offered herself as a witness. "I don't go to church regularly," she said, "because I can't dress well enough to feel comfortable where I want to go, if I go at all. If it were in the line of duty or something that I felt to be essential, I would go in calico, if need were. But church-going is now either a fashion or a habit. Nobody seriously thinks of it as a means of grace. They simply regard it as the proper thing to do, or feel it to be their duty to help keep up the establishment. I can't afford to be fashionable, though I don't deny that I should like to be. If I were able and had been bred to it I hav no doubt I should don my camel's hair, my laces, my lov of a hat, and my most modest diamonds, and sail into my reserved seat quite as a matter of course, without thinking at all of making the plain little thing in the back pew, in her poor best dress, feel as though she were sitting on pins and needles. I don't blame the fine dames at all. It is all natural to them. Only I will do my penance in a less conspicuous manner."

The next is a polisher and varnisher, who carries on business in a small way. An intelligent, representativ man. Age forty, of steady habits, and a good citizen.

"You do not habitually attend church?"

"I do not. I hav done with such institutions."

"May I ask you the reason?"

"Because I hav found the church in my case barren and unprofitable, and hav found outside of it what I could not find inside. I hav believed and still believe in immortality, but I got no satisfactory proof of it in the church. I left it and found elsewhere the proofs I wanted."

"Where did you find them?"

"In Spiritualism. I hav been a Spiritualist for a number of years, and am proud to be counted in that class of inquirers after truth."

"Were you ever in the habit of attending church?"

"I was, and I was a church-goer until I was twenty-eight years of age."

"In what denomination?"

"Roman Catholic. I had near relativs, however, who were Presbyterians, but I do not think this tended to liberalize me. I was never satisfied while in the church. There was no response to my inquiries after enlightenment upon matters which I wanted to ask about, but on which inquiry was repressed. They expected me to take all they said on faith. I could not. I became inquiring, skeptical. I went outside the church and found what I could not get in it."

"What do you think of the preaching in the Catholic church?"

"It is a kind of set-to-music affair. I understand that the same sermons that are preached in Europe are also preached in our churches. I can believe it, for the Catholic church boasts that it never changes. It has a stencil for every dogma and the priest has to use it. There is a hollowness about this kind of thing that leaves me, after I hav been under its influence, like one who has been fed on air. I want none of it."

"You observe Sunday?"

"I do, in my way. I think men who work should hav one day in the seven to rest in, and why not Sunday? Besides, it is a better than any other to rest in, because all business is suspended, and quiet reigns in our ordinarily noisy city."

"How should Sunday be spent, in your opinion, and how do you spend it?"

"I think that every one should spend the day as he pleases, in a way best suited to his tastes, so long as he is in the bounds of propriety. As for me, after reading the papers, I do not go out much until after dinner. Then take a walk in the afternoon with my wife and children. Or I might take them out into the country for a pleasant stroll. If I felt like it I would go fishing, boating, or any other pastime which was not unlawful. Or I would attend a lecture or a picnic or a concert. I think it is no harm, in a moral sense, for a man to pursue the pleasures and pastimes that will serve to giv him gratification, always provided he violates no statute law, and does not manifestly annoy others. I, of course, do not take into account that sentimentality of religious people who cannot bear to see folks going anywhere but to church, or to any church but their own. I believe in people enjoying themselves; in making life happy and sunshiny. I know they cannot all enjoy it as I would wish to. We hav all different tastes, and I would consider it the hight of folly to expect all others to bend to my taste in such matters. Some of my best friends do not believe as I believe. That is all right. Their belief comforts them, Mine comforts me. I wish to liv and let liv; but I do not wish to liv under priestly dominion. That is, in short, my position."

A young professional man responded to the inquiry by saying: "O! I don't go regularly anywhere since Murray stopped preaching. He spoilt me for the average pulpit performance."

"You enjoyed his style?"

"In my judgment, Boston hasn't had his equal as a preacher since I hav known it. His manner, his thought, his oratory, all were superb. He never put us off with slipshod work. Considering how careless he was in other matters, the finish of his discourses, and the uniform power displayed in their delivery, were remarkable. He was a great preacher. It is a pity he couldn't hav been kept at it"

"He used to hav a large congregation?"

"Music Hall was packed almost every Sunday for three years. He never had to ask why people don't go to church."

"Where hav his followers gone since the break-up?"

"So far as I know, very few of them hav settled down anywhere. Some who left other churches hav gone back, but I think the majority are afloat, like myself."

An architect and builder, well "fixed" as to worldly affairs, and bred an orthodox of the down East type, said:

"No, I stopped some years ago. Didn't like the sort of people our churches bred. Too low between joints—too narrow for comfort. Our closest skinflints were always deacons. Their creed seemed to be that whatever is good is bad. I couldn't believe in their hell, and couldn't relish their heaven, and so I thought I might as well quit."

"And what do you do with your Sundays?"

"Well, I make it easy for the good wife; look out for the youngsters; take a horse-car outing, if the weather is fair; read a little, smoke a good deal, sleep, visit, and make a restful home day of it."

A tired-looking shop girl, a fair representativ of the ten thousand of her class in the city, was asked the question, and replied, with bitter significance:

"My employer goes. He is one of the pillars of the church."

"Well?"

"That's reason enough why I shouldn't go. I know how he treats his help. We girls are barely able to keep soul and body together—and neither of them in good condition!—under the pitiful wages we can earn. Would you think Christianity did much for you, sir, if you were a poor girl, compelled to work for $4 a week and expected to dress and appear respectable, while your employer lived in a palace, and paid liberally to support a church, in which his operativs, who are popularly supposed to hav souls, would be and feel as much out of place as in his fine house?"

"But many employers do treat their help generously."

"Yes; but they are quite as often world's people as so-called Christians; and then we girls are so shut in that we must look only at what is nearest to us."

An activ business man of literary tastes said, among other things: "To be frank, I don't believe in the Bible, or rather in the system built upon it. When I was a boy, the Bible was the only accepted history, the only science, the only record of religion, and the Jews the only people of antiquity worth knowing about. Now we find, even in the churches, Genesis giving way to geology, flat creation to orderly evolution, and Bible traditions to scholary research. Why, it even appears that Moses stole all the Commandments save two—and those the ones of least account—from the Egyptians, including a good part of his ceremonial system and law. As for the 'chosen people,' they were a mere nomadic tribe, engaged in barbarous bushwhacking wars under the alleged guidance of Jehovah, when older and better races, to whom we hav the impertinence to send missionaries, had a high civilization and a noble code of ethics. I believe in Christianity, and would hold to it whether such a person as Jesus ever actually lived and died according to the record or not; but I don't think he would recognize the popular religion as his if he should come to our land to-day. I keep away from the temples for fear I should feel the sting of his scourge if he should happen to come among the money changers."

A large number of the reports show a loss of faith in religion to hav resulted from bad treatment, in business or other matters, by prominent church members. The man who has been swindled or wronged often holds the system responsible for the deeds of the individual, especially when such conduct does not seem to impair the standing of the wrong-doer. This feeling was condensed into a bitter hyperbole by one man who had been outrageously duped and swindled by his partner, who was an activ Sunday-school superintendent. "If I had a boy," said the victim, grimly, "and he showed the least inclination to go to Sunday-school, I would drown him."

A remark dropped by an English servant girl to a lady who was seeking to engage her, is also quite apropos: "Do you attend church?" inquired the lady.

"Not in this country, ma'am."

"And why not?"

"I am a churchwoman, ma'am, but I hav found no provision made for the serving class in our churches in this country."

"But you could go somewhere else."

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, but I only enjoy my own service."

A good many of the absentees contented themselves with the brief but honest answer, "Because we don't want to." "People, as a rule, find a way to go where they want to," said one outspoken lady. "I simply don't want to go. When the churches, in their preaching, their music, their hospitality, their freedom from cold forms and Sunday millinery, make me want to go, I shall go, and not before. For the rest, I am quite willing to settle the matter with my God."

An engineer who has charge of engines which furnish power to quite a number of industrial occupations in a central place in the city, and is quite an intelligent man, was asked,

"You do not attend church at all, you say. Why?"

"Because there is nothing there to attract me. There is a desire, a want of knowledge on my part in relation to the things the preachers talk about, which they hav not as yet satisfied, and I doubt if they ever can."

"Hav you been much of a church goer in your life?"

"For the past twenty years I hav not. My parents were of the Baptist persuasion, and compelled me, when young, to attend Sunday-school and church; but even when a youngster I thought the whole affair hollow and unsatisfying. The result is that I hav been, since a boy, and am now, a Freethinker, that is, I believe only in what I conceive to be reasonable, according to my small comprehension."

"What is your idea of the best use of Sunday?"

"Rational enjoyment. If I could go down the harbor without being uncomfortably squeezed by too large a crowd, I would go. Or I might take the horse cars and go to West Roxbury. But the fact is, the boats and horse cars are generally so crowded on Sundays that one might wonder if there is any one left to go to church. It looks as if the priests were losing their hold on the people. I hav enough to do with church members on week days to let them alone on Sundays."

The next is a blacksmith, who employs men. He is thirty-five years of age, and has a first-class reputation as an honest, fair-dealing man. He is of an intelligent and inquiring turn of mind.

"You do not habitually attend church, sir. May I ask why?"

"Certainly. The church to me is a sapless trunk of a still standing tree. For me it has no fruit. And yet I go to church occasionally. I go when any man of note is to be heard. I go to hear if he has any new ideas, if he has any convincing proofs to giv me of an immortality which I hope for, and a hereafter which must accompany it. I tell you, I hav hungered and thirsted for information on those things, but hav never found any one to satisfy me—ministers least of all."

"How long did you regularly attend church, and what denomination?"

"I attended Sunday-school and the Lutheran church until I was about fifteen years of age. Up to the time I left church I had no religious convictions. There was nothing in the preaching that was attractiv to me. It seemed wrong and cruel to my conceptions of justice and mercy and truth. It repelled me from the time I began to think, and the more I hav thought of the doctrins preached, the more repellant they are to me."

"Are you an Infidel now?"

"I do not particularly like that term. I am not an Atheist. I believe in God, but not in all the Bible doctrins. They are too repulsiv to me. My God is not the God the ministers tell us of. I suppose I might properly be called a Freethinker. I feel myself responsible to no man, to no minister, to no church, for what I think or believe. It affects me more than them, and I think I should hav the most to say about it."

"What is your idea of the best use of Sunday?"

"I generally pass my Sundays visiting friends or going to the sea shore. If I feel like it, I go into the country or take a ride on the cars. If the day is not pleasant, I stay at home and read; I hav plenty of good books to read, and the Sunday papers are full of information. I think rational men should spend Sunday as they see fit, and I do not see why they should be prevented from doing so."

The interviews and statements could be prolonged, but the above giv a sufficiently full and clear idea of the reasons as they actually exist in the minds of the great mass of non-church goers for their course of life in this respect. It is not the purpose of this article to reason on the matter, to expose fallacies, or to point out a remedy for the difficulties. Its aim is simply to present facts, leaving to those charged with the management of the churches the working out of the knotty problem which they present.

The Oneida Community.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Two of your correspondents having recently had occasion to allude to the above society, allow me space for a few words in relation to the same subject. In alluding to the whipping of Miss Hubbard, Mr. Huggins says, "It strikes me, however, if such an aggravated case as Mr. Hammond makes out had really occurred, the Christian papers would hav published and republished it until every man, woman, and child in the United States and Europe would hav heard of it."

From Mr. Huggins' use of the adjectiv above, one would be inclined to think that he regarded this Community as a non-Christian or Infidel one. But the contrary is the fact, it being founded—or at least their leader, J. H. Noyes, claims it to be—on Christianity pure and simple. They adduce many New Testament texts in support of their theory, and I understand admit none but Christians as members. Christ, we are told, expressly stated that in heaven there is "neither marriage nor giving in marriage," and taught the people that the will of God should be done "on earth as it is in heaven." In Acts ii, 44, 45, we read:

"And all that believed were together and had all things common;

"And sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every man had need."

Again, in Acts iv, we are told:

"And the multitudes of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common.

"Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the pieces of the things that were sold,

"And laid them down at the apostles' feet; and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

From the above, we see that the Communistic theory belongs to primitiv Christianity, and that the members of the Oneida Community are zealous believers in what they regard as the true interpretation of the teachings of the carpenter of Judea. Witness the following extract from an interview with Mr. M. Pomeroy, and which appeared in Pomeroy's Democrat:

"Please tell us, is your Community here established for the purpose of profit to individuals or in accordance with some peculiar religious idea or belief? In fact, what is the grand hard-pan on which you base your life and operations?"

"Well, sir, we believe in God as the power of all good, as a being of love and justice. We believe in Christ, his son, and in so living as to be acceptable to him when we shall be called to leave this earth."

"Then your whole mode of life is based upon a religious belief?"

"Yes, sir."

"And whatever you do is in conformity with your interpretations of God's commands?"

"Yes, sir."

"Your great aim is to liv a life in consonance with the teachings of the Almighty and the teachings of his son, Jesus Christ?"

"Yes, sir."

Theoretically the above might explain why the Christian journals passed over in silence the whipping alluded to, since the Christians hav ever set themselves up as the conservators of everybody's morals but their own, but practically the church has so far receded from the teachings inculcated by the humble Nazarene that it is doubtful if Christ, could he visit the earth to-day, would recognize in the discordant factions composing the so-called Christian sects the least adherence to the doctrins said to hav been promulgated by him some eighteen hundred years ago. The clergy hav never received any money for marriage fees, funerals, etc., from the Community, nor hav they been called upon to officiate there in any capacity, as I understand it, and hence, with their meddlesome, quarrelsome nature and their rule or ruin policy, they hav attacked the Society so fiercely of late (albeit "brothers in Christ"), that I hear the Community has given up the most prominent of its distinguishing features, complex marriage.

Now, as regards the whipping of Miss Hubbard, did it really occur? Let us see. The only allusion to it I hav ever seen, aside from Mr. Hammond's article, is contained in a pamphlet entitled, "Behind the Scenes; or, An Exposure of Oneida Community," published by A. L. Slawson, Oneida, N. Y., in 1875. In it, on page 68, he says: "Although it is claimed that the women are free to reject whomsoever they choose, this is not the case, and many of them hav been subjected to severe flogging for non-compliance with the wishes of the men. Should this be doubted, it is only necessary to refer to the case of Sarah Hubbard. This woman was subjected to such brutal treatment that her brother interposed and had the ring-leaders arrested and brought to trial, during the progress of which one of the Community women testified that Miss Hubbard's case was not an exceptional one. . . ."

About the same time that I saw the above, I read in the Albany Argus that "a young girl named Mallory had given birth to a child in the Community, and being too young the child's life had to be sacrificed and the mother's was despaired of," followed by a short tirade against the Community. Wishing to learn the truth in regard to these and similar stories which I had heard, I wrote to Mr. William A. Hinds, associate-editor of the American Socialist, and in reply received a letter dated March 21, 1879, which I still hav, and from which I quote as follows:

"You inquire first about the story you saw in the Albany Argus concerning a young mother who lost a child, and whose own life, it was reported, was despaired of because she had so early become a mother. Well, Dr. H. W. Carpenter, of Oneida village, killed that snake at the time by a card which he sent to the Syracuse papers, and which contained these words: 'The lady in question who gave birth to a child was very nearly twenty-four years of age! The sickness was severe, but no more so than many cases in my every-day practice. The child, which was apparently sound and well-formed, from some unknown cause, lived but three or four days. The mother recovered as rapidly as is common in similar cases, and at no time has her life been despaired of, or has it been considered a critical case. I write from actual knowledge, as I was called in consultation with Dr. Cragin, the attending physician. I will simply add that this young woman has since given birth to a healthy child and that she herself is in robust health. . .

"Your fourth story is really too absurd to be credited by any person. There never was a woman in the Community by the name of Sarah Hubbard! There never was a woman flogged in the Community for non-compliance with the wishes of the men. I hav not seen Slawson's pamphlet, but understand it contains many equally absurd stories.

"Yours respectfully, W. A. Hinds."

Regarding the question of veracity between Mr. Hammond and Mr. Hinds, I leave it to the gentlemen concerned. Mr. Hammond says it can be substantiated by the court records at Morrisville, N. Y. If this be so he will certainly hav a pretty strong case against Mr. Hinds, the author of "American Communities," whose denial I hav, and who is, I believe, regarded as a gentleman of truth and talents. Let the proof be adduced and I will see that a marked copy of the paper containing it is forwarded to Mr. Hinds, that we may sift this matter to the bottom, and find at whose door the inaccuracy lies. ## A Real Irish Lady.

"Did you ever meet a real Irish lady?"

The question came from a scion of American moneyocracy. His friend admitted that he had never had the pleasure.

The young gentleman then gave an account of a dinner in Dublin, where he had, for the first time in his life, met with such a rara avis in the person of his hostess, the wife of a great brewer. There was also a young lady from Killarney, real "Oirish," brogue and all, but a real lady.

He subsequently remarked that they were "real nice."

The remarks passed stirred no gall in me, for I hav become calloused to those things which when a youth made me feel like rising against the established order.

My only thought was (and it may interest some), What basis had this young man for his estimate of "a lady?" I concluded that it was wealth first, and then the easy grace of manner that so soon comes to those by whom it is possessed, for he said that the wife of the brewer also spoke in a brogue that was inimitable and scarcely intelligible, and that the Killarney young lady was a great, stout, buxom girl.

And then followed the thought that I would hav liked—could I hav done so without abruptness—to hav told them of a real Irish lady whom I knew. She was our washerwoman when I knew her—a fine, handsome-faced, large, black-haired woman from the north country, and a devoted Catholic withal.

She had then just left a drunkard husband to make an honest living for herself and four children and old mother. After living by washing, scrubbing, etc., for a year or more, she got a permanent place in a large notion house, to clean it daily, and then she could not wash for us any more; but she has never dropped out of our remembrance, nor will. We go to see her often. She is poor, but is ever the same quiet, gentle, genial, pleasant-faced lady—a lady despite her poverty.

And in closing I would say that not only is this woman poor, but she is ignorant, as the phrase runs; for, born and raised in the north of Ireland, under the terrible law which existed in her girlhood against papists, she never even learned to read, can scarcely read now. And yet despite her brogue, which is broad, and her poverty, she is in manners fit company for the most polished woman of wealth that I ever saw; one who would make no breach of etiquet, because she has the instincts of a lady at her heart.

Such is the real Irish lady whom I hav met, and singularly enough, with me, too, she is the only one: and my story, if it points any moral, points this: not that Irish women generally are ladies, but that a lady is born, not made.

Oaths of Office.

To the Editor of the Herald: The Herald of Saturday was particularly sarcastic on Charles Bradlaugh for declining to be sworn in as a member of the House of Commons, and then, when he was not allowed to take his seat on affirmation, offering to take the oath as a "meaningless form." The implication of this fatherly chastisement of our young friend Charles is that he has been foolishly inconsistent with himself, and thereby, probably, lost the seat which he might hav held had he held his tongue and taken the oath in the usual way. But possibly the green young man thought, if he made no objection to taking the oath, when he should afterward move the abolition of such an "unmeaning form" he would cut as silly a figure in the eyes of such critics as the Boston Herald as if he had lost his seat by objecting to it. If, on declining the oath, he stated that he was conscientiously opposed to taking it, that would be an inconsistency with his subsequent readiness to take it for him to explain. Possibly he can do it, for a man may, in a certain sense, be conscientiously opposed to crawling on his hands and knees, and yet not be ready to die to avoid it.

But my object is not to defend a man so able to take care of himself as Charles Bradlaugh, but to apply the word silliness where it more appropriately belongs than to Mr. Bradlaugh, namely, to Parliament, and more especially to legislativ bodies in this country, in the matter of official oaths.

Is there a man in Christendom qualified to hold any office of trust who does not know that an oath adds nothing whatever of security for the performance of the official duties? Is there a lawyer under heaven who believes that an oath adds to the credibility of a witness? The pains and penalties of perjury may do it, or the fear of Mrs. Grundy may do it. Why not, then, swear the legislator or the witness by Mrs. Grundy, of whose personality we know little, to be sure, but more than we know of the author of the universe?

The oath is a badge, or formal recognition, of the subordination of the state to the church. Now, the latter may be infinitly the most important institution. Our government pledges itself to protect every citizen in thinking so; but it expressly disclaims connection with or relation to any church or religion whatever. Why then should we, in this country, under a government professing to be purely secular, hav anything to do with oaths or prayers? A secular government can know nothing of the religious opinions of the citizen, nor can it care whether they are theistic, pantheistic, or Atheistic. It utterly leaves religion to take care of itself. As Franklin said, a religion that cannot do that is not worth having. It appears to me that, if a government of the people, by the people, and for the people cannot serve its purposes without prayers and oaths, it is supremely silly not at once to dissolve itself and allow a theocracy to take its place. Is it going to be fatal to religion to hav the church ignored by the state and left with nothing but Almighty God to rely upon?

The Waterloo yearly meeting of the Friends of Progress was a great success. Some twelve hundred people attended. The speakers were George W. Taylor, J. H. Harter, Mrs. Amelia Gardner, and H. L. Green. Mr. and Mrs. John F. Hayden, of Auburn, furnished the instrumental music and singing, which was of the best quality.

During the last few days the Liberals of some eight localities hav made application for blanks and instructions to form Auxiliary Liberal Leagues.

I am pleased to learn that Truth is an independent journal and is not tied to the apron strings of any one party. If the National Liberal League is compelled to put candidates in the field, I am confident, if we make good selections, Truth will aid us. It looks to me as if we should be compelled to take that step. H. L. G.

A Discussion Proposed.

WHAT OBJECTIONS TO CHRISTIANITY?

NEW YORK, June 18, 1880.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Sir: I have lately seen some copies, through your kindness, of THE TRUTH SEEKER. If you will pardon me, I am astonished at its uncalled-for misrepresentations, not to say blasphemy and obscenity. At the same time I would be dull indeed not to see evidences of alas perverted learning and genius, and knowing besides that many of the great and learned and polite are in heart Infidel I am curious to know what really are your objections to the religion of Christ as taught in the New Testament.

I am not a clergyman, and have never received a college education, but I should like the privilege, if you grant my request, of answering your objections in your own paper. Christians are responsible themselves for many Infidel objections because they do not let the book speak for itself. "I receive not testimony from man," is Christ's language. If you will honestly then state your objections under some systemized headings, confining yourself to the book itself, taking the initiative in your columns and allowing me to frame a reply the succeeding week, and so alternating, we may both derive benefit from our correspondence.

Will you please answer me by letter, yea or nay, at your earliest convenience?

Sincerely yours, G. M. MAIR.

Box 3977, city.

REPLY.

MR. G. M. MAIR, Dear Sir: I readily comply with your proposition, and will cheerfully enter into a discussion with you on the merits of Christianity, with this amendment or enlargement of the line you mark out to be pursued: I will discuss "the book," or in other words, what are accepted as the teachings of Jesus, as fully as you wish; but I do not want to be confined to the book. A proper discussion of the Christian system of religion, which is supposed to be founded upon the precepts and teachings of Jesus, necessarily involves a wide range of subjects; and to do the system justice the examination of it should not be restricted to any one chapter in "the book," or to the book itself. Let it rather be understood that everything connected with the subject may be embraced in the discussion.

As you are not "a clergyman, and never received a college education," we stand on equal ground. I received no theological education, and but little of any other kind. I attended a country district school a portion of the time till between fourteen and fifteen; since that time I have been for nearly half a century constantly employed in physical labor and have had no further opportunities to acquire an education. My reading, also, has been very limited.

I am sorry to see you start off in this proposed discussion by using such words as these in regard to my paper, "I am astonished at its uncalled-for misrepresentations, not to say blasphemy and obscenity." I am not at all surprised that you charge me with "blasphemy." It is a charge very commonly made against those who take the liberty to doubt current theology, and it is thought to answer well in place of argument. But the charges of "misrepresentation" and "obscenity" you should not make without adducing proof to sustain them. I have just served out a sentence of thirteen months' imprisonment in one of the severest penitentiaries in the country on a charge of obscenity from Christian persecutors, and I very naturally have a strong repugnance to the charge unless it is well sustained. I am equally opposed to "misrepresentation." I never use it unless by accident or through ignorance. If there is anything in the universe that I revere, it is TRUTH, and I despise those who pervert it and resort to duplicity and falsehood. So let me in justice ask you, in the early part of our discussion, to point out my "misrepresentations" and "obscenity" or honorably retract the charge. If you are honest in your assumed objection to obscenity and misrepresentation, let me refer your attention to "the book" which you doubtless greatly revere—the Bible. I am very sure I will be able to show you that that book contains infinitely more of both obscenity and misrepresentation than you can possibly point out in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

By way of leading off, and marking out the ground upon which I am willing to stand in the discussion with you, I will make a few points showing what objections I have to Christianity as taught in the New Testament and elsewhere, and lay down a few propositions, all of which I will endeavor to establish by proofs as we advance with our argument.

1. Christianity is neither new or original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. There is not a dogma, rite, sacrament, or ceremony in it that did not exist in pagan systems from five hundred to two thousand years before Christianity was known in the world.

3. The belief in an offspring being begotten by a god upon a human virgin is nearly a thousand years older than the mythical story of Jesus and his virgin mother.

4. Miracles and supernatural achievements have been as fully and as truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

5. Other so-called saviors and redeemers have been believed in, and reported to have been crucified, and to have died on the cross, many hundreds of years before the same was said of Jesus.

6. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical. It was neither written by Jesus himself, nor his apostles. The story is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

7. The teachings of Jesus are defective in morals, intelligence, and scientific information. His moral precepts and teachings were equaled by many sages and teachers who preceded him.

8. What are called the Four Gospels are unauthentic or spurious productions. Not one was written by the one whose name it bears, and not one was known to be in existence till one hundred and fifty years after the time of the reported death of Jesus.

9. There were large numbers of what were called gospels and epistles in the first few Christian centuries which were not admitted into the Christian canon, but vied with them in correctness, and were as much entitled to be admitted as a large majority of the books that were called inspired, and were accepted as such.

10. The early Christian Fathers were designing, hypocritical, and dishonest. Their contentions and quarrels about matters of faith and the authenticity of certain gospels and epistles continued for centuries.

11. The doctrines and claims of Christianity are not true, and have produced great unhappiness among mankind.

12. Christianity has not been a blessing to the world, but in many respects a curse.

13. The leaders and bright stars in the Christian church have been among the worst tyrants and oppressors of human liberty the world has known.

14. Christianity, instead of being a religion of love, has been a religion of hate, contention, war, and bloodshed. It has caused more persecution, wars, and loss of life than any other religion, yes, more than all other religions put together.

15. It has fostered ignorance, superstition, and falsehood. It has retarded education and science in the world. To this extent it has also been a serious impediment and curse to the race.

16. It is founded upon pretended supernaturalism, which is a quality that has no existence in fact. There is no supernaturalism.

17. The Bible, from which it obtains its authority, is not true. It does not harmonize with the facts and principles in nature known to be true.

18. The Bible was written by men illy-informed in scientific knowledge and truth. It was not written nor inspired by God.

19. The Bible and Christianity recognize and confirm the tyranny of kings and despots, which is wholly opposed to the progress and happiness of the human race. Neither has raised a protest against slavery and oppression, but both assert that all power is of God.

20. The Bible and Christianity have oppressed women and have deprived her of the rights to which by nature she is justly entitled.

21. The Bible and Christianity have upheld the most obnoxious systems of kingcraft and priestcraft the world has known.

22. The Bible and Christianity have made war upon witchcraft, something, which has no real existence, and in keeping with their instructions thousands of wretched human beings have been subjected to the most cruel torture and death.

23. The Bible and Christianity have not been the source of civilization and education in the world, as they have not been the source of human welfare. They have favored ignorance and slavery, rather than knowledge and liberty.

24. The Bible and Christianity are unprogressive in their nature. They are founded upon the dictum and authority of God himself, and are therefore incapable of progress and improvement. While all branches of art, mechanism, science, architecture, and agriculture are capable of improvement and progress, the Bible and Christianity admit of none.

25. The Bible and Christianity do not teach the highest class of truth, and the best variety of religion which mankind are capable of receiving. They are of the past, not the present; and as they cost incomputable treasures in labor and money to sustain them, and as science, reason, and truth teach us a far better and truer religion at only a moiety of the cost of the other, the world should discard the former and embrace the latter.

I might lay down many additional propositions, but these are perhaps sufficient for our present purpose. I am willing to discuss one or all of them. They are either true or they are false, and it is very well to discuss them and find which it is. I shall endeavor to show that they are true, but if you can succeed in showing they are false I will handsomely acknowledge I am in error. I will hope for as much from you if you fail so to show. You can take up such of them as you please to discuss, but I would prefer to give all of them an examination. If you choose to leave off a portion of them, let it be understood that they are conceded.

I am glad you are disposed to discuss the merits of Christianity, and trust you will enter into it thoroughly. If you wish to call upon any of your friends, the clergy, to assist you, I will by no means object. I am, perhaps, not an able man, but I have such confidence in truth, reason, and science that I am not afraid to meet the combined force of the entire Christian clergy. I say then, let investigation and discussion go on! All are interested in knowing what and where is truth. Hoping to hear from you in time for my next issue,

I am sincerely yours, D. M. BENNETT.

Mr. Underwood Again.

THORNDIKE, MASS., June 17, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You attempt to justify your attack on me by declaring that while you were in prison I said you were "a culprit," an "aged sinner," a "despicable character," "a deliberate calumniator of a virtuous woman," "unfit to represent any decent movement or to associate with decent men and women." This statement, like most of your recent charges against me, is false. The words "culprit" and "aged sinner" are not mine, but a reporter's, and are from a report of an interview which I repudiated as giving neither my language nor my meaning as soon as it came to my notice. The reporter himself admits the inaccuracy of the report, and made an explanation when my denial was published. Not only the reporter, but parties present at the interview, admit I applied no epithets to you. Corrections were published in THE TRUTH SEEKER from me and editorially.

Your other quotations, I presume, are from a communication I wrote in response to a public request from the editor of the R.-P. Journal that I would giv my verdict on the appearance of the article purporting to giv a statement of your doings and extracts from your letters. This article has never been copied into THE TRUTH SEEKER, although often referred to in its columns by persons who never saw it. Its publication will show your readers what I really did say and illustrate your manner of quoting from one against whom you wish to make a point.

"THE VERDICT OF PROF. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"To the Editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal: I hav read your surprising revelations in regard to D. M. Bennett. You ask for my verdict. I prefer not to be in haste in giving my verdict in such a serious matter. I would be glad to see D. M. Bennett proven innocent of the folly, vulgarity, and vice of which he is guilty, if those letters you giv from him are genuine. If he is the man you represent him to be, if he is a would-be seducer and deliberate, malicious calumniator of a virtuous woman, whom he had vainly tried to corrupt and ruin, then indeed his character is most despicable, and he is unfit to represent any decent movement or to associate with decent men and women.

"The only way that D. M. Bennett's name can be saved from everlasting disgrace is to impeach the genuineness of those letters. As the case now stands—supposing those letters beyond question—thousands who hav defended Bennett will feel that he has outrageously imposed on their confidence.

"With many of Bennett's positions I hav never been in accord, nor hav I approved some of the methods he has employed. The circulation of 'Cupid's Yokes' by him I hav characterized as most unwise and foolish. But he declared he had no sympathy with its teachings and sold it in the interests of freedom. I gave him credit for this. I thought, as I still think, his trial was unfair and his sentence unjust. I protested against his imprisonment through the Index and Investigator. I wrote Col. Ingersoll and others requesting them to use their efforts for his pardon. I hav written Bennett himself a letter of sympathy since his removal to the Albany Penitentiary. But although whatever be the character of the man, it does not justify his imprisonment for the offense for which he was sentenced; yet if what you hav published be true, the Liberal public will no longer hav confidence in the man, and the sympathy which has been so generally bestowed will be withdrawn.

"This is the only "verdict" I shall attempt to giv now.

"Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"Monroe, Wis., Oct. 24, 1879."

[The true inwardness of this letter is better seen when it is remembered that the writer was well acquainted with the character of the letters referred to a month before the above was written. His pretended surprise and ignorance was the reverse of honesty].

The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will judge for themselves whether your quotations from the above communication are made in the spirit of truth and fairness. I call attention to these misrepresentations merely to indicate your method of dealing with one against whom you wish to prejudice your readers, and select them because you appeal to them to justify your slanderous and libelous attack on me. These misrepresentations are trivial compared with some that you hav made regarding me. It is always difficult, and sometimes quite impossible, to demonstrate that falsehoods are uttered or written "knowingly," even when the victim of them is satisfied on that point; but one who misrepresents and falsifies when the facts can be easily obtained, is scarcely more excusable than he who "knowingly" lies.

You say, "I never said an uncomplimentary word of you until you applied to me in a very public manner all the hard sayings and epithets cited above, and more too," referring to the above-quoted expressions. Yet the fair-minded reader will see that "the hard sayings and epithets cited above" furnish no ground whatever for your attempt to injure my reputation.

You say you hav private letters of mine in your possession, written by me to others within the last two months, which "can be seen by any friends who wish." If any persons hav sent my private letters to you containing statements in regard to you, I suggest that instead of referring to them and saying that they are full of falsehoods you publish them verbatim with the names of the persons to whom they were addressed. I hav written not more than two or three letters referring to you at any length, and they were to persons who commenced the correspondence pertaining to you, and whose letters to me called, I thought, for such replies as I sent. Although written only for the persons to whom they were sent, and their statements called out by my correspondents' letters, yet since you hav them in your possession, and hav referred to them several times, I think no harm can result from their publication. I believe they are truthful and just. I must request you not to giv garbled extracts from them, as you did from my communication given above. Once satisfied that I hav privately or publicly made a misstatement regarding you, I shall be as quick to correct it as I hav been to take steps in vindication of myself.

B. F. Underwood.

REPLY.

Mr. B. F. Underwood, Dear Sir: First of all, allow me to say I regret that you hav placed yourself in the position you hav. I regret that you should hav shown such bitter enmity towards myself, and that you should so unnecessarily hav forfeited the good opinion that thousands of Liberals once entertained of you. I regret the unpleasantness that in consequence of your course has grown up between us. It surely was not of my seeking. I said nothing about your immoralities and follies until you had long busied yourself about what you called mine. It was you who began this warfare, not me. You who began the recriminations, not me. But to your letter:

1. I think I fully justified myself by quoting your own language, in all that I hav said in relation to you.

2. When you say my statement, like most of my recent charges, is false, you are untruthful. I will again leave it to our readers to say which is the falsifier.

3. You say the words "culprit" and "aged sinner" are not yours, but the reporter's. What chance had I to know that? The reporter quoted you as saying those words, and the same was sent to tens of thousands of people. You hav not denied using those words before now that I am aware of. You certainly did not deny them in your article of denial in The Truth Seeker of Jan. 3d last. You claimed in that article that you did not apply the word "obscene" to The Truth Seeker, and that you did not say Col. Ingersoll had abandoned me "to my fate." As you did not repudiate the words "culprit" and "aged sinner," I am certainly justified in claiming that the reporter represented you correctly, as I am disposed to think he did all around. I hav seen no admission of his that he misrepresented you. I think, moreover, that I hav every reason to regard that report of your remarks, respecting me and my paper, under all the circumstances, as most unkind, unfair, unnecessary, uncalled-for, and untrue. With all the immorality and imperfections you charge upon me, I am very certain I would not hav acted in the same way toward you.

4. I comply with your request in publishing one of your letters in Bundy's Journal; and that your "fairness" may be still better seen, I will reprint your second letter to the same paper, which appeared in the Journal of November 8th last, after you had traveled several hundred miles, at Bundy's request, to read my letters. It is as follows:

Sherman House, Chicago, Nov. 2, 1879.

To the Editor of The Religio-Philosophical Journal: I hav examined the letters of D. M. Bennett submitted to me for examination; and in reply to your questions I am compelled to say that I am satisfied beyond a doubt that these letters are in the handwriting of D. M. Bennett, that the extracts from them published in the Journal of Oct. 25th are given accurately, that there are no indications whatever that any additions hav been made since they were originally written. I hav not the time, nor at present the disposition, to make any comments on the silly and vulgar trash, the perusal of which has left in my mind a feeling of unutterable disgust. But Liberalism will survive the exposure of personal vice, as the church has survived many similar exposures of its defenders.

Respectfully, B. F. Underwood.

The friendliness of this letter cannot be overlooked by the careful reader. But allow me to say that I think you would hav been better employed by remaining in the lecture field and attending to your legitimate business.

I am sorry you should hav occasion to feel unutterable disgust at my letters. As "charity begins at home," so perhaps "disgust" should begin there also. If it is true what is reported of you by men on whom I can fully rely about certain amours in California, Waverly, and Des Moines, I think you hav far more occasion to feel "unutterable disgust" at your own conduct than at my letters. In that instance I think you played the part of a hypocrit and Pharisee, of which a good Liberal would not be guilty; especially when it is borne in mind that you made your attacks when I was in prison, and when the religious press and a part of the secular press were making the most bitter assaults upon me.

5. You call for some of your private letters to friends of mine in which you evidently wished to continue the unfriendly, unfair, and untruthful course you had pursued toward me. I will giv a part of one of them this time, but do not conceive it necessary to giv the name of the person to whom written. You know who it is, and I hav not the recipient's permission to giv the name. But suffice it to say that it is one of the most prominent and best-known Liberals in the country. The letter is certainly your own, "verbatim," I assure you. I am well acquainted with your chirography, and can easily prove it by numerous persons if you demand it. You call attention to your letters against me being private, and doubtless in that case think private letters should be sacred; but you and your friends did not regard my private letters as sacred, but published them, with lies added, to the world, friends and foes alike, and without my knowledge or consent, and just to damage me. You call for this letter of yours, and here it is, ungarbled and unchanged:

Parkersburg, W. Va., April 27, 1880.

Dear ——: Your favor of the 24th is received. I thank you for responding so promptly to my request that you would state wherein you thought I had been unjust or unfair to Mr. Bennett. A brief statement from me is now in order. You are aware probably that before the publication of the "Bennett-Letters," Mr. B, in reply to paragraphs which had appeared in the Boston Herald and other papers [1] declared he had written no such letters [2]. The Truth Seeker said, editorially, that if such letters were in existence they were fabrications or perfectly innocent letters, changed, probably by Comstock [3]. On the appearance of the letters I received requests from a number of readers of the T. S. saying the published letters were undoubtedly fabrications, that they were so declared by the T. S. and asking me to see them and to expose the fraud. "It is a duty you owe a co-worker" wrote one. The R.-P. Journal called for my verdict [very doubtful]; I said, in reply, that I hoped the letters were not genuine, and intimated the editor had been imposed upon. He replied that the letters were open to my inspection on condition that I would state frankly whether I thought them genuine. I examined them and found them in the handwriting of Mr. Bennett and portions of them the vulgarest trash I ever read. [Bosh.] What less could I do than tell the truth? Suppose the letters had been fabrications, and that Bennett had suffered from the charge of writing them through disinclination on my part to see them and to vindicate him from the disgrace, how severely I would hav been censured! [More bosh.] But when Bennett and his acting editor had deceived their readers in this matter, and [4 and 5] when I did only what they would hav desired me to do if they had told the truth [6], if they had not practiced deception [7], (and what I doubt not you would hav applauded me for doing if the letters had proven spurious) and said no more than an honest man was bound in honor to say, and what Mr. Bennett afterward admitted to be true [Bald hypocrisy]. I was censured; and when I sent a brief communication to the T. S., giving these facts and vindicating my course, it was (for reasons that must be obvious to you) kept a month and then returned to me unpublished. [Because it was ordered to be returned.] Meantime the columns of the T. S. were opened to such persons as chose to indulge in vindictiv flings and personal abuse designed to injure me with the public. And yet you regard my course toward Mr. Bennett as unjust!

Your whole letter shows that you quite misunderstand my "course." When hav I shown a disposition to point out the weaknesses of my fellow-men and to overlook their virtues? Many times did I say to Mr. Bennett, before his arrest, that I thought he devoted too much space to giving the details of clerical amours and short-comings [8], for that while they showed the clergy were like other men, they did not disprove the doctrines of Christianity. He thought I was too charitable and too lenient to the clergy. And although at this very time he was writing letters to a young woman asking her to become his mistress [9], and speaking disparagingly in these letters of his wife—who is his superior in every moral quality, yet you think he is a very generous and charitable man, and that I am disposed to be too severe on the failings of a brother Liberal!

Now, I repeat what I said in a former letter, that I hav never done Mr. Bennett a wrong [10], and I will add that I bear him no ill-will [11] and wish him only good [12]. I see clearly that your estimate of him is one which time only will correct, and I shall make no further reference to him [13]. My excuse for writing thus much in relation to him is that your letters indicate that you hav formed an opinion of my "course" without a knowledge of the circumstances under which I hav acted. I hav not written to injure Mr. Bennett [14], but to put myself right.

I am profoundly sorry that you hav such erroneous ideas in regard to Mr. Abbot—a man of clear head and cultivated mind, of the strictest integrity [15], a stranger to every kind of duplicity [16], of the most generous impulses [17], strong in his attachments, a man whose family presents a scene of affection and confidence, and whose life is one of loyal devotion to principle [18]. He has his faults (who has not?) but they are counterbalanced by such noble qualities of head and heart that I almost lose sight of them in the contemplation of his character [19]. I am no hero-worshiper. I can see faults in the best of men, but I am pained when I find a person of your intelligence and worth so utterly unappreciativ of the character of a man like Francis E. Abbot.

B. F. Underwood.

The above is something more than half of the letter, but is all I hav by me at present. I find in it what I consider nineteen falsehoods, and hav numbered them accordingly in brackets. At least two are most positiv falsehoods, as I hav before asserted. One is that I denied writing those letters, and the other is that The Truth Seeker denied it. I hav asked you to point out when and where I denied it, and when and where The Truth Seeker denied it; and though I hav offered you $100 in each case if you would do so, you do not find it convenient to comply. In this connection let me call your attention to your promis to make prompt correction in the last paragraph of your first letter above. I do not think it will damage you to make an apology when you are in the wrong.

I hav within reach three others of your letters of a similar character, to another person, which I will publish if you request it; but four of your letters are probably enough at one time, and quite as many as will be acceptable to my readers. Remember, however, if you wish more of them you can hav them, and next time I will giv you the name of the person to whom sent.

As to my quotations from your two letters in the R.-P. Journal, your statement to the Inter-Ocean reporter, the private one above printed, as well as the one you published in the Index of June 3d, they were mostly made from memory. I see I did not get them exact, though I did not misrepresent you. In your letter in the Journal I now notice you preceded your insinuations about my trying to corrupt and ruin a virtuous woman with an if. But that little word does not in the least detract from the animus of your attack. You cannot escape on an if or a but, and it only makes your case appear worse to attempt it on such frivolous grounds. In view of the fact that you had previous knowledge of the letters and the use that was to be made of them, you did not increase your reputation for honesty by placing your thrust in the subjunctiv mood. It appears, also, that I quoted as from you, the word "libertin," when it was used by your coadjutors, Ellis, Bundy, and Abbot, whom you indorse. Your language, however, bears the same meaning. When to the epithets quoted—which you did use—are added the following vile terms, which you apply to me in your Index article of June 3d, they will more than make up for the one or two I erred in. These are some of them: "Scurrilous attack," "Bennett's malicious thrusts," "vindictiv assaults," "mean and mendacious attempts," "persistently defamed," "trail the standard [of Liberalism] in the dust," "unscrupulous attack," "full of falsehood and vile insinuations," "his lies, scurrility, and abuse," "the insignificance of his influence and that of his paper," "the baseness of his character," "a downright falsehood or a mean distortion of facts," etc., etc.

Allow me to say in closing, and I hope for the last time in this unpleasant theme, that in view of all the false and unfair things you hav said of me, it is pitiful for you now to whine about my attacking you, when I hav simply alluded to one circumstance in your conduct, and which I hav every reason to believe is true and provable. I hav reason to think this, because I obtain the information from Liberals of the very first character, who know of what they speak, and whose word cannot be disproved.

I certainly think the conduct of yourself, and those with whom you co-operated, toward me when I was in prison, was mean and despicable almost beyond precedent. Those letters which you and they hav published and made so much ado about, were private; they did not harm you; they did not harm anybody; they violated no law of any kind; they proposed no crime. You had no business with them; if the style of them did not suit you, you should hav let them alone; they were published to the world, garbled with lying, slanderous and most unjust comments and exaggerations interspersed and sandwiched through them. Thousands upon thousands of papers containing all this were mailed to my best friends with the view of alienating them from me and causing them to become enemies; the object was to break up my business and "crush" me, as you said to good Liberals, must be done. These are facts well known and susceptible of proof. In view of all this, when it is remembered that according to the statement of T. L. Savage, you met Ellis, etc., at Savage's house, when those letters were examined, and it was decided to publish them, that you and Ellis next met in the office of the R.-P. Journal in Chicago, that Ellis had supplied the lies and slanders to the letters, that you pretended to be ignorant of the letters, and that you had come hundreds of miles to examine them to see if they were genuine, when you had known all about them previously, together with all the unkind things you hav said of me since, I am content to leave it with the Liberals of the country to decide whether you hav acted fairly or fraternally by me, and whether you hav now just grounds, upon the plea of injured innocence, to set "the hounds of the law" upon me and deprive me either of my liberty or the little I hav accumulated by the most constant industry and exertion.

I will add that however much I regret writing those letters—and that I hav regretted it I hav several times acknowledged—I would rather go down to posterity as the author of them than to be guilty of the unkind and uncalled-for treatment which you, Ellis, Abbot, and Bundy hav extended toward me. In looking back over the past two years I hav tried to discover what unkindness or impropriety I committed towards you that you should act so cruelly toward me. I am sure it was not charity, love of virtue, purity, or morality that prompted you to such a course; the pretense that it was is only hypocrisy. I think I am correct in ascribing the motiv for the deed to the fact that I had the temerity to help defeat the re-election of your admired friend F. E. Abbot at Syracuse, and in his place elect the grand and good man Elizur Wright. This was my great sin, and for this these sorrows hav been piled upon me. In those harmless private letters you and they thought you had discovered the weapons with which to demolish me, and you plied them with a zeal and intensity worthy of a better cause. It has been a source of deep sorrow to me. If you and your friends hav found the enterprise remunerativ—a paying investment—let us all try to be thankful.

If I hav said an unkind word of you, I hav been forced to it by your most virulent attacks. I hav done nought against you. I regret it all, of course, but I cannot see that I am in fault. I hav endeavored to do my duty, and I cheerfully submit it to the Liberals of the United States whether my efforts shall be recognized, and whether I am still entitled to their confidence and support.

D. M. Bennett.

The Fourth New York Liberal League held a social meeting at the parlors of Mrs. Emily Fernandez at 201 Second avenue on the evening of the 17th inst. Among the business attended to was the admission of five new members and the appointing of Mr. Rawson, Mr. Gastineau, and D. M. Bennett as delegates to represent the League in the Congress at Brussels. After this a few hours were enjoyably spent in music, recitations, and dancing. The evening was pleasantly passed.

Joseph Cook.

BY J. E. REMSBURG.

"Genius," says Webster, "implies high and peculiar gifts of nature, impelling the mind to certain favorit kinds of mental effort." That Joseph Cook is a man of genius few who hav heard or read his lectures will deny. He possesses a very "peculiar gift," and the "favorit kind of mental effort" impelled by this gift is lying. His mental efforts in this direction hav excited the wonder, if not the admiration, of the civilized world. More than a year ago a prominent journal pronounced him the champion liar of the age. Flattered by the compliment, for as such he evidently regarded it, his exertions were at once redoubled, and the falsehoods that hav since emanated from his fertil imagination are marvelous to contemplate. Drop one of his utterances into the crucible of truth, and all that remain are the ashes of a lie. But from these ashes, phœnix-like, arises another and a greater falsehood, aye, a whole brood of them. Expose one lie, and straightway he astonishes you by uttering a dozen more. A complete recital of these fabrications in his own language cannot be given, even did space and patience permit, for they are protected by copyright. A presentation of them all would require the publication of his entire works.

"But these are merely assertions," you say. "It is incumbent upon you to prove the truth of them." This I propose to do. I propose to show that Joseph Cook is a man whose statements respecting any subject are utterly unworthy of credence. I propose to show that he has justly forfeited the confidence and respect of every lover of truth; in short, impeach him as a common liar, and shall proceed to establish the justness of this impeachment by the accumulated testimony of twelve reliable witnesses.

REV. MONCURE. D. CONWAY.

The first witness whom I shall summon is the Rev. Moncure D. Conway, of London. In one of his Monday-noon lectures Mr. Cook took occasion to say that "Moncure D. Conway writes from England that marriage is fit only for common people."

Now Mr. Cook was well aware that Mr. Conway did not write the above, and he is no doubt equally well aware that Mr. Conway did write the following concerning the wilful slander:

"I hav vainly searched the report for any explanation of this extraordinary misrepresentation. I beg leave to say in your columns that it would be impossible for the brain of man to devise or for pen to write a sentiment more abhorrent to my ethical and social opinions than that which Mr. Cook has ascribed to me."

HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Next to "modern science" Mr. Cook's most fruitful topic for lying is the "National Liberal League." It is believed that the recording angel has placed over seven thousand lies to his credit in this matter alone. This very naturally causes the President of the League to express his opinion of the pious falsifier, which he does in the following manner:

"People who liv in glass houses should not throw stones at their neighbors. Rev. Joseph Cook, the favorit Monday lecturer of Boston, has had the temerity to disregard this time-honored dictate of prudence. He charges all those who hav asked for the repeal of censorship of the press, as applied to or through the post-office, as having done it in the interest of venders of obscene literature and the corrupters of youth. He hurls at a whole class of his fellow-citizens epithets which he dares not apply to a single one of them by name, for fear of the law of libel. Such a man, if not a liar, is a coward and a sneak."

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Every reader is familiar with the history of the National Liberal League Congress at Syracuse, where a small minority under the leadership of Mr. Abbot withdrew from the League. Commenting upon the proceedings of the Congress, Mr. Cook said that "the language of the defenders of the successful majority of Free Religionists at Syracuse was so infamous that it could not be reported, published, and sent through the mails without subjecting the newspapers thus publishing it to prosecution." This statement is so glaringly false that even Mr. Abbot, the most bitter enemy that the majority had, is compelled to say:

"We heard no obscene or unreportable word from either side during the whole session of the Congress. This unequivocal statement is due in justice to the majority. We pronounce this [Mr. Cook's statement] as utterly false."

D. M. BENNETT.

Mr. Bennett testifies as follows:

"There are many liars in this country of ours; there are a great number who use slander, defamation, and abuse toward their fellow-beings without the slightest compunction; but there are none who indulge in this kind of recreation more, or who engage in it with greater zest, than the pious mountebank, Joseph Cook."

In reviewing a single lecture of Cook's, Mr. Bennett exposes no less than twenty lies, and concludes by saying, "We will not take the time and space to follow the abusiv reverend defamer in all his falsehoods and slanders." The following may be taken as an example of the manner in which Mr. Bennett nails this score of lies:

"Cook, in speaking of the petition that was sent to Congress in the early part of 1878, asking for the repeal or modification of the postal law of 1873, says the agent for the prevention of vice was very much surprised to see in the list of signatures to it the names of several important firms of New York, whose signatures were forgeries. This is an unmitigated lie. That petition did not bear a single forged name of any firm or any individual. Mr. Cook will be paid a premium of $500 to prove or show that the signature of a single firm in this city was forged to that petition."

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

The following is from an open letter to Joseph Cook, written by Ingersoll Lockwood of New York:

"When a man calling himself a reverend disciple of that teacher who said, 'Love your enemies, do good to those who do evil to you, bless them that revile you,' etc., opens himself in public—whited sepulcher that he is—and pours out the vile stench of slander and falsehood upon the heads of men and women as honest and true as he is mean and low, then I say some one ought to try and take his measure and mark him in legible characters. Such a man are you. Here is what we, Liberals, think of you. Thou, Cook, hadst thou been Adam, thou wouldst hav beaten Eve with thy huge hands for not having stolen more than one apple; hadst thou been Noah, thou wouldst hav gone drunken into the ark and come drunken out of it; hadst thou been Abraham, thou wouldst hav levied blackmail on Pharaoh upon telling him that the woman was thy wife; hadst thou been Lot, thou wouldst hav insisted upon taking out thy two daughters; hadst thou been Jacob, Esau's birthright would hav gone for a promis of pottage; hadst thou been Joseph, Potiphar would hav been a cuckold; hadst thou been with Moses the day he left Egypt, thou wouldst hav fainted by the wayside under thy load of borrowed jewelry; hadst thou been David, thou wouldst hav poisoned Uriah to be the sooner rid of him; hadst thou been Solomon, thou wouldst hav lessened the number of thy wives and doubled the number of thy concubines; thou wouldst hav split the child in two and given each mother a half; hadst thou been Job, the devil would hav won his bet; hadst thou been Ezekiel, thou wouldst hav died in a fit of indigestion from having overeaten thyself in his pastry; hadst thou been Daniel, the lions would not hav eaten thee out of respect for their stomachs; hadst thou been Jonah, the whale would not hav swallowed thee; hadst thou been Ananias, Sapphira would hav been saved, for thou wouldst hav done all the lying."

EDWARD WALDO EMERSON.

While lecturing in the West last winter, Mr. Cook repeatedly boasted of having converted Ralph Waldo Emerson to orthodoxy. A gentleman of Indianapolis wrote to Mr. Emerson, asking whether Mr. Cook's statement was true. Edward Waldo Emerson, a son of the philosopher, received permission from his father to make the following reply:

"DEAR SIR: Some weeks ago my father received a letter from you inquiring if a statement made to you by a friend in Boston with regard to him was true. The statement was that under the influence of Rev. Joseph Cook he had changed his religious beliefs, and accepted the doctrines of the orthodox Congregationalists. My father receives many letters, but now very seldom writes one. More than once before, letters hav been received by him from persons in the West asking almost the same question that you ask, one gentleman stating that at Minneapolis Rev. Joseph Cook had stated in a public lecture that Mr. Emerson and Mr. Alcot had publicly renounced their early religious beliefs, accepted Jesus as their savior, the Bible as divine, and joined the orthodox church. Paragraphs hav lately appeared in the newspapers stating essentially the same thing. Therefore it seems to me fair that persons who hav been perhaps led out of the old paths by Mr. Emerson's teachings and are now told that he has admitted that he went astray and has returned to even a stricter fold than that from which he went forth should know the truth. I therefore asked and received leave from my father to answer your note.

"The statement is in every respect incorrect. Mr. Emerson is acquainted with Rev. Mr. Cook, who has called upon him, when he has exchanged with the orthodox clergyman at Concord, and, by invitation of the latter gentleman, Mr. Emerson went on one or two occasions, several years since, to hear Mr. Cook preach in this town. Except on these occasions Mr. Emerson has never had any relations with Mr. Cook. He never reads his lectures. He has not joined any church, nor has he retracted any views expressed in his writings after his withdrawal from the ministry. His last words given to the public on matters of morals and religion may be found in his paper in the North American Review for June, 1878, on the 'Sovereignty of Ethics,' and in his lecture entitled 'The Preacher,' delivered to the divinity students at Harvard University less than a year ago, and now printed in the Unitarian Review for January, 1880.

"Mr. Emerson's friends and readers can judge for themselves whether these papers confirm the truth of the tale that is going about as to his conversion to orthodoxy.

"Truly yours, EDWARD WALDO EMERSON."

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

Cook's slanders are not confined to the living, as those who hav heard his venomous tirades against Thomas Paine and Theodore Parker can testify. It was after hearing his lecture on the latter that Emerson exclaimed:

"He [Cook] shall not enter my house. He has slandered my friend Theodore Parker."

MOSES HULL.

Our next witness is Moses Hull, who at the Bennett Reception gave the following bit of evidence respecting the veracity of the great orthodox champion:

"And when the Rev. Joe Cook took up the matter it was my lot to answer him. He stood there with books in his hand, and Joseph Cook lied. I will tell you how I can prove it. He gave us the page and the paragraph of a book that he quoted from; then he read directly the opposite of what it said. I got up the next Sunday morning and read the paragraph, and it was exactly opposite in sense to the way he read it, and it was reported in the daily paper. Some friends went to the gentleman and said: 'Mr. Hull says you lied; pretty near proved it. He had the very document in hand you quoted from. He challenges you to meet this thing.' 'No,' says he, 'I cannot do it.' 'Why not?' 'Oh, the difference in our social status is so great that I could not; if it were not for that probably I would meet him.'"

If Mr. Cook would only allow me to place a proper construction upon his words, quoted by Mr. Hull, I would gladly credit him with the utterance of one truth. The difference in the social status of these gentlemen is great But that Cook wished this social difference to be understood in the inverse order to what it really is, and thus intended to lie, is evident.

JAMES HOLMES.

About the first of January Mr. James Holmes, Vice-President of the London Secular Society, came to this country, and after lecturing in New York and other places was engaged for a course of lectures at Paine Hall, Boston. Of course his lectures were not gauged by the Monday-noon standard, and this so exasperated the Boston giant that he accused the Paine Hall folks of employing a "ranter." Mr. Holmes "talked back" in the following style:

"What is a ranter? It is a person who shouts and raves, making statements without proofs, and will not allow any one to discuss in his presence any remark made or statement enunciated by him. Joseph Cook shouts and raves, making statements without proofs and contrary to facts (notice his statement about Emerson), neither will he allow discussion in his presence; therefore Joseph Cook is a ranter.

"But the person at the Paine Hall neither shouts nor raves, makes no statements without proofs, never lectures without allowing the audience to criticise and discuss all points raised by him; therefore he is not a ranter. My reply to Cook is that he has told another falsehood, which proves that he is only a buffoon, a wind-bag, and a coward; for he attacks persons by calling them foul names in the pulpit, or coward's castle, where he knows the law protects him and puts a muzzle on the mouth of the person attacked. I hereby assert that Cook dares not meet in open debate any representativ Freethinker in either Europe or America."

REV. DR. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

A short time since a literary club called the St. Botolph was formed in Boston, and Cook felt constrained to put his elephantine foot upon it. He asserted that it was an intemperate organization, that it authorized the use of wines and liquors in its rooms, and that he possessed the official documents of the club certifying to the fact. The Rev. James Freeman Clarke, a member of the club, makes the following emphatic denial, and fastens the charge of wilful lying upon Cook:

"The St. Botolph club has never announced or published anything about the use of wine or spirits; and it has never taken any action or passed any resolution upon the subject. . . . When Joseph Cook gained 'great applause' for denouncing the club and the clergymen belonging to it, for 'flaunting its announcement in the face of New England,' it had made no announcement at all. When he said that he held in his hand a document making this announcement, authorized by the signatures of men whom he professed to respect, no such document existed."

DR. J. R. MONROE.

Joseph Cook is the self-constituted chief of the Ingersoll Answering Bureau. His favorite argument consists in asserting that Col. Ingersoll favors the dissemination of obscene literature. He got to telling this to the Indiana people some time since, when Mr. Monroe gave him the lie in good Hoosier style. In his Seymour Times, the Doctor says:

"Rev. Joseph Cook represented Col. Ingersoll as being in favor of removing all restraints against the circulation of corrupting literature. Joseph is a man of great physical talent, but in thus representing Robert he propagated a campaign lie of much magnitude."

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL.

But Robert bided his time, and when the other night he stood before an audience of four thousand of Mr. Cook's Boston neighbors, he gave the holy man such a punishment as he will not soon forget. Col. Ingersoll said:

"Rev. Joseph Cook has taken it upon himself to assert that I was in favor of the dissemination of obscene literature. When he made that statement he wrote across the forehead of his reputation the word 'liar.' He is a low and infamous man. Meanness cannot descend beyond the level of him who will endeavor to blacken the reputation of another simply because he could not answer his argument. I despise, I execrate with every drop of my blood, any man or woman who would stain with lust the sweet and innocent heart of youth. That man says to an audience what he dares not say to me, and in my presence he would cringe and skulk like a whipped cur."

The Boston Bigot in Ithaca.

"What are we?
And whence came we? What shall be
Our ultimate existence? What's our present?
Are questions answerless and yet incessant."
—Don Juan.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The Boston bigot, Joseph Cook, was with us last evening, and delivered himself of considerable abuse, together with his lecture, "Does Death End All?" The house was not full, and many seats were empty.

The appearance of Mr. Cook is extremely ludicrous, as I heard before the lecture, and was convinced of while listening to him. His head is not what might be called intellectual, and his general appearance is that of a clumsy, overgrown person who spent half his time in drinking beer and the other half in studying the law of Moses.

I would endeavor to quote from his remarks in the course of what I hav to say were I not afraid of misrepresenting him in the same clumsy, bigoted manner that he misrepresents almost every opponent whose name chances to be the object of his abuse.

The main "points" of his lecture you are doubtless familiar with through his published works; and if the oblivion to which those works are consigned, and the utter silent contempt which the greatest scientists show to their author, do not answer them, they may remain unanswered, and he may thus consider them "unanswerable" if he wishes.

He seemed to conclude that the cell (or sell, may be, for such he and his lecture seem to be) was alone sufficient to answer all the arguments of the grandest Freethinkers of to-day. As if Haeckel did not explain every form of life, from the slime of the sea up to the brain of Byron, as conclusively as any unmathematical proposition can be explained to-day.

The church considers Mr. Cook a deep thinker, and, in regard to definitions, he is, in one sense. (See his definition of the difference between chastisement and punishment, in James F. Clarke's "Orthodox Views of the Atonement Examined"); and with these definitions before him, that may turn on any quibble, it is almost interesting to see the eager, inquisitiv spirit with which he dives into the names of Voltaire, Thomas Paine, etc., who hav done more good individually each decade since their works were published than a jury of Cooks could do harm from now to the last judgment, which is saying considerable, but which will appear true, I think, when we come down to a last analysis of his orthodoxy and biology.

In speaking of the cell, or sell (and if you can divine which he refers to, don't, for God's sake, misrepresent him), he places great stress on its power to divide and yet be a perfect cell, but he demanded an intelligence to rule the job, so that a beast's cell (or lair, maybe) should not become a man's cell (prison-cell, likely), or possibly the great sell of the season, that Mr. Cook is proprietor of, or it may be the cell in the insane asylum that his friends intend to furnish for him. So thus might we say that two is a number capable of being divided, double-squared, etc., and yet it remains a perfect number without the aid of any intelligence. And should we suppose the presence of an intelligence equal to that of God, Christ, or even Joseph Cook, it could not, by any scriptural or other science, create any properties of the figure two that hav not always existed, and which will not exist, trillions of ages after the false logic of Mr. Cook has ceased to be, even though death does not end all his petty, selfish existence.

At the close of his lecture he took occasion to speak of Ingersoll and Bennett and the position taken by the United States Liberal Leagues in regard to the imprisonment of Mr. Bennett in the most illogical, vile, abusiv language I ever remember of hearing from a public platform; and as a grand finale, he flourished himself about for five or ten minutes with the Bible in his arms till the accumulated filth and bigotry of sixty centuries seemed to stalk before him like Banquo's kings and the church's champion of the nineteenth century clasp hands with Torquemada, Constantine, David, and Moses.

Josephus Cook, my Cook, Joe,
Before I met your trash
I did not think that God himself
Could write such heavenly hash;
But now, since thy biology
And other stuff I know,
I can believe that fools still liv,
Josephus Cook, my Joe.

Josephus Cook, my Cook, Joe,
We're living now together;
The future is before us, though
We both find different weather.
Take your heaven, harps, and Jesus,
If I to hell can go
With Byron, Holyoake, Shelley,
Josephus Cook, my Joe.

Allow me to congratulate you, Mr. Bennett, on your release from the Inquisition, and consider me as one who wishes to see you advance in everything that leads to universal liberty and humanity. T. S. RYMAN.

The Religion of Nature.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In this, our day, there is much discussion on the subject of religion, each one taking sides with this or that theory or school of thought which seems the most reasonable or attractiv to their mental, moral, affectional, or spiritual status. And as individuality of thought is tolerated by many very worthy men and women, I ask for sufficient space in your columns to giv my view of religion.

To me religion, when properly defined, means the spiritualization of the whole personality—mental, moral, and affectional consciousness.

Does any one ask what I mean by the spiritualization of the whole personality? then will I define my position, thus: The life principle in man as an individual personality being the product of the positiv and negativ principles acting in harmony together more or less perfectly, in accordance with surrounding conditions and relations, demands proper food and clothing to keep it sustained and protected. Nor is this all. It needs genial associations for its possessor, to keep the fires of life burning with a steady and constant flame, which can only be supplied by moral accountability and spiritual intuition or consciousness. And what is here meant by moral accountability and spiritual intuition or consciousness is this:

Universal humanity being the legitimate fruit of the action of natural law, makes us all brothers and sisters, or one vast family, bound together by such links as attraction and repulsion, we must not forget the necessities of any soul while seeking to provide for our own individual needs in any and every direction. And when those needs are provided, to ask for more is selfishness in the extreme.

Look at the grass, the grain, the flowers, or even the grand old forests! Each individual stalk, plant, or tree draws from nature's inexhaustible fountain of earth, air, sunshine, and shower just what it needs to unfold and perfect its individuality, and no more, for the good and sufficient reason that there is no place provided for its storage or accommodation. What should this teach you, O men and women of to-day, but this: That moral accountability and spiritual intuition or consciousness demand this recognition, and in such a way that all shall be provided with life's necessities before any begin to hoard?

This is the religion of nature; and in order that man may be qualified to pattern after the teachings of nature, the mother of us all, his mental, moral, and affectional capacity must be harmoniously unfolded, or in other words, spiritualized and refined. JULIA C. FRANKLIN.

Ingersoll's Brain.

Mr. Edgar C. Beall, a well-known phrenologist of this city, who recently examined Mr. Ingersoll's head, thus describes it and his mental qualities:

"The most conspicuous physical peculiarity of this great champion of humanitarianism is his remarkable size as regards both body and brain, the latter measuring twenty-three and a half inches in circumference. Size is the measure of power in everything, provided all other conditions are equal. Ingersoll's brain is unusually large, and is abundantly nourished by his extraordinary nutritiv system, or "vital temperament," which is indicated by the capacious abdominal and thoracic development, also by the fullness in the cheek. The activity and fine quality of this cerebral organization are very perceptible to the phrenologist. The texture of the whole structure is characterized by delicacy and sensitivness, rather than density, firmness, and toughness, hence we may expect the brain to exhibit corresponding susceptibility, impressibility, and facility of operation. Other important indications are observable in the appearance of the skin upon the forehead, peculiar solidity and temperature of the frontal bone, etc., but especially in the relativ extent upward and forward from the opening of the ear, which is the basis of all cerebral measurement, being on a line with the medulla oblongata, or terminus of the spinal cord, which is the center of brain growth. If an imaginary straight line be projected from the opening of the ear to the top of Ingersoll's head, the amount of brain back of this line will be seen to be very great, indicating a very large development of the cerebellum and occipital region, which contain the centers of the social and domestic faculties. Accordingly, nearly every page of Ingersoll's writings contains some pure, tender, and beautiful reference to the family and the fireside. The head is moderately broad immediately above and forward from the openings of the ears, though sloping very considerably backward and upward from this region, indicating rather large 'alimentivness,' and more 'destructivness' than 'combativness;' that is, more executivness than aggressivness. It is said that Ingersoll is more illiberal and aggressiv than the church; but the truth is, very few men are so decidedly deficient in the disposition to attack, and at the same time so wonderfully sympathetic and generous. Nothing could be more unjust than to accuse Ingersoll of aggressivness. He is incapable of fighting, except in defense of those he loves, and he loves all mankind. He has enough 'destructivness' to giv keenness to his sarcasm and incisivness to his wit, but this faculty is so dominated by 'benevolence' that he could never possibly be cruel. His head is very narrow at the sides, a little above and forward of the tops of the ears, indicating a marked deficiency of 'acquisitivness.' At first glance the head may appear to be broad at this point, owing to the large development of 'ideality' and 'constructivness,' which are located a little farther forward, but the calipers, or a pressure of the fingers, readily shows the relativ narrowness both here and at 'secretivness,' which is located just behind 'acquisitivness,' or just above the tops of the ears. With this combination Mr. Ingersoll must be exceedingly frank, outspoken, above-board in all his dealings, and incapable of falsehood, treachery, or deceit. Many people believe, or affect to believe, that he lectures simply for money. Impossible! It is a physical fact that he is remarkably deficient in 'acquisitivness,' and nothing is more absolutely foreign to his nature than selfishness. He must be as artless as a child, and of the feeling of avarice he can not form the slightest conception. 'Firmness' is one of his largest developments, and is shown in the distance from the ears directly to the top of the head. This giv great persistence, and, combined with 'conscientiousness,' confers great moral stability.

"The organs of 'approbativness' and 'self-esteem' in the crown of the head are also well developed, but not in excess. There is not enough of the former ever to manifest vanity, while the latter coalesces with 'firmness,' giving steady self-reliance and dignity, without arrogance or imperativness. 'Hope' is fairly developed, but subordinate to the intellect. The organ of 'wonder,' or 'credencivness,' called by some phrenologists 'spirituality,' is quite deficient, which allows the intellect to pass judgment upon everything of an extraordinary nature without any prejudice in its favor. Such a mind prefers to be guided by the pilot rather than by the inflated sails. 'Submissivness' or 'veneration' is very well developed, and indicates a becoming degree of respect and reverence for superiors, aged persons, the opposit sex, and for any great and good object which his intellect deems worthy of honor. The largest development of 'veneration' never insures reverence for any object not esteemed by the intellect. It is entirely blind, and is always directed to its objects by means of education. The size of this organ is indicated by the distance from the opening of the ear to the center of the top head. The key to Ingersoll's character may be found in his extraordinary 'benevolence,' which giv great fulness and elevation to the supero-anterior part of the head. Unbounded philanthropy, kindness, liberality, and charity penetrate every fiber of his being. He is the personification of affability, and charms every one with whom he comes in contact. He has large 'constructivness,' while 'ideality' inspires in his writings many gems of remarkable beauty, and lends a rich charm even to his sarcasm. Intellectually, his strongest faculties are 'comparison' and 'language.' The latter is indicated by the fullness of the eyes, while 'comparison' givs prominence to the center of the upper part of the forehead.

"He reasons chiefly by induction, gathering facts and comparing them. In his lectures he rarely uses syllogism, but illustrates his ideas by word pictures. His 'eventuality' and 'individuality' are also very large. These giv fullness to the middle of the forehead, and confer observation, memory of events, talent for history, and general scholarship. His 'comparison' makes him a teacher and a critic, and is the source of his elegant poetical figures, such as the following, written of the late Rev. Alex. Clark, and quite applicable to the author himself: 'His sympathies were not confined within the prison of a creed, but ran out and over the walls like vines, hiding the cruel rocks and rusted bars with leaf and flower.' Taken all in all, Robert G. Ingersoll's character is a grand one, and whatever defects he may hav, he is certainly moved by the highest sense of duty, and by the most sincere love of mankind. His daily life is a refutation of the doctrin of total depravity, and of the belief that men can be noble and pure only through the influence of supernatural forces. With such a noble brain, although from boyhood a disbeliever in supernaturalism, Ingersoll must be a noble man."

An Open Letter to Col. Robert G. Ingersoll on the Financial Question.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Dear Sir: I hav often thought within the past year that it was a little strange that a man of your ability and sincerity did not look into the financial questions of to-day and become a Greenbacker, and help break up the old ideas of money. But it is a hard matter for us to see things in a radically different point of view from all our early training—or lack of training on financial, and labor questions—political, religious, and social.

I would not find fault with your work, for I think that the greatest obstacle in the way of human progress is religion, or the redeemer business.

Last fall I thought that I would just throw out a suggestion to you on the redeemer subject in connection with the financial question, not because of my wisdom, but because a truly wise man may and often does learn from a fool.

My thoughts ran much as follows when I first thought of writing to you:

Jesus Christ having been the redeemer of mankind long enough, let men, women, and children—the trinity of humanity—be taught to redeem themselves for this life and its work, instead of looking so much heavenward for the washing of the blood of the lamb.

I think our great aim as a people or nation should be to place all in a condition to be their own savior by supplying labor and money. Not slave labor, but labor equitably divided, and rewarded by fiat money. Not money that must be redeemed before it can go back to its creator—the government.

Gold, silver, copper, etc., hav been the redeemers of other kinds of money, so called—state bank notes, United States notes, national bank notes, etc.—long enough.

Is it not about time for labor—or the people—to rise and make a kind of money for all, that shall be a full legal tender for all debts, goods, labor, etc., within the domain of the nation? (When dealing with other nations the balance can be settled according to agreement.) Money good enough not to call for a special redeemer; money that is redeemed in every business transaction, the same as humanity must be redeemed by its daily life? Having no special redemption day (Jan. 1, 1879), or special visitation of the Holy Spirit day, called conversion of the soul; which must come just when Jehovah (Father, Son, or Holy Ghost; God, fiend, or fool) may desire; and the redemption of money, so called, just when the money kings (usury mongers, gold and stock gamblers, etc.) who concoct the whole plan (the same as the priests and ministers do God's plan of redemption) may wish to renew their grasp on the people and perpetuate their power.

Again, Money good everywhere as long as it lasts. When worn out, let it be replaced by its creator (United States—us); the same as man lasts until he is of no use, when he goes to decay and makes room for another. I hav said more than I thought to at first. If in reading the above some hidden thought is brought to light in your mind on the financial question, I shall feel that I hav helped on the great political, religious, and social (r)evolution which I think is now taking place in the world. I think we (United States) ought to take the lead.

Respectfully yours, C. A. MARSHALL,
National-Greenback-Labor-Socialistic-Communistic Liberal.

THE Hornellsville, N. Y., Liberal League holds weekly meetings every Sunday afternoon in Dr. Shuttuck's Opera House. One of the members usually delivers an address. For the next few Sundays the platform will be occupied by speakers from out of town. Among these will be Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, and O. P. Kenney, of Waverly. H. L. Green will speak there on Sunday the 20th inst.

I UNDERSTAND that Gen. Garfield, whom the Republicans hav nominated for President, is a great bigot and a "God-in-the-Constitution man." If that be so, I hope no Liberal will vote for him. We should all wait until after the meeting of the National Liberal League Congress before we decide for whom we shall vote. We don't want another Mrs. Hayes and husband in the Presidential chair. H. # Letters from Friends.

WALLA WALLA, WASH. TER., June 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Old Friend: Happy am I to know you are among us again. I hope those Christian bigots will profit by this lesson and learn to let you alone in the future. I am extremely happy to learn your health was not at all impaired. I wrote you twice while in prison, hoping to cheer you somewhat in your lonely prison-cell and help you to bear your burden.

Now I wish you to send the good old messenger of light and love, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for three months to P. J. Kelly, Walla Walla, candidate for the Legislature. I want to post our law-makers on the Liberal League movement.

Dr. Dean Clarke completed a series of lectures before our society. He is now speaking in Walla Walla to large and appreciativ audiences. Mr. Clarke is an able speaker, and should be kept in the Liberal field. He has been working for the cause for fifteen years. Yours very lovingly,

WILLIS MCDANNALD.

MILWAUKEE, IOWA, June 15, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Your article in reply to the letter of Underwood, and your allusions to what might be expected would be revealed in regard to his social doings, only strengthens me in an opinion long since formed and substantiated by multiplied evidences; i. e., that those who are so ready to cry out against others are not usually very discreet themselvs. In fact, of all the vociferous cries against freedom, socially, and pretenders to so much of immaculate virtue themselvs, I hav never known one whose life would bear scrutiny.

I hold that a man is sovereign over his social life as well as his religious and political, that he may act wisely or foolishly, as he must from his organization and environments; and so long as he interferes with the personal rights of no one, granting every one else the same rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness that he asks for himself, no one has any right to interfere with his life in any way; and if impertinent meddlers take upon themselvs the task of criticising him, he is not bound to explain or attempt to justify his actions; it is simply no one's business but his own. If he acts on a low plane of social life he must take the consequences the same as he must if he acts from an undeveloped spiritual nature.

There is nothing so impudent, unmanly, and detestable as meddling with other people's private lives, prying into their social affairs, prating of their relations in a suspicious manner. But when certain persons erect a standard by which others must be measured, judged, condemned, or otherwise, when they assume the censorship of the morals of others, they at the same time become subject to public inspection and criticism; and what under other circumstances would be a piece of impertinent meddling not to be indulged in by any fair-minded, honorable person, becomes a duty.

I hold that any man who does not admit by word and action that every one has a right to liv socially as he pleases, so long as he accords to every other person the same right, should be scrutinized closely, and his life, if it does not accord with the standard by which he judges others, should be made public. Expose the frauds, and compel these self-righteous Pharisees to liv such lives as they wish people to think they do. Let there be a shaking among the dry bones until every man is known just as he is, not as he appears to be, and soon this nauseous interference and gossiping will cease, and private letters or other affairs will not be paraded before the public gaze.

Persons devoid of honor must sometimes be held in check by fear. Only cowards assassinate in the dark or strike a man when he is down. Then go for these cowards with the Damascus sword of truth, and giv no quarter until honesty takes the place of pretense and true purity of man-made institutions, when honor will mean something more than merely to keep within the law, and every man's private life will be held sacredly his own. "Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may!" Yours for truth,

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M.D.

FREMONT, O., June 19, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In your issue of last week I see the emissaries in the camp of true Liberals are showing themselvs in their true character. Notwithstanding I hav great sympathy for you, I rejoice at this exhibition of Underwood. This part he is now acting is the necessary sewerage for all the vile slander I am convinced he has assisted to concoct. You hav nothing to lose in any fight with him, either in or out of court, and it will result in a good disinfection of our party. It is the hissing of the viper from the home thrust you hav given him. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." Be courageous, manly, and honest, as we feel that you hav been, and the issue will be yours. Could I see and talk with you, I, too, could tell something of strange significance, but I will not write it. Yours, W.

NEWARK, N. J.

FRIEND BENNETT, Dear Sir: You will doubtless recollect that I complained to you recently orally and hav written to your office twice during the past year, that I received only about one in four of the copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER. As I was assured that my paper was mailed regularly and directed plainly, I entered a complaint to our postmaster. But after all, I hav received only about one number per month. There has been something exceedingly mysterious about the matter until to-day, when a helper was overhauling the old papers and rags that are thrown into the rag-sack, when he handed to me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER that had never been taken out of the wrapper, saying: "You hav never read that paper. Don't you want it?"

"If you find any more," I replied, "save them for me."

After he had finished the job of overhauling and selecting everything that a dealer in old paper would purchase, he brought to me about a dozen TRUTH SEEKERS, in their wrappers, just as they were delivered by the letter-carrier. Well, the question then was, how did those numbers get into the rag-bag?

Allow me to giv my theory of the mysterious disappearance of my papers. There are in the house one Scotch Presbyterian, another blue-nosed Connecticut Presbyterian, both of whom cannot employ language adequate to the proper expression of their bitterness toward every person and every suggestion and opinion that does not coincide with their orthodox notions of the Bible. They cannot express half the righteous abhorrence they feel toward any one who will not swallow the orthodox creed without offering a single suggestion touching its truthfulness and reliability; and they hold up both hands in holy horror at the depraved and utterly lost condition of any one who is unwilling to accept the most ridiculous inconsistency found in the Bible. As for reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, that is an unpardonable enormity. They cannot bear to hav the paper delivered at the house. The conjecture is that those missing numbers of my paper were hurried as soon as delivered to the rag-bag. May the rag-bag not be the place to look for the missing numbers of many other subscribers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who hav failed to receive their numbers, and who hav thought that the papers were taken by employees in the post-office department? Some of my nearest relations lament that I am lost forever, because I take any pleasure in reading your paper. Let your readers who fail to receive their papers regularly, look in the rag-bag, or keep a watchful eye on the papers employed to kindle fires, rather than blame the post-office department for not delivering their numbers in due time. These holy women alluded to seem to feel that they are doing the best thing possible for my everlasting welfare by keeping your paper from me. No doubt they will receive their reward.

SIGMA.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 6, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In congratulating you on the termination of your unjust and iniquitous punishment, I cannot refrain from viewing the great personal injury and suffering you hav been compelled to endure but in a spiritual light. It is true, you hav the universal applause, in which I participate, of all the philanthropic world for your bold championship in the cause of liberty—liberty of person, liberty of thought, and liberty of speech—and you hav been suffering for your humanitarian labors a silent martyrdom in a gloomy prison for the space of over a year, deprived of all the comforts of social life, while those subordinates of nastiness and perfidy, Anthony Comstock and Judge Benedict, those two buzzards under the name of prayerful Christianity were quietly sleeping on their sanctimonious, downy pillows. The consciousness of having done a good man's duty in the enforcement of the inalienable principle of human rights has no doubt greatly sustained you in your hours of irksome solitude; but I naturally ask myself, is this all? Is the brief idolization, the well-merited applause, the congratulations of all good and lofty-minded thinkers, all the reward due you for your holy example for your few remaining years of earthly existence? Don't laugh. Spiritualists can readily anticipate my answer.

I feel myself highly complimented in receiving THE TRUTH SEEKER, so long over due. Please find $4.00 for its continuation since since Jan. 1, 1880.

Truthfully yours, DAVID BRUCE.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Everybody that's on board the ship of progress seems delighted to know that the captain (D. M. B.) is once more at the helm directing her course to that eternal harbor of mental liberty. There is no season so calm but what has its storms, and no storm can spend its fury without its good effect, though we may not be just elevated to an altitude where we can understand and appreciate it. The cyclone of superstition and religious bigots has throughout all past ages been bursting forth, endeavoring to capsize the staunch old ship of progress in their narrow blindness to cause head winds. They hav mistaken the stem for the prow of the ship, and the result is that we are to-day scudding before the wind under close-reefed topsails, making all on board glad at heart to know that every hour is lessening the distance of our destination. Soon the anchor will be cast, the sails wil be furled, and we will be floating on the placid waters of intellectual science, and from the deck we look in the direction from whence we came, and behold what was, but a short time ago, one large united cloud of dark superstition break into fragments by its own force against the solid rocks of reason, then drifting back they are lost in oblivion, never to return. W. H. BISHOP.

CENTRAL, S. C., June 19, 1880.

DEAR BENNETT: My congratulations on your release from the Christian bastile comes in rather late, nevertheless I feel that nothing you may hav heretofore received in that line is any purer or expressed with deeper heartfelt joy over this happy issue than I now feel and hav felt ever since I knew you were once more a free man. Since your liberation my health has been very feeble. My mind has been so much affected by disease that I could not write consecutivly, still your liberation was a liberation to me; and not only to me, but to every true Liberal in America. And now on this morning of my fifty-seventh birthday I offer you my sincere congratulations on your return home to the enjoyment of that liberty you so highly prize and hav so faithfully defended for others. I also wish to extend the right hand of fellowship and kind regards to your noble wife and that worthy, fearless advocate of Freethought, E. M. Macdonald. Too much cannot be said in praise of that man for his labor and untiring efforts to keep THE TRUTH SEEKER up to its original standard during your incarceration.

Well, I see Underwood has got you stirred up to a point of resentment at last. It has taken him a long time to do it. Ever since you put in circulation the petition for the repeal of the Comstock law has Underwood been seeking your ruin. The stand he and Abbot took against you on that occasion gave me their measures and convinced me that they were a couple of galvanized Liberals and ready at any time to be used as a "cat's-paw" by the church aristocracy. I noticed the venom of jealousy in every remark they made about you, and that the slanderous slang of Payne and Peterson against you was a sweet nectar to their cultured appetites for Liberal supremacy. They considered you, not a brother and co-worker in the cause of mental emancipation, but as a dangerous rival to their selfish aspirations. I hav for a long time believed that Underwood and Abbot, and maybe others of their compass, were instrumental in helping to sustain Seth Wilbur Payne in New York for the express purpose of crushing your paper; and, failing in that, they next entered into a conspiracy with "Hannah" while you were in prison. "Hannah," however, failed to prove a successful smasher, whereupon Abbot steps down and out and sneaks off in disgust to suffer in oblivion the gnawings of a butchered conscience. But the indefatigable Underwood continues his unfriendly work of stabbing in the back; but when his hoped-for victim finds him out, and in self-defense faces about, this hero of cultured rascality, as a last resort, has recourse to law, and "the end is not yet."

Well, I believe I will prophesy and close, and my prediction is this: In less than five years B. F. Underwood will belong to some branch of the Christian church and be sounding the gospel trumpet as a converted Infidel.

If you go to Brussels—and I hope you may—may your journey there and back be safe and enjoyable! May your presence at the Convention add fresh laurels to the great cause of mental freedom! If you don't go, may you submit cheerfully to the disappointment, and may everything work for your good and future prosperity! I wish I was able to send you a small remittance to help defray the expenses of you and Mr. Rawson to the Convention; but alas! I am wretchedly poor and in miserable health.

Fraternally, R. M. CASEY.

BOSTON, June 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your notice of the falsifier from Thorndike is worth a ten years' subscription, and inclosed please find enough for one ($3).

Yours truly, J. E. WARREN.

DETROIT, MICH., June 16, 1880.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I commenced taking your paper about a year ago at the soliciation of some Liberal friends as a trial subscriber when you were in Ludlow-street Jail waiting for the decision of Mrs. R. B. Hayes in regard to pardoning you at the request of some two hundred thousand petitioners. As things hav turned out, I am glad you were not pardoned. I am opposed to this pardon-for-nothing business. I think if a person is unjustly imprisoned that, instead of being pardoned, he should hav an honorable discharge and just compensation for all the damages consequent upon that unjust proceeding But you hav done more for the cause of truth and justice by being sent to prison than you could hav done in any other way.

Hundreds hav read and subscribed for THE TRUTH SEEKER that would never hav thought of it had not Anthony Comstock, at the head of his pack of Christian hellhounds, undertaken to crush you out, stop your paper, break up your business, and ruin you. But you hav lived through it. Instead of killing they hav made a hero of you. Instead of breaking up your business they hav made it a great deal better.

If it had not been for the way in which you were persecuted perhaps you would never hav written those letters "From Behind the Bars," nor the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," nor dreamed those dreams about the gods and their convention.

But now I hav come to the conclusion to invest five dollars in Volume I. of the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." I don't know as the second volume is ready yet, but it makes no difference, you will know how to manage that. In another envelope, mailed at the same time with this, I inclosed post-office order for five dollars, which you will please accept for the object above stated, and oblige, Yours, JAMES HALE.

ALLEGHENY CITY, PA., May 9, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Permit me to congratulate you on your return to us from martyrdom. If your imprisonment was worth so much to the cause of religion as Ass Crosby says it was, it has certainly been an event productiv of more benefit to humanity in general than any other of equal appearance that ever transpired, for I am sure it has helped to open more eyes in this locality than anything or everything combined for the last twelve years.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has been run just right since you returned to private life; in fact, it has been as it always was—a paragon. Let it be more paragonic than ever.

I was surprised to get my book yesterday, having paid only one dollar on it. Perhaps you believe Infidels are honest. I hope they may prove to be more so than Christians generally. If not, let us join the Mohammedans. However, I will pay for this volume, as I wish to get the other. I hav been gorging myself on Volume I. to-day; think it is superb.

Inclosed you will find one dollar, if Comstock don't find it first. I will send the other next Sunday if nothing prevents. May you liv long and be happy, as the great and good all should. Yours for liberty, truth, and progress,

J. D. CRAFFT.

JOPLIN, MO., May 11, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Welcome, welcome home. Notwithstanding we hav no Liberal organization here, your many friends are rejoiced to know that you once more breathe the free air of what is falsely known as free America. May Comstock & Co., the bigoted fiends, be removed from the presence of all decent people and devote the remainder of their days in supplication and prayer to their God for the terrible crime of your imprisonment.

I am about to remove from this place to Bentonville, Benton county, Arkansas, to which place you will please send my paper. In my new home—a beautiful little country town of ten or twelve hundred inhabitants, with five churches—there is, besides myself, but one person with the courage to say, "I deny Jesus Christ to be the Son of God or the Savior of the world." I shall doubtless hav many wordy battles with my Christian neighbors; but believing myself in the right, I shall be found ever battling therefor.

Sincerely hoping the many terrible blows you hav dealt bigotry and superstition in the past is but a prelude to the tornado that is gathering all over this country, the source of which is D. M. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain,

Ever your friend, WM. M. CARTER.

JASPER, FLA., June 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, My Much Esteemed Friend: I hav been wishing for a long time to congratulate you on your release from imprisonment in the Christian bastile at Albany until now. An opportunity of so doing has been denied me by the stern decrees of that inexorable necessity which constrains poor men the world over to throw away life, as it were, to gain the poor pittance of a livelihood.

Although not personally acquainted with you, I feel attached to you by ties so indissoluble that nothing can ever sever or destroy them. I cannot now unbosom the pent-up feelings so loudly clamoring for expression, but must content myself by referring you to a letter which I wrote to Mrs. Bennett about the time you were wrested from the bosom of your family, or rather from Ludlow-street Jail.

Our postmaster at this place has recently been playing the role of Comstock by prying into my mail, suppressing some of my letters and papers, and forwarding others to Washington, to be there subjected to examination, passed upon, and returned or destroyed, as the immaculate plenipotentiaries of the Postal Department might decide. Among the papers forwarded to Washington by the immaculate postmaster was the good old Investigator, which has weathered the storms of Christian persecution and intolerance for the last half century. I wrote a detailed account of the transaction to H. L Green, who will doubtless hav something to say through your columns in regard to the unwarrantable, unconstitutional, and outrageous conduct of the aforesaid postmaster of the Methodist-Episcopal persuasion.

I shall make an effort to hav the gentleman (Lee) removed from the position which he has so signally disgraced and some one substituted who will hav more sense than to interfere with other people's mail.

Believe me, your friend and brother, A. J. Oliver.

Osceola, Ind., June 7, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Friend: A deputation to the Brussels Congress ought, I think, to attend from this country. I will pledge myself for $1 if a deputation goes over to represent us. A man's means are sometimes smaller than his aspirations or I might name $10 instead of $1. If our League Constitution is too limited to permit deputies to a Congress like that at Brussels, could we not hav "a two-third vote" of amendment? Yours, F. J. Emary.

Syracuse, N. Y., June 14, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I am at last once more at home after an absence of many months. I wrote you from Raynham, Mass., some four weeks since, inclosing $1 from a lady in Attleboro, since which I hav looked each week for its acknowledgment in The Truth Seeker. I hope it reached you safely.

How much you must enjoy the sunshine and the freedom of locomotion, the "going as you please" and where you please without let or hindrance. I trust your long imprisonment has not impaired your health, for surely you need to be vigorous in body as well as in mind to stand up under the dastardly blows which are being hurled at you. I am afraid we Freethinkers will hav to bear the palm for malice and scurrility before even Christians, that is, if the ex-Reverends, who are known to the world as the "pure and cultured Liberals," are to be accepted as specimen copies. Dear me! so the "consensus of the competent" are not only guilty of transgression of Christian morality but of human decency as well. If it is necessary to "answer them according to their folly lest they be wise in their own conceit," so let it be, though in my own case, no matter how base and low their accusations and insinuations, I hav chosen to abide by the other scripture, "Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like him." But dear Mr. Bennett, don't think me critical, I hav never been in prison for the truth's sake, and the loss of a few friends because of my adherence to my sense of right has not been without compensation, as it has made those who know me love me more. So I hav no criticism for the dreadful things which you bring to light concerning your enemies, only the deepest sorrow that such thing are. Alas! for poor human nature, how low it can fall, actuated by jealousies and a determination to rule.

I am glad your book, written in prison, is so highly spoken of by those who hav seen it. Am glad for all the good that shall come to you in any way. With kind regards to Mrs. Bennett, I am, Faithfully yours,

Lucy N. Colman.

Lowell, Neb., June 11, 1880

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: My Truth Seeker has not arrived this week, so I suppose my three months has expired, but I wish to tell you that you must not stop sending me your noble budget of truth, for we all look for it with such anxiety that it is really indispensable. I did think that I would not take in another Yankee paper, for I hav tried several and found them all filled with empty-headed trash, so I sent home to England for Reynold's Weekly, which I think is the best political paper that is printed there. I do not send any money in this letter, as we hav no money order office at Lowell. I hav therefore to go twenty miles, and I may not be going to town for about two or three weeks. I shall then send you a post-office order, and you can book me a life subscriber, that is, as long as you continue to write such undeniable truths, showing up the stupendous fraud which has blighted the whole world. Labor on; we know we hav truth on our side, and we know the orthodox gentlemen will resort to any mean dodge to impede the progress of Freethought; but rest assured they are like the old woman that took her broom to sweap back the flowing tide. Be not afraid to send me on your paper. It is not because I hav not the money that I do not send it, for, as the Yankee says, I am pretty well "fixed," for I hav a good farm, seven cows, six horses, lots of pigs, plenty of feed, plenty of implements, and some city property, and all paid for. In haste, with best wishes, I am, dear sir,

Yours for truth, Geo. Gray.

Portlandville, N. Y., June 11, 1880

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find one dollar to help bear the expenses of a representation to the Freethinker's Congress at Brussels.

Of course I hav no right to giv an expression as to who shall represent the United States on the subject of Freethought, as I am not a member of any organization to be thus represented. But inasmuch as I am interested in the success of Liberalism and its right to expression in the government of the United States, I would tell you frankly that I am not in favor of letting you go; and if the parties so representing the Liberals of the United States are to be furnished, and the expenses paid, which is very just and proper they should be, I would not be in favor of more than two or four representativs, to be equally represented by both sexes. I would be delighted to hav you go under any other circumstances but the present, as I find that there is nobody connected with Liberalism more competent or deserving of the office than yourself. But I would again urge the necessity of all Liberals of the United States uniting with a firm and fixed purpose of showing their disposition and strength as a political party. I feel that the present time is too favorable to pass without an effort on the part of all earnest Liberals to organize and lay their platform before the country as a rising political party. The people are suffering under the vile hand of governmental oppression. They are anxiously longing and hoping for just relief. Shall we giv it to them, or let them die under the hand of this unjust oppression? Shall the child of love and liberty which has been so tenderly nursed by Liberalism be murdered in the bud of its infancy? God forbid. He that loveth his fellow-man should protect and defend this infant, even to the laying down of his life.

Are there any who are blind to the rising tempest? A moment of the present lost, and the power of the elements will be upon us, to mangle and destroy us in their powerful rage.

Already has the vile monster, union of church and state, begun to show his hideous face in the political platform of the Republican party, and is speaking in language too plain to be misunderstood.

The government should create and establish laws for the individual protection of the natural liberties of its subjects, and not for the suppression of those liberties. It is not for Congress to say, in a free and proper form of government, what shall constitute morality or immorality; it is only for it to say what shall constitute infringement upon personal and national liberties and rights. And whenever Congress undertakes to suppress the social liberty of any person or people—which liberty does not infringe upon or oppress the liberty of any other person or people—it then becomes sectarian and violates the spirit of freedom and equality.

We find that this spirit has been prominently manifested in our Congress for several years, and it is time that this infringement of Congress on personal rights and liberties was nipped while in the bud. And I know of no better time than the present to shape and sharpen up the instrument for the work. When I consider the magnitude of the task, I realize the importance of your personal presence and co-operation in order to consummate the work.

But if you can furnish for yourself a substitute who can fill your place (which I am afraid you cannot) you will hav my hearty approval as a representativ of the United states at the Freethinkers' Congress.

Yours, Peter Soule.

Fabius, N. Y., June 12, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I wrote you last when you were in durance vile. My subscription expired in February last. I should hav renewed it before, but money was out of the question, for bread and butter took it all. We must all try to liv, you know, but sometimes demands are greater than supplies. We want The Truth Seeker just as much, if not more, in adversity than in prosperity.

Inclosed find four dollars, for which send Volume V. of Truth Seeker Tracts, the balance for renewal of my wife's subscription.

The reasons why I wish to hav The Truth Seeker a success are: First, Because it is the only paper that admits all shades of belief to be published in its columns, consequently the only really free paper. Second, It deals in facts and common sense rather than making "culture" a specialty. Third, It makes room for letters from friends, which is as good for Liberals as a class-meeting or love feast among the Methodists. (This Liberal characteristic only a very few editors seem to possess, though so essential to the success of any paper.) Fourth, The outspoken and honest sentiments of its editor, and the logical and common-sense ability with which he vindicates the same. Fifth, The terrible earnestness with which Bennett attacks superstitions and errors of all kinds, however venerable and sacred they may be held to be. Sixth, The variety, as well as the ability, of its correspondents, and the diversity of subjects brought to the reader's notice. Seventh, The pluck and nerve of its editor when prosecuted and persecuted for opinion's sake, whom bolts, bars, racks, dungeons, and even Smithfield's fires cannot intimidate; generous to a fault; childlike and gentle in his nature when unmolested, but, when abused, is a lion at bay, and would die rather than surrender.

These are but few of the reasons which I could name did space permit. Fellow-Liberals, when we hav such a man, "placed in the gap," championing his and our dearest rights, shall we desert him or shall we assist him? I leave it with the good sense of your readers to determine, and trust the result in confidence and hope.

Bennett, we like your grit;
True Liberals admire it.
The truth you'll tell
In spite of ——
Though Christians don't admire it.

You make the churches mad;
Whew! how they do detest you!
See them unite
In holy spite
To hav "Smut-Bag" arrest you.

You, Bennett, just like Jesus,
Together with some others,
Will speak your mind,
Though sure to find
Yourself with martyred brothers.

You "don't scare worth a cent;"
Don't seem to fear the Grundies.
Nor Hannah McNellis,
Joe Cook, and that Ellis,
The Abbots and Crosbys and Bundys.

Oh, I see how it is,
Bennett, you lack for culture,
Though you are freed
From Bible and creed,
You will not ape the vulture.

Friend Leland is a brick,
Though Barbarous they call him;
He knows, you bet,
That Wooden set
That try in vain to maul him.

And there is Mrs. Slenker,
So ready in wit, with pen;
With good sense, common,
This little woman
Defeats our boastful men.

Consensus of the competent!
Pshaw! what's in common sense?
Some theorize
And call that wise,
And with all facts dispense.

The Index is done and busted;
How is it with the Journal?
In vain 'twill strive
To keep alive
By printing lies infernal.

But the old Investigator,
As well as Mind and Matter,
Instruct and amuse,
Though of opposite views;
They help us to gather, not scatter.

Meanwhile keep up discussions,
But don't get mad and swell;
If you can't agree,
Why, you can't, you see,
So treat each other well.

I thought I wasn't able
To take your paper longer;
But, come to think,
'Tis food and drink—
I read it, then feel stronger.

So "send along the paper;
We can't keep house without it."
I'm not able but willing
To spend my last shilling
To help the good cause. Do you doubt it?

Homer A. Billings.

West Newton, Mass., May 9, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Our Hero Friend: What language can express our gratitude that your noble life has been prolonged through the year of your base and unjust imprisonment, and that you hav been permitted once again to rest in the love of your faithful wife, to take your position in the editorial chair, and receive the warm welcomes and congratulations of your thousands of friends? It was a sad disappointmeat to my beloved husband and self not to be present at your reception in New York, where we most certainly expected to be, as I had every reason to think myself engaged to speak for the society now holding meetings in Masonic Temple, for whom I lectured Feb. 15th, and was invited at that time to speak for them again in May, which I gladly consented to do, and was afterwards announced in Mind and Matter as "engaged for May." Informed the correspondent of my willingness, and waited for a reply, which did not come until May 4th, which coolly informed me that another speaker had been engaged, a person who, I think, had he known the circumstances, would not hav accepted the place. I giv him credit for too much manly honor to hav done so. This is our reason for not giving the hand in friendly and paternal grasp instead of using pen, ink, and paper.

Many years ago I said if I was to seek a name expressiv of my religious, political, and social views, I should call myself a "Truth Seeker," and when I saw for the first time your paper, I said, Mr. Bennett has appropriated my name. How much it means, and what an open way it makes for us who are in this mist of ignorance, regarding the great immensity of creation! And how rich are we made when, after hard labors amidst the gloom and darkness, we gather up some golden truths which had we not been seeking we could not hav discovered. We may bump our poor heads and bruise our tender flesh, and even be put in prison, but seek we must and speak we must or write of the good things we hav found, for we are given to the realm of thought and action by a grand, incomprehensible power whom the most of us hav been taught to call God. Though you may be Infidel to all nonsensical notions of a personal being, I can but think you must recognize a superior intelligence moving in all space and all matters. In my "seekings" I came to this conclusion, that the poet's (Pope) definition of God is the best, i. e,

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is, and God the soul."

Some kind poet has also defined my church and pride much better than I could.

"That vast cathedral, mighty as our wonder,
Whose quenchless lamps the sun and moon supply;
Its choir, the wind and waves; its organ, thunder;
Its dome, the sky."

I put these for cornerstones under it, Love and truth, charity and mercy, wisdom and justice, hope and salvation, two under each corner to be sure it is well supported, Pride, "The haughty consciousness of great truthfulness, that makes the spirit faithful unto death and martyrdom itself a little thing."

Now I know you are a member of my church, and that your pride is in keeping with this definition, for hav you not gloriously proved it through your martyrdom, since I clasped your hand in Boston, when you said, "It will be no pleasant thing to go to prison, but if I go, it will be for truth's sake, and I will make the best I can of it." I say, shame on a nation who so belies all its professions of liberty as does our own. "We believe all men are born free and equal, having equal rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The gallows, with a so-called Christian minister in attendance, upon the occasion of breaking a brother's neck, givs the lie to the first. Your unjust imprisonment, with the thousands upon thousands more, giv the lie to the second, and the ungodly spirit of monopoly and legalized robbery giv the lie to the third. A government to protect and sustain a people must not rob and appropriate everything to aggrandise a few men who are only political demagogues, and ride rough-shod over its laboring community. And I hold that that the only power that can govern is love. Force and tyranny may subjugate, but interior rebellion is the result. All seekers after truth will learn this sooner or later, and when moved by the divine quality, will become a power in proportion as they are moved by love. All are members of one family in humanity, and it should be our endeavor to treat all as we would if born of our own mother. Had this been the gospel taught and practiced, you had not been the victim of priestly persecution, you had not been in a prison's lonely cell, nor would there havbeen a prison, for those too weak to do as required would be nursed in safe hospitals, but ever with kindness and love.

Such are some of my views, and I would as soon lecture for Infidels, Universalists, Unitarians, Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, or Catholics as the body of "truth seekers" called Spiritualists, with whom I hav been mostly associated for nearly thirty years. Allow me to congratulate you upon having as leaders in the army of your friends such grand souls as the Hon. Elizur Wright, whose unflinching honesty makes him a hero and a king; Elder Lomas, whose nature seems to be as equally true. I remember him with great kindness and respect as occupying the platform in Philadelphia with me on one Sabbath when I was lecturing for the Spiritualists under the direction of that earnest worker, Henry T. Childs, M.D. His remarks were manly and noble, his appearance earnest, unpretentious, and truthful. Bless his kind heart! May he liv long to labor for human advancement, and work for his brothers in prison.

Be assured, good brother Bennett, that had our pockets been gold-lined you would hav been remembered in a substantial way, but my lame, crippled, yet noble and worthy husband and I hav met with financial disasters that came well nigh wrecking our boat; and poor health has rendered us unable to labor, so we are scratching hard for our own living, when, were we able, we would help everybody who had needs so far as we could. Rest assured, however, that we hav sent you many a purse full of sympathy, thoroughly spiced with indignation since we had the honor of meeting you in Boston. And that you may liv to reap, as did William Lloyd Garrison, the fruits of your grand labors, is the sincere wish of Humanity's friend,

M. S Townsend Wood.

An Odor of Lilies.

It was a day in leafy June,
And the cooling rain fell free,
As I heard two voices in their noon
Singing sweet songs to me.
The soft light from the clouded sky
Fell with a tender gloom,
And an odor of lilies floated by
Through all the scented room.

"Peace on earth, said the rain outside,
As it fell on bud and leaf;
"The light shall shine in the eventide,
And banish the gloom of grief."
And listening there, my soul that day
Drank in a sense of rest;
And the odor sweet of the lilies lay
Like balm upon my breast.

And what the rain in the garden said,
The voices said a-nigh;
They sang of peace to the weary head,
Of light in the clouded sky.
And the beautiful faces haunt me still,
And the voices ne'er depart,
Nor the scent of the lilies cease to fill
The chambers of my heart.

The American Pee Weet.

BY CHARLES BRADLEY.

"Joyful he wakes, secure he sleeps;
His watchful star its vigil keeps,
With power that tunes the chiming spheres;
Throughout their everlasting years."
—George Eliot.

Tweet, tweet, tweet!
Cries the little Pee Weet,
On the shore of the wild, wild sea,
When the waves comb o'er,
The billows break and breakers pour,
With rocky roar,
On the sounding shore
Of the loud resounding lea.
But the little Pee Weet,
With dauntless feet,
Scratches along by the deep
For a bit to eat
And somewhere to sleep,
A nest for his Pee Weets to peep,
All along by the shore,
By the awful shore,
Where lightnings flash
And waves comb o'er,
And thunders roar,
And whirlwind, sleet, and maddened spray
Darken the burning eye of day.
But the little Pee Weet,
With dauntless feet
And wings so fleet,
Flashes in play
Through sleet and spray,
Light as the gleam
Of a merry sunbeam,
Through the droppy stream
Of a shower of an April day.
Along by the shore,
By the dreadful shore,
Where lightnings flash,
And waves comb o'er,
And thunders roar;
And deep under deep
The earthquakes sleep,
And tidal waves
Roll over graves,
Till trump shall shake
The boundless deep
And sounding shore,
And call and wake
The ocean's dead
From their last sleep
Forevermore,
By the thundering shore,
The bellowing shore,
The monstrous shore,
Where the rock rim of the ocean grave
Bends to the terrible kiss of the wave,
And the mad sea its horrible spray
Spits in the dying eye of the day;
But the little Pee Weet,
With dauntless feet
And wings so fleet,
All hid in ferns and grass,
Says: "Beyond his sand line
Is this nest of mine,
Which the howler dares not pass,
The star of love
In heaven above
Rules crawling sea and sod,
I rest in the might of the power divine;
I sleep in the peace of God."

Nathaniel Vaughan.

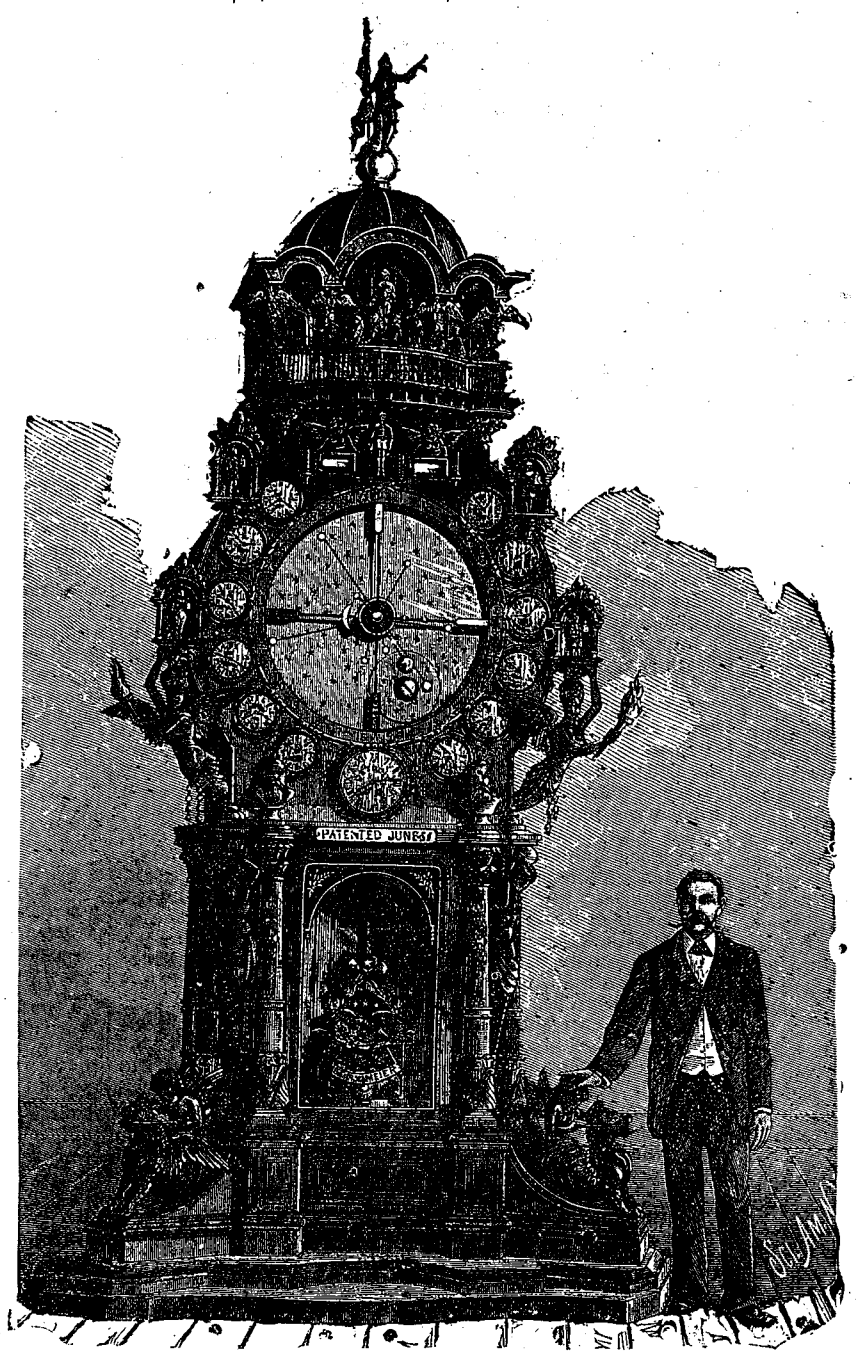
A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.



The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

ON EXHIBITION DAILY AT
TAMMANY HALL, 14th STREET, bet. 3d & 4th AVES., N. Y.

THE WONDERFUL AMERICAN
ASTRONOMICAL CLOCK.

DESCRIPTION OF THE CLOCK.

The clock is eighteen feet in height, eight feet wide by five deep, and weighs five thousand pounds. There are required in the construction of the clock two thousand wheels, besides the great number of shafts, pinions, and other machinery necessary to complete the grand combination. The clock is run by weights which weigh seven hundred pounds, and is wound up once in twelve days. The case or exterior of the clock is entirely of black walnut, and is elegantly carved or engraved in designs appropriate and symbolic of our Republic. Above the main body of the clock is a marble dome, upon which Washington sits in his chair of state, protected by a canopy which is surmounted by a gilded statue of Columbia; on either side of Washington is a colored servant in livery, guarding the doors, which open between the pillars that support the canopy; on the four corners of the main body of the clock are black walnut niches containing human figures, emblematic of the march of life; the two lower ones are supported by two female figures with flaming torches; one of the niches contains the figure of an infant, the second the figure of a youth, the third of a man in middle life, the fourth of an aged graybeard, and still another, directly over the center, contains a skeleton, representing Father Time. All these figures hav bells and hammers in their hands. At the end of every quarter hour the infant strikes upon the bell which he holds in his hand. At the end of each half hour the youth strikes; at the end of three-quarters of an hour the man, and at the end of each hour the graybeard. Death then follows with a measured stroke to toll the hour.

The clock shows local time in hours, minutes, and seconds; the difference in time at Chicago, Washington, San Francisco, Melbourne, Pekin, Cairo, Constantinople, St. Petersburg, Vienna, London, Berlin, and Paris; the day of the week, calendar day of the month, month of the year, and seasons of the year; the signs of the zodiac, the revolutions of the earth on its own axis, and also around the sun; the revolutions of the moon around the earth, and with it around the sun; also, the moon's changes from the quarter to half, three-quarters, and full; the correct movement of the planets around the sun. The inventor has a crank-attachment to the clock, by means of which he can hasten the working of the machinery, in order to show its movements to the public.

A large music box, manufactured at Geneva expressly for this clock, begins to play at the same time that the skeleton strikes the hour, and a surprising scene is enacted upon the platform beneath the canopy. Washington slowly rises from his chair to his feet, extending his right hand, presenting the Declaration of Independence; the door on the left is opened by the servant, admitting all the Presidents from Washington's time, including President Hayes. Each President is dressed in the costume of his time. The likenesses are admirable. Passing in file before Washington, they face and raise their hands as they approach him, and walking naturally across the platform, disappear through the opposite door, which is promptly closed behind them by the second servant. Washington retires into his chair, and all is quiet, save the measured tick of the huge pendulum, and the ringing of the quarter hours, until another hour has passed.

Excursion parties and every man, woman, and child from the East, West, North, and South visiting the city of New York should not leave without seeing this WONDERFUL WORK OF ART, THE GREAT AMERICAN CLOCK. On exhibition daily in TAMMANY HALL, East 14th street, from 10 A.M., to 10 P.M. Sundays 2 P.M. to 10 P.M.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.), $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

As surely as men stifle doubts and crush them blindly out, so surely will they rise up again to haunt them.—Bishop Calloway.

THE truth of fact is what it is—independent, happily, of our notions of it. We do not make truth by recognizing it; we cannot unmake truth by denying it.—Froude.

IF in revelation there be found any passages the seeming meaning of which is contrary to natural religion, we may most certainly conclude such seeming meaning not to be the real one.—Butler.

WHEN anything is said to hav been written by the most merciful God, and the thing is not merciful, then I deny it and say he never wrote it. I will liv by the standard of reason; and if thinking in accordance with reason takes me to perdition, then I will go to hell with my reason rather than to heaven without it.—Ingersoll.

WHATEVER power such a being, the builder and maker of hell, may hav over me, there is one thing which he shall not do. He shall not compel me to worship him. I will call no being good who is not what I mean when I apply that epithet to my fellow-creatures; and if such a being can sentence me to hell for not so calling him, to hell I will go.—J. S. Mill.

YOU tell us to be ashamed of professing ignorance. Where is the shame of ignorance in matters still involved in endless and hopeless controversy? Why should a lad who has just run the gauntlet of examination and escaped to a country parsonage be dogmatic when his dogmas are denounced as erroneous by half the philosophers in the world?—Leslie Stephen.

PERSECUTION for opinion is unjust. With what consistency, then, can the worshipers of a Deity whose benevolence they boast, embitter the existence of their fellow-being because his ideas of that Deity are different from those which they entertain? Alas! There is no consistency in those persecutors who worship a benevolent Deity. Those who worship a demon would alone act consonantly to these principles by imprisoning and torturing in his name.—Shelley.

A UNIVERSAL God ought to hav revealed a universal religion. By what fatality are so many different religions found on the earth? Which is the true one amongst the great number of those of which each one pretends to be the right one, to the exclusion of all the others? We hav every reason to believe that not one of them enjoys this advantage. The divisions and the disputes about opinion are indisputable signs of the uncertainty and of the obscurity of the principles which they profess.—Meslier.

THE tendency of orthodox religion to-day is toward mental slavery and barbarism. No one of the orthodox ministers dare preach what he thinks if he knows that a majority of his congregation think otherwise. He knows that every member of his church stands guard over his brain with a creed like a club in his hand. He knows that he is not expected to search after the truth, but that he is employed to defend the creed. Every pulpit is a pillory in which stands a hired culprit, defending the justice of his own imprisonment.—Ingersoll.

THE clergy pray for rain or fine weather, and on great occasions, such as the potato blight, the archbishop issues a special form of petition for its removal. But the clergy and the archbishop are aware, all the time, that the evils which they pray against depend on natural causes, and that a prayer from a Christian minister will as little bring a change of weather as the incantation of a Caffre rain-maker. We keep to conventional forms . . . but we do not even believe that we believe the bishops themselvs any more than the rest of us—any more than the College of Augurs in Cato's time believed in the sacred chickens.—Froude.

WHOEVER has formed true ideas of the ignorance, credulity, and sottishness of the common people, will always regard their religious opinions with the greater suspicion for their being generally established. The majority of men examine nothing; they allow themselves to be blindly led by custom and authority; their religious opinions are especially those which they hav the least courage and capacity to examin; as they do not understand anything about them, they are compelled to be silent or put an end to their reasoning. Ask the common man if he believes in God. He will be surprised that you can doubt it. Then ask him what he understands by the word God. You will confuse him. . . . He will tell you that God is God, but he neither knows what he thinks of him nor the motives (grounds?) which he has for believing in him.—Meslier.

THE Christian says, "it will not do to be constantly objecting to everything if we would find the truth. Well, why object to the fact when I say there is no god? Why object when I say the Bible is only a book of ancient laws, traditions, poems, and scraps of unreliable history? Why object when I sweep away all traces of angels, devils, ghosts, and demigods? Why object when I prove that no prayer was ever god-heard or god-answered? Why object to believe all you hear and read of all sides of all subjects? Can you not see that no one man objects to any more things than another does? I object to all I cannot believe, and so do you, and so does the Hindoo and Chinese, and the red man of the forest. Every man objects to one side of every subject, and I ask, right here and now, wherein I object to one iota more than you do. These "negation" and "chance" flings, at those who prefer realities to "phantoms of air," and scientific cultured thought to pulpit declaration and denunciation, are about payed out.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

AN Englishman, upon hearing the cackling in a poultry yard, exclaimed, "Oh, this is really hen-chanting!"

YOUNG men persist in hugging delusions, and that is the reason probably that so many young ladies wear those delusion shawls.

IT is not half as much fun to run a lawn mower the last ten minutes as it is when you first commence. Familiarity breeds contempt.

"AIN'T that a lovely critter, John?" said Jerusha, as they stopped opposit the leopard's cage. "Waal yes," said John; "but then he's dreffuly freckled."

IT is only the female mosquito that bites, but when a man gets a chance to belt one with a towel, he's going to do it without stopping to inquire as to its sex.

EVERY time a man truly repents, says Josh Billings, he is born again; but there iz lots ov people who repent every night regular so to be reddy for aktiv bizness to-morrow.

A SCOTCHMAN asked an Irishman why were half farthings coined in England. The Irishman's answer was, "To giv Scotchmen an opportunity of subscribing to charitable institutions."

A LADY lawyer out West always addresses her husband at breakfast as "My learned brother;" at lunch she calls him "the counsel for the defense;" at dinner time she calls him "a brass-mounted pettifogger, with a cheek like an army mule."

A LITTLE fellow, turning over the leaves of a scrap-book, came across the well-known picture of some chickens just out of their shell. He examined the picture carefully, and then, with a grave, sagacious look, slowly remarked: "They came out 'cos they were afraid of being boiled."

SHE was a Boston lady of culture. She stood watching a canal-boat loaded with ice, as it was being locked into the canal from Lake Champlain. "What is that boat loaded with?" she asked. "Ice," was the reply. "Oh, my!" she exclaimed in surprise; "if the horrid stuff should melt, the water would sink the boat."

"WILLIAM, do you know why you are like a donkey?" "Like a donkey?" echoed William, opening his eyes wide. "No, I don't." "Do you giv it up?" "I do." "Because your better half is stubborness itself." "That's not so bad. Ha! ha! I'll giv that to my wife when I get home." "My dear," he asked, as he sat down to supper, "Do you know why I am like a donkey?" He waited a moment, expecting his wife to giv it up. But she didn't. She looked at him somewhat commiseratingly as she answered: "I suppose you was born so."

A SMART young man asked a gentleman from Cape Cod, "What's the difference between you and a clam?" thinking that the Cape Codger would say he didn't know, and then the young man would pity him for not being able to see any difference between himself and a clam, but the thing didn't work. The Codger took the young man and swept a path across the street with him, and then, after crowding him into an empty fish-barrel and yanking him out again, said: "A clam wouldn't be playing with you in this way. That's the difference 'twixt me and a clam." The young man had no more questions to ask.

A CHESTER county boy, aged 12 years, while returning from Sabbath-school fell from the top of a fence and broke his arm. And this is the second time he had the same arm fractured in falling from the panel of a fence, and in returning from Sunday-school. There is a moral in this—but bad little boys mustn't think it teaches that it is wrong to go to Sunday-school. The probabilities are that if this unfortunate boy had been returning from a game of base ball or from fishing, instead of breaking his arm at each fall he would hav broken his neck each time. The moral is, that he should creep under the fence instead of climbing over it.

HOW A LANDLADY REGARDS FOURTH OF JULY ORATORS.—The other morning a young man who had long boarded with an Eighteenth-street landlady, was asked to step into the parlor for a private interview, and when the old lady had him cornered, she began:

"Mr. Blank, you hav boarded with me for a long time, and never before hav I had occasion to find a word of fault."

"Fault to find with me? Why, what hav I done?"

"Well, every night for an hour after you come in, and every morning for an hour before breakfast, we all hear you tramping around and talking about war and liberty and death and so on, and some of my boarders fear that you hav taken to drink."

"Oh, I can explain all that," he cheerfully replied; "I am to deliver a Fourth of July oration out here in a country town, and I am getting my speech ready."

"Is it necessary that you should deliver this speech?"

"Why, no; but I consider it a great honor to be invited to speak."

"I—I wish you'd giv it up," she faltered.

"But for what reason? I'm afraid you don't understand me."

"Oh, yes, I do—I know all about it. Last year seven of the young men of my house went out to deliver Fourth of July orations, and at 2 o'clock in the morning all were lying dead drunk on the hall floor. Of course, I love liberty, Mr. Blank, and I always hav extra boiled eggs and ice-water on the Fourth, but you've no idea how hard these orations are on hall carpets and stair-rods. If you've got to go, I wish you'd make arrangements to hav the police run you in for that night!"

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Dizler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrines, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 27. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, July 3, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A PASTOR of Austin, Texas, preached on "A Tight Squeeze, or the Round Dance."

THERE are sixteen thousand Methodist Episcopal churches in this country. They owe, in the aggregate, seven million dollars on mortgage.

IN Richmond, Va., Sunday steamboat excursions are giving the clergymen a great deal of trouble. The Sunday-school children patronize the excursions.

THE Baptists are in sorrow because a member of the Tabernacle church in Brooklyn, who was worth $300,000, has just died without leaving a dollar to any of the benevolent societies of the church.

IN consideration of the scantiness of his congregation on a summer Sunday, a queer old dominie prayed, "Lord, remember those who are prostrated on beds of sickness and lounges of weliness."

AN old lawyer who went to hear a popular preacher remarked of the style of his opening prayer, "If any lawyer were to address a judge of the Court of Common Pleas in that familiar style, he would at once be fined for contempt of court."

A PLEASANT, cheerful wife is a rainbow set in the sky, when her husband's mind is tossed with storms and tempests; but a dissatisfied and fretful wife, in the hour of trouble, is like one of those fiends who delight to torture lost spirits.

THE Rev. John Morse had a fall from grace, at Dexter, Me., and his presiding elder transferred him to a Methodist church at Calais. That was three months ago; and now, investigation having demonstrated that he is too wicked to preach anywhere, he has been suspended.

A PROTESTANT Episcopal prayer book was recently sold at auction in this city for $350. It was the only one left of an edition printed by William Bradford in 1710. Prayer books sell as low as twenty cents each, and are dear at that price. About a million a year are printed in this country.

PRAYER of a pious Italian who is playing 4-11-44 in the lottery of to-morrow: "Kind heaven, grant that I may win the capital prize, and I solemnly vow that I will giv half of it to the poor. But if you hav any doubts of my honesty, distribute to the poor their half yourself, and giv me the second prize."

"WHAT is the worst thing about riches?" asked the Sunday-school superintendent. And the new boy in the bad class under the gallery, who only came in last Sunday, stood up and said, "Their scarcity." And in his confusion the superintendent told the school to rise and sing, "Don't get weary, children."

"BUT I pass," said the Rev. Mr. Swipes, in dismissing one theme of his subject to take up another. "Then I make it spades," yelled a man from the gallery, who was dreaming the happy hours away in an imaginary game of eucher. It is needless to say that he went out on the next deal, assisted by a deacon with a handful of clubs.

A YOUNG lady at Alden, Iowa, said she "wished to heaven that she might die that day." A terrific storm arose immediately, with thunder and lightning, and she imagined that it bore some relation to her case. Hastening to a church, she knelt and prayed: "O, Lord, I didn't mean it when I said I wanted to die. Please don't let the lightning hit me." The Lord must hav been in an unusual good humor to hav listened to and answered both her prayers.

MISS BECKWITH of England is a plump young woman with great skill as a swimmer. Her latest effort was a thirty hours' swim in a huge tank. Before going into the water a committee of ladies ascertained that she wore nothing that could support her in the water. Then she began her task, and completed it successfully, giving many exhibitions of ornamental swimming. She took coffee and beef tea from a floating table, and in the night amused herself by singing and reading. The latter process she accomplished by floating on her back and holding her book in both hands. This accomplished young person is likely to visit New York this summer.

PERSONS are cationed by Mr. McMaster's Freeman's Journal to be careful how they buy professedly holy objects. Genuine water of Lourdes can be had of priests in this city for a dollar a quart; but as to bits of mortar from the chapel at Knock, it says: "It is sure that there will spring up a host of frauds to deceive the poor Irish people. False priests will be first in the race, fooling the people. We really do not know how bits of the mortar, or the earth around, may be procured. We would like to hav some of the real mortar, or whatever is the material; but we would think twice, and then question if we had what we asked."

ONE of the bills which Congress did not pass at the late session, though it was favorably reported by the committee, was Mr. Ballou's Spelling Reform bill, appointing a commission of seven persons to "examin the orthography used in the public documents and in the public schools in the District of Columbia, and to inquire how much its defects increase the cost of the public printing, and how far they are an impediment to the acquisition and use of the English language and to education." The Committee on Education and Labor, to whom the matter was referred, reported that irregular spelling in the English language "causes a loss of two years of each child's school time," is a "main cause of the alarming illiteracy of our people," and costs "many millions of dollars yearly for teachers and for writing and printing superfluous letters."

THE Rev. R. Schneider, pastor of the German Evangelical church at Mount Vernon, Ind., has eloped with a seventeen-year old girl of his congregation. In commenting on the above, a correspondent writes as follows: "Another heavenly guide gone, no man knows where. Robert Schneider, a man forty years old and pastor of our German Lutheran church, eloped with a young girl of seventeen years, leaving behind him a wife and seven children with $2.10 for their support. Schneider took with him all the money he could raise, including the proceeds of a church fair. The girl's family is one of the first German families of the place, and she herself was a very quiet, modest girl, one whom no one would suspect or accuse of an immoral act. Detectivs are after him, and without stint of money to continue the search until he is found. I think the case will be tried before Judge Lynch, the Lutheran congregation as jury."

PROF. DAVID SWING approves of the action of the Methodist Conference at Cincinnati toward Col. Ingersoll. That Conference had rented the Opera House for their services, and Col. Ingersoll wanted it for the evening. He had no alternativ but to apply to the Methodist clergy, and as they did not themselvs want the hall on the particular evening in question, they gave up the room to the use of the sharp and eloquent antichristian orator. Prof. Swing thinks "it will always be safe to temper with a sunshine of friendship the blasts that blow around the extremists of all schools, social, political, and religious. Our era should tolerate an immense amount of free speech. After tossing up the cap a hundred years in praise of freedom of speech, we would better let men speak on, even when they differ with us, and then if possible make amends for some bad speeches by showing the public what good thoughts also may come from the full liberty of mind and tongue."

MORE clergymen hav sailed for Europe thus far this season than up to a corresponding time in any previous year. It is now considered the respectable thing for every pastor of a self-supporting church to go to Europe in the summer. During the next four weeks a great many more will go. A church which has not sent its pastor to Europe can hardly hold up its head with becoming dignity among neighboring churches which hav sent theirs. Most of the wealthy churches pay the expenses of their ministers in this pleasant way of taking a vacation. In cases where this cannot be managed, and the pastor has no means of his own for the journey, and no rich wife or bondholding relations to fall back upon, a purse is made up for the purpose by a few kindly disposed individuals. But at all hazards the minister must go to Europe. The poorer churches, which are wrestling with oppressiv mortgages, gigantic floating debts, and other financial obstacles, cannot indulge all their desires in reference to treating their pastors to travel. Some of them cannot even pay for supplies during the pastor's absence. With these churches the European trip is not an essential, and the pastors hav to wait until Providence opens for them a wider and more expensiv field of labor.

PROF. FRANCIS NEWMAN, Cardinal Newman's brother, has just delivered an address, in which he advocates the relief of Parliament from local matters, which he would hand over to provincial assemblies. England and Wales are, according to his system, to be divided into nine districts, each called by a pretty name with a Latin termination—Eboracia, Lunia, Mercia, etc. Scotland will be cut up into Pictia and Caledonia; Ireland will hav home rule. Francis Newman's history up to a certain point is identical with that of his brother. Both when young men at Oxford were earnest Christians, and looked to the Anglican church as the best development of Christianity. John Henry Newman diverged toward Rome, and finally entered her gates. Francis moved in another direction. When it became necessary in order to obtain a master's degree to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles, he found himself unable to accept them. He adopted a broader and less dogmatic form of Christianity, which gradually developed into skepticism, and he now occupies in the school of Freethought a position and an influence of the same kind as that which his brother enjoys in the Roman Catholic church. He is the author of the work entitled "Supernatural Religion," considered the ablest treatis on the subject ever written.

MR. CHARLES BRADLAUGH'S preference of an affirmation instead of an oath in the House of Commons was thoroughly characteristic of him and the faithful following out of his early antecedents. In his sixteenth year he was a model young Christian, an enthusiastic Sunday-school teacher, and a promising member of the church of England, but when the bishop of London was announced to hold a confirmation in Bethnal Green, the incumbent of St. Peter's, Hackney-road, in an evil hour, requested his youthful Sunday-school teacher to be prepared with suitable answers to any questions which the bishop might put in regard to the Thirty-nine Articles. This led young Bradlaugh to compare the Articles with the gospels, and, on coming across difficulties, to address a respectful note to his clergyman in order that he might see his way through them. The incumbent, instead of helping the boy out of his troubles, informed his parents that their son had turned Atheist, and suspended him for three months from the exercise of his functions as Sunday-school teacher. Young Bradlaugh refused to attend church during the interval of his suspension as teacher, and soon began to spend his Sundays elsewhere and otherwise. It was the time of the Chartist movement, when thought was in a ferment both in and out of London, and Charles Bradlaugh was soon a regular out-of-door disputant in Bonner's Fields, a suburb of the city, at first on the orthodox Christian side, then as a Deist, then as a full-fledged Atheist. The next step in his career was to become a teetotaler. The crisis of his life now came. The incumbent of St. Peter's had laid the case of young Bradlaugh before the firm of coal merchants by whom he had been employed, and they gave him three days to change his opinions or lose his situation. He gave up both "beer and the Bible," and started out from his father's house a social outcast, being reduced to such straits in his seventeenth year that he enlisted in the Seventh Dragoon Guards, and served with his regiment for three years in Ireland. Inheriting from his aunt, in 1853, a small property, he bought his discharge from the army and began his studies for the bar, lecturing frequently before Freethought institutions, and taking radical ground on every question that came up. In 1862 he compelled an Anglican clergyman to pay £100 and the costs in a suit for libel affecting his wife and daughter, and yet withheld the name of his assailant from the public in order that the priest might not be degraded from his office. His recent preference of the declaration to the oath in the House of Commons is of a piece with his early questionings, and the church of England has to thank a blundering clergyman for the radicalism of one who knows how to hit hard, and whose position among the British Radicals is one of unquestioned power. Mr. Bradlaugh is now in his forty-seventh year.—Times.

THREE murderers, all under twenty-one years of age, were hanged at Canton, Ohio, on the 25th ult. Two of the boys were Catholics and one was Protestant.

AN engineer of a fire engine at Asbury Park, N. J., was so frightened at the prospect of a boiler explosion that he fainted, remaining unconscious fifteen hours.

A DESTRUCTIV storm visited Napanee, Ont., on the 20th ult. Five and a half inches of water fell in less than two hours. Hailstones as large as walnuts fell for an hour.

THE Democratic Convention at Cincinnati nominated Gen. Winfield S. Hancock for President, and William H. English, of Indiana, for Vice-President. They are good men, with clean records, and not enough piety to hurt them.

THE steamer Seawanhaka, on her regular afternoon trip from this city to various ports on Long Island, on the 28th ult., took fire and was beached on Ward's Island, where she burned to the water's edge. The passengers were compelled to jump into the water to escape the flames, and of the three hundred passengers aboard, it is variously estimated that from forty to one hundred were burnt to death or drowned, so rapid was the progress of the flames. The captain stuck to his post at the wheel till the vessel grounded, though the pilot house burnt around him. He was terribly burnt.

William Kingdon Clifford.

The author of these two remarkable volumes * died last March (1879) in the island of Madeira, at the early age of thirty-three, the victim, apparently, of what is called "overwork," that is, of work long pursued in utter disregard of the necessary limitations and imperativ requirements of the human system. Never, perhaps, has the demon of overwork carried off a more illustrious victim. Never, perhaps, has it been more strikingly shown of how little avail is the mere knowledge of hygiene in insuring obedience to its precepts. No one understood better than Clifford what are popularly known as the laws of health; no one had fathomed more deeply or discussed more lucidly the dependence of the mind upon the body; no one in our time has been better able to apply in the physiological domain the most accurate and definit conceptions of the relations of energy to work. Yet from all I hav been able to learn regarding Clifford's intellectual life, it would seem to hav been at all times carried on with an intensely passionate, irrepressible zeal, as regardless of all physical laws as if the mind were not merely a distinct but an independent entity, unhampered even during the present life by physical conditions.

I cite this singular discrepancy between knowledge and practice on account of its intrinsic interest, not in reproof of the course of one whose loss I mourn as that of a friend. Admitting, with Mr. Spencer, that one is morally bound so to treat the body as not "in any way to diminish the fulness or vigor of its vitality," one sees at the same time that, as the world is now constituted, emergencies often arise which subordinate to higher duties the duty of keeping oneself well. To save human life I may jump into a freezing river, though an ice-water bath be not recommended by hygienic advisers. So one sympathizes with the heroic sense of duty which often leads the scholar to toil early and late, and long after weariness has set in, in the performance of work which is expected of him, though in many cases the work itself may be obscure in fame and the taskmaster thankless and treacherous. For my own part I sympathize keenly, too, with a very different feeling, with that glorious exuberance of vital energy which in youthful days leads one far on into the night, working with a kind of sacred fury to seize and secure the sudden glimpses of the fairy-land of scientific truth or literary beauty ere drowsy memory shall let them slip and fade away. I think it very likely that in many such cases a systematic self-repression, in deference to hygienic considerations, might be just enough to clip down the brilliant discoverer or original thinker into a mere scientific or literary prig. The secrets of nature and of art are not to be won without struggles; and in the serene regions of philosophic meditation, no less than in the turmoil of practical life, the highest results are often accomplished by those who work with desperate energy quite regardless of self. Generous feelings of this sort hav no doubt frequently urged great thinkers, like Clifford, fatally to overtask their physical resources; and such mistakes are peculiarly faciliated by the accommodating disposition of that faithful servant the brain, which in men of highly-strung nervous temperament is but too ready to keep at its work without protest, as a thoroughbred horse will run till it drops.

In Clifford's case this prodigious enthusiasm for work, joined with an inherited weakness of constitution, has robbed the world of one of its most valuable lives. But though his life was brief, it was wonderfully rich in achievement no less than in promis. He had discerned more, and discerned it more clearly, in his score and a half of years than most men discern in four-score. In pure mathematics he was admitted, at the age of twenty-five, to be one of the first five or six original thinkers of Europe. I say this from hearsay, for my own knowledge of the subject is not sufficient to enable me to comprehend his mathematical achievements or to appreciate their bearing. But the power and acuteness with which he treated questions in physics and in general philosophy were very marvelous, and his suggestiveness was so great as already to hav entitled him to a high rank among contemporary philosophers. It was impossible for him to touch upon any subject without throwing some new light upon it, for the mere restatement of an old truth in his powerful and luminous language was sure to invest it with fresh and beautiful significance. His skill in scientific exposition was, accordingly, very remarkable. For taking the most hopelessly complicated and abstruse subjects and making them seem perfectly simple and almost self-evident to ordinary minds, I do not know who could be found to compare with him. This rare power he owed largely to the extreme vividness of his imagination. When he saw "with his mind's eye," he saw as accurately and distinctly as only keen observers see things when they look with the physical eye. This is well illustrated in his lecture on "Atoms," and in various passages where he has occasion to allude to the intimate constitution of matter, to solidity, liquidity, quantivalence, and so on. People generally, when they talk about atoms, think only of very little particles, without having in mind anything about their various shapes and modes of behavior. Even scientific men, who get on well enough by the aid of established formulas, now and then betray a similar barrenness of conception when some novel point comes up for discussion. But Clifford would describe a cluster of atoms with as much minuteness and as much animation as a fashionable lady would display in describing the gorgeous costumes of last night's ball. Take the air of this room, for example, which does not fill up all the space in the room, but is composed of a prodigious number of discrete particles of two sorts; one sort called molecules of oxygen, the other sort called molecules of nitrogen. "These small molecules," says Clifford, "are not at rest in the room, but are flying about in all directions with a mean velocity of seventeen miles a minute. They do not fly far in one direction; but any particular molecule, after going over an incredibly short distance—the measure of which has been made—meets another, not exactly plump, but a little on one side, so that they behave to one another somewhat in the same way as two people do who are dancing Sir Roger de Coverley—they join hands, swing around, and then fly away in different directions. All these molecules are constantly changing the direction of each other's motion; they are flying about with very different velocities, although, as I hav said, their mean velocity is about seventeen miles a minute. If the velocities were all marked off on a scale, they would be found distributed about the mean velocity just as shots are distributed about a mark. If a great many shots are fired at a target, the hits will be found thickest at the bull's-eye, and they will gradually diminish as we go away from that, according to a certain law which is called the law of error. It was first clearly stated by Laplace; and it is one of the most remarkable consequences of theory that the molecules of a gas hav their velocities distributed among them precisely according to this law of error. In the case of a liquid, it is believed that the state of things is quite different. We said that in the gas the molecules are moved in straight lines, and that it is only during a small portion of their motion that they are deflected by other molecules; but in a liquid we may say that the molecules go about as if they were dancing the grand chain in the lanciers. Every molecule after parting company with one finds another, and so is constantly going about in a curved path, and never sent quite clear away from the sphere of action of the surrounding molecules. But, notwithstanding that, all molecules in a liquid are constantly changing their places, and it is for that reason that diffusion takes place in the liquid. . . . In the case of a solid, quite a different thing takes place. In a solid every molecule has a place which it keeps; that is to say, it is not at rest any more than a molecule of a liquid or a gas, but it has a certain mean position which it is always vibrating about and keeping fairly near to, and it is kept from losing that position by the action of the surrounding molecules" (Vol. I, p. 194).

Such scientific exposition as this is as beautiful as poetry. In reading it one feels how the glory and beauty of nature is immeasurably enhanced for the philosopher who can thus with inward vision distinctly grasp objects and relations too subtle for the eye of sense in any wise to discern.

This same remarkable lucidity is exhibited by Clifford in the treatment of metaphysical problems. In some respects the most striking discussion in the present volumes is contained in the essay on "The Nature of Things-in-themselves," where some of the latest suggestions of anti-materialistic philosophy are very forcibly presented. Starting from the impregnable Berkeleian position that the material world of which I am conscious exists only as an organized series of changes in my consciousness, Clifford introduces a very interesting and suggestiv distinction between the objectiv and the ejectiv elements in cognition. Our inferences concerning the material world are all inferences concerning either some actual or some potential states of consciousness. When I describe the moon at which I am looking, I am describing merely a plexus of optical sensations with sundry revived states of mind linked by various laws of association with the optical sensations. When I say that the moon existed before I was born, I only mean that if I had been alive a century ago and stood here and looked up as I am now doing, I should hav had a similar plexus of optical sensations and revived states of mind to describe. Obviously there is nothing else which I can mean; in any statement which I may make concerning the world of matter, I can refer only to things which either are, or may be, or might hav been, objects in my consciousness. But it is quite otherwise when I make statements regarding the existence of minds other than my own. "When I come to the conclusion," says Clifford, "that you are conscious, and that there are objects in your consciousness similar to those in mine, I am not inferring any actual or possible feelings of my own, but your feelings, which are not, and cannot by any possibility become, objects in my consciousness." In the very act of inferring that you hav feelings like mine, some of which you class as objectiv, and call the outer world, while others you class as subjectiv—in the very act of inferring this I recognize these inferred feelings of yours as something outside of myself, as something which is not a part of myself and never could be. These inferred existences Clifford calls eject, "things thrown out of my consciousness, to distinguish them from objects, things presented in my consciousness—phenomena." My conception of you is "a rough picture of the whole aggregate of my consciousness, under imagined circumstances like yours;" and this conception—unlike my conception of the moon, or of your face—implies the existence of something that can never in any way become a part of my consciousness. Your face, while I am looking at you, is an object in my consciousness; but your consciousness can never be an object in mine—it is an eject, something entirely outside of my consciousness. And so, too, your thoughts and feelings, the objects in your mind, are to me ejects.

Now my belief in the existence of ejects affects essentially my conception of objects. As a simple object, the table is but a group of my states of consciousness; but when I speak to you of the table, I infer the existence in you of a similar group of states of consciousness—and this group is an eject. When I think or speak of the table, I bind up together the individual object as it exists in my mind with an indefinite number of ejects assumed to resemble it; and thus is formed the complex conception which Clifford calls the social object—that is, the conception of the table as an object in human consciousness in general There now ensues an ingenious and interesting series of inferences. Before our ancestors had become men, or were endowed with anything like a human consciousness, there is every reason for supposing them to hav been gregarious in their habits. They were gregarious primates of high sagacity. But gregarious action, among animals endowed with any sort of consciousness, is plainly impossible unless the individual animal recognizes his fellow's consciousness as similar to or kindred with his own. Above all, the first beginnings of speech necessarily involved a belief in the eject. But now, says Clifford, "if not only this conception of the particular social object, but all those that hav been built up out of it, hav been formed at the same time with, and under the influence of, language, it seems to follow that the belief in the existence of other men's minds like our own, but not part of us, must be inseparably associated with every process whereby discrete impressions are built together into an object." To vary the quaint expression of Ferrier, the minimum scibile per se is not exactly ego plus object, but it is ego plus eject. Along with what we call the objectiv element in every piece of our knowledge there is not only a reference to self, but there is also a sub-conscious reference to other selvs outside of us. "And this sub-conscious reference to supposed ejects," continues Clifford, "is what constitutes the impression of externality in the object, whereby it is described as not-me. At any rate, the formation of the social object supplies an account of this impression of outness, without requiring me to assume any ejects or things outside my consciousness except the minds of other men. Consequently it cannot be argued from the impression of outness that there is anything outside of my consciousness except the minds of other men."

By this beautiful method of presentation so much fresh light is thrown upon some philosophical truths as to make them appear self-evident. See what havoc it makes at the outset with the crude notion of the materialists—a notion supported by loose popular language and loose popular thinking—that changes of consciousness are caused by physical actions on or within the organism. Materialists talk about "ideas" as "originating" in the brain; and people generally hav become so far impressed with the notion that mental states are caused by physical actions on the nervous system, that when you begin to explain to them the wonderfully minute correlations between psychical action and brain action which modern psychology is disclosing, they immediately take fright and think you are "explaining away" the mind altogether. They think that in order to refute Materialism it is necessary to deny that associations of ideas occur simultaneously with the passage of waves of molecular motion from one cell to another in the gray surface of the brain. I wonder it never occurs to them that they might more summarily effect their purpose by denying, once for all, that the brain has anything whatever to do with the mind, or has any further function than that of a balance wheel or "governor" for regulating the motions of the viscera! But in point of fact their alarm is altogether groundless. Those who hav mastered the doctrin of the conservation of energy in its bearings upon the facts of psychology will see, as I demonstrated some years ago in "Cosmic

* Lectures and Essays. By the late William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S. Edited by Leslie Stephen and Frederick Pollock. 2 vols., 8vo. London: Macmillan & Co. 1879.

Philosophy," that it is utterly impossible that actions in the nervous system should ever, under any circumstances, stand in the relation of cause to psychical actions going on in the mind. A wave of molecular motion in the brain cannot produce a feeling or a state of consciousness. It can do nothing whatever but set up other waves of molecular motion, either in the gray matter of ganglia or in the white matter of nerve-fibres. Whatever goes in any way into the organism as physical force must come out again as physical force, and every phase of every transformation that it may undergo in the meantime must be rigorously accounted for in terms of physical force, or else the law of the conservation of energy will not be satisfied. To introduce consciousness or feeling anywhere in the series, as either caused by or causing actions in the brain or nerves, is "not to state what is untrue, but is to talk nonsense," as Clifford would say. These considerations—which must forever shut out sciolists like Büchner from intruding with their self-satisfied explanations into the great primordial mystery of nature, the relationship of body and soul—would seem to hav been clearly appreciated by Clifford; and he states the point in his psychological language with elegant succinctness. "The word cause, misleading as it is, having no legitimate place in science or philosophy [Chauncey Wright would hav said a hearty amen to that!], may yet be of some use in conversation or literature, if it is kept to denote a relation between objectiv facts, to describe certain parts of the phenomenal order. But only confusion can arise, if it is used to express the relation between certain objectiv facts in my consciousness and the ejectiv facts which are inferred as corresponding in some way to them and running parallel with them. . . . The distinction between eject and object, properly grasped, forbids us to regard the eject, another man's mind, as coming into the world of objects in any way, or as standing in the relation of cause or effect to any changes in that world. I need hardly add that the facts do very strongly lead us to regard our bodies as merely complicated examples of practically universal physical rules, and their motions as determined in the same way as those of the sun and the sea. There is no evidence which amounts to a prima facie case against the dynamical uniformity of nature; and I make no exception in favor of that slykick force which fills existing lunatic asylums and makes private houses into new ones."

The doctrin of evolution, as applied by Mr. Spencer to the study of psychical phenomena, nowhere undertakes to interpret mind as evolved from matter, but it shows a wonderfully minute and instructive parallelism between the modes of evolution of the total series of objectiv facts and the total series of ejectiv facts. Pushing the analysis, both of physical and of psychical phenomena, to its farthest possible limits with the data now at command, Mr. Spencer has shown how all the phenomena constituting a consciousness are compounded of elementary sub-conscious feelings or "psychical shocks." Physical phenomena, likewise, in an ultimate analysis, are resolved into simple pulsations or rhythmical movements of ether-atoms; and the question arises as to the relation between the elementary physical pulsation and the elementary psychical shock. Reasoning most ingeniously from the essential continuity in nature which the doctrine of evolution supposes, and recognizing the impossibility of deriving the psychical element from the physical, Clifford reaches the conclusion that "every motion of matter is simultaneous with some ejectiv fact or event which might be part a of consciousness." This simple ejectiv fact or event may be regarded as a molecule, so to speak, of mind-stuff, and we reach the startling conclusion that "the universe consists entirely of mind-stuff. Some of this is woven into the complex form of human minds containing imperfect representations of the mind-stuff outside them, and of themselves also, as a mirror reflects its own image in another mirror ad infinitum. Such an imperfect representation is called a material universe. It is a picture in a man's mind of the real universe of mind-stuff.

Clifford recognizes that this doctrin seems to hav been independently arrived at by many persons, and he instances the statements of Wundt in his "Physiologische Psychologie." The theory harmonizes well with that which I hav endeavored to elucidate in the chapter on matter and spirit in my "Cosmic Philosophy," though the result was reached by different processes of inference in the two cases. With Clifford's further conclusion, that the complex web of human consciousness cannot survive the disintegration of the organic structure with which we invariably find it associated, I do not agree. It is a conclusion not involved in the premises, and is one which no scientific philosopher qua scientific philosopher has a right to draw. It necessitates as complete a transgression of the bounds of experience as even the theologian is ever called upon to make. Least of all would one expect to see Clifford drawing such a conclusion and announcing it with a tinge of dogmatic emphasis withal, after reading his admirable remarks on Lobatchevski, where he shows how strictly the modern thinker must limit his generalizations to the region covered by experience. Were it not for a trifle too much of what Mr. Spencer would call the "anti-theological bias," Clifford's way of reasoning about the universe would hav been quite perfect.

[From the Mirror of Progress]

Poor Abbot.—Persistent Inconsistency and Bigotry.

We copy the following from an editorial in the Index of May 20th:

"One E. C. Walker, notorious for his advocacy of Freelove and 'anti-Comstockism,' writes to the Mirror of Progress (a so-called Liberal journal published in Missouri) in strains of gushing admiration of 'the hero of the century.' This effusively absurd outburst begins as follows: 'This day, April 29, the marty-hero, D. M. Bennett, steps forth from his prison cell a free man, his name rendered forever illustrious and his character unstained!'

"Some person or persons unknown to us hav just published a tract containing the passages of Bennett's letters which were too foully obscene to be published by the Religio-Philosophical Journal last autumn, and hav circulated it, apparently for the purpose of showing the public to what inconceivable depths of vileness this 'unstained character' has sunk. Walker evidently considers such obscenity as no 'stain' upon 'character,' and the same conclusion must be drawn as to his other loud-mouthed champions since his exposure by Col. Bundy.

"The ostentatious publicity of the adulation now heaped upon Bennett proves the fixed resolution of the Freelove rabble to dragoon the entire body of Liberals into open or silent submission to their control, and to identify Freelove with Liberalism itself in the public mind. All they want of the better class of Liberals is unprotesting silence, they only want, like the rebels of twenty years ago, to be 'let alone.' How long will this unprotesting silence endure? The protest of the Index has been made, sternly and powerfully, and it will yet be remembered as the one redeeming feature of Liberalism that can be pointed out as a matter of public record, during the past two years."

Poor Abbot! His persistent effort to place all who condemn Mr. Bennett's imprisonment as an outrage on justice and fair dealing in a false attitude, borders on insanity, and especially so when he himself admits that the imprisonment was wrong and without authority of law. If Mr. Abbot was logical he would take the same position in respect to Mr. Bennett's imprisonment that those do whom he so unjustly and so persistently condemns for denouncing it.

We hav not drawn the same inference that Mr. Abbot does from Mr. Walker's communication to the Mirror. We understand him to say that Mr. Bennett comes from his imprisonment "unsullied" in respect to the imprisonment itself, without taking into account the coloring or shade of his private character, save that of a manly determination to do that which the status of society and the laws of his country, as he and others conceived, authorized him to do; and Mr. Abbot to be consistent can say nothing less.

Mr. Abbot may be in possession of facts in respect to Mr. Walker's opinions that we are not, and which we hav no inclination to ferret out, for we must confess that we hav no taste for reveling in the sacred precincts of men's private thoughts and private lives, and dragging them before the public gaze to gratify a vitiated public taste, or to measure with an arbitrary standard of mock morality, about which no two can agree. Mr. Walker, no doubt, can explain his own position in respect to the charges brought against him, but there is certainly nothing in his communication to warrant the assertion that he indorses the foibles laid at Mr. Bennett's door. The great body of Liberals, in condemning Mr. Bennett's imprisonment, do not indorse his foibles, as Mr. Abbot persists in asserting they do. If Mr. Bennett is guilty of improprieties, it only renders the precedent of his incarceration the more dangerous to personal liberty. We think we but expressed the facts in the case and the feelings of thinking Liberals in the Mirror of November 29, 1879, where we say:

"The National Liberal League has nowhere taken ground in favor of libertinism, nor hav its individual members done so. No auxiliary League has taken such grounds, nor are we aware of any journal, official, or lecturer in the Liberal interest, assuming such a position. Would the Index hav every paper, organization, and lecturer suppressed by law that does not indorse its peculiar views and condemn all that it condemns? We believe better of the Index, but the logical result of its present position leads to such a conclusion. We don't doubt the purity of Mr. Abbot's intentions; that his aim has been to create a new, better, and purer civilization, and we sincerely sympathize with him in every effort to make man better, purer, and happier, but we think he has failed to adopt the best means to accomplish this grand purpose. It is better to seek the good that is in man than to hunt his foibles in loathsome cesspools, and drag them before the public, a pestilent offense, in defiance of a refined sense of propriety.

"If the Beecher scandal, and the Bennett scandal, and hundreds of others of equal loathsome notoriety, could be buried in perpetual obrivion in the 'bottomless abyss,' to which Mr. Abbot has so recently laid his plummet, as a dividing abyss between the 'genuine and spurious,' society would be none the worse in consequence of it. To make man better you must appeal to his manhood and the good that is in him. He is not bettered by arraying his weaknesses, by self-assumed virtue and morality, before his fellow-man to gratify a vitiated public taste."

And again in the Mirror of May 15th last:

"The reception of Mr. Bennett at Chickering Hall, New York, the 2d of the present month, on his release from an unjust imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary, New York, was an event of vast moment. The deep interest manifested will go down in history to the coming generations as a monument to the love of liberty and justice by the American people.

"The expression is not to be regarded as hero worship or merely out of respect to the person of Mr. Bennett; he stands before his fellows as every other individual with his friends and enemies; with his good, noble, and generous deeds, and with his foibles; but the expression is to be regarded as a solemn protest against a menace the most startling that has ever occurred in this country to American liberty. In this protest all good citizens, and especially Liberals, should unite."

Liberals want no high-priest of the order embodied in a mere individual as a conscience keeper, and will hav none.

TO THE LIBERAL PUBLIC.

The Paine Memorial Building, a structure of which any city might well be proud, is now, thanks to the heroism of Abner Kneeland, the persistent faithfulness of Messrs. Mendum & Seaver, the publisher and editor of the Investigator, and the wise generosity of Mr. Lick and a host of Liberal men and women, secure to the Liberal cause. It will be the home of the Investigator as long as that journal is true to the principles which it has so ably, courteously, and fearlessly advocated for nearly fifty years. It will surely be, as it always has been, freely open to the discussion of all subjects that concern humanity.

Without trenching on the free use of its fine lecture hall, devoted specially to perpetuate the wise and patriotic doctrines of Thomas Paine, the intellectual father of our great republic, it yields a rent ample to pay the interest of the incumbrance still remaining on it. But this money, as soon as the remaining stock is taken up, will all go into the pockets of the stockholders. And there is no reason why the property should not so rise in value as to yield a rental which will make the stock a more valuable investment than government securities. The question for all Liberal men and women to consider is, whether they will put their money into investments which hav no relation to the support of Liberal opinions or the deliverance of their fellow-beings from dwarfing and demoralizing superstition, or into one which will benefit all mankind as well as themselvs and their posterity?

What can be a better thing, my Liberal friend, than to leave to your children one or more shares of the Paine Memorial stock? What can be a better example to set for the institution of similar joint stock buildings in every city and town?

Many of our fellow-citizens put their money into buildings which are of no use whatever for six days of the week, and on the seventh perhaps destroy more happiness than they produce. Our building is productiv of happiness every day. It is a people's temple, not hedged by any tabo or prohibition. It is a place where people meet to think and hear what others think, and not to hav their thinking done for them by a man consecrated for that purpose, and bound by traditions everywhere contradicted by facts.

"Giv Us a Rest."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Some of my friends here think I did wrong in my last letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER, in telling you to tell brother Chapman for me that my opinion of Spiritualism is that it is Christianity run wild. But judging brother Chapman by his letters, and energy in disseminating his doctrine, I don't think—at least I hope—I hav not offended him in the least. I think, and did think before I wrote that little sentence, that brother Chapman was a noble character, too much so to get offended at me for my difference of opinion with him on soul questions and such like; and I would be truly sorry if I should accidentally wound the feelings of any noble Liberal who is trying to emancipate the human family from superstition's bondage; and to more fully explain my reason for writing that sentence, I will giv Mr. Chapman and his Spiritualistic friends my views upon the dark side of Spiritualism. If our spirits dwell among our friends after death, and see all their actions toward those they love, how would it be, for instance, if a kind, loving, good husband, and father of a large family, who had made ample provisions for the future for his family, were to die, and his spirit should find a tyrannical step-father over his children, abusing the wife he loved so well, and squandering the means he had toiled for while living, how much worse hell would you want than this? Now the difference in spirit life between Christians and Spiritualists is merely this: While the Christian theory sends the bad man to hell, Spiritualism sends many good men to hell. This is merely an illustration of one of many which make me object to the doctrines of Spiritualism. But, as we hear people say when some individual is putting some of his balderdash through him, "Giv us a rest!" So says Materialism, "Giv us a rest!" So does our grand old Mother Earth, after bearing her summer crops to sustain animal life, say, "Giv us a rest!" So says sister Slenker, and all other good intelligent Materialists, "Giv us a good, annihilistic spiritual rest, one and all, for ever and ever." So would say a good, merciful, intelligent Deity, if there was one, "Giv them a rest; if they hav done good, they hav enjoyed life; if bad, they hav suffered enough for it; giv them a rest!" So may all good, merciful people say of their friends when they die, "They hav gone to rest."

No, my dear friends, I will say to you all, in conclusion, that as the louse, the flea, and the bed bug liv, move and hav a being, and prey upon the human or other animal body until crushed beneath the mighty thumb-nail of man, when they cease to liv forever, so you and I liv, move, and hav a being upon this globe until crushed beneath the mighty locomotive, the hand of the Tyrant, or disease brought about by our own ignorance in not knowing how to take care of our own bodies, or by wearing out by old age, and then we all get a rest. WM. N. RIDINGER.

A Friendly Talk.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: I hav not written you very direct since your advent to liberty for the reason that I knew you would be inundated with congratulations from your very large circle of old and new-made friends. I hav read all THE TRUTH SEEKER has said in that direction with unabated and heartfelt satisfaction, and hav tried to digest the many good things it contained in other directions. I hav been amused, instructed, and, I confess, a little annoyed (very little) at the spirit some hav manifested in expressing their views and their differences of opinions with others. No one party or school of thought is free from this weakness, and most likely never will be. Our so-called Liberal school will manifest by their actions how little they are truly entitled to the name. We shall feel, many of us, that these friends are doing the cause a good deal of injury, while indirectly, perhaps, they stimulate others to renewed energy, and in this wise are important helps. Every honest worker, however injudicious his methods or his manner of expressing them, must be a true helper. Our over-sensitivness is our weakness. Why should we fear what seem to be injudicious manners or expressions when we know they are the best their owners can giv us. It does seem as though there was a kind of mental mania that afflicts two classes in two different schools of progressiv and Liberal thought that never can and never will understand each other. I mean a certain number in the Materialistic and Spiritualistic ranks. We necessarily view things in a different light, but why people should feel annoyed at each other for thinking differently on the question of whether the "death of the body ends all or not" is beyond my comprehension. The discussion is drawing in quite a number, some who exhibit a broad and others a narrow spirit. The discussion would assume monster proportions if Bro. Jamieson were gratified, and for his sake I hope he will be, though it seems to me that he wasted a good deal of his time and ability in going over the old twaddle about the Bible, and discussing questions that are well-nigh obsolete. This is given as an individual opinion, and I shall be very much pleased for him to continue this line of work if he or others think it best to do so. Those of us who think differently need not take time to read it.

As regards Bro. Jamieson's change of base, it does not affect my feelings in the least toward him. Why should it? Where one Spiritualist changes his mental garb for a material one, at least ten quietly lay aside the latter for the former. Who is hurt thereby? Bro. Bennett (we will assume) is a Materialist. George Lynn is a Spiritualist. I am quite sure that Bro. Bennett will accord to me all my mental, bodily, and spiritual rights, and will treat me just as kindly as though I were not a semi-lunatic in thinking "death does not end all," grand manhood will not be destroyed in the hour and time when it is fairly prepared to do the best of work for the principles so essential for true human culture. I am equally sure that Bro. Bennett can go no length in any direction of investigation that I am not quite willing to follow, nor is he or any other person more willing than myself to accord to all people, of every color and of both sexes, the rights, privileges, and immunities that he or they may claim for themselvs. Now if all this be true, how can our simple individual opinions, religious, non-religious, or otherwise, affect the general question of true Liberalism? We may and do differ as to which produce the greatest amount of individual human happiness. On this topic my own opinion shall be frankly expressed. In the search for the highest expression of mental truth and a knowledge of what constitutes the measure of human rights, I hav read (all my time would allow of) from the various schools of religious and political thought, besides a large amount of matter from what is usually termed Infidel writers. I hav taken it for granted that all were honest, and for this reason they were given a candid hearing. This kind of intercourse has at least made me familiar with their position, and has assured me that no school is without some truth, and that the most enlightened cherish some error. In addition, it was evident that each (as a whole) was sincere, and all equally desirous for what they deemed essential to human welfare.

A true appreciation of these facts taught me the necessity of exercising a broad spirit of human charity and the importance of manifesting a catholic spirit in discussing our differences. A somewhat generous amount of reasoning in the lines of thought followed by the Universalists, Unitarians, Hicksite Friends, Deists, Atheists, and the progressiv school in general of radical thinkers that includes Herbert Spencer, Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall, etc., enabled me to compare notes with some degree of understanding in what direction (to me) there existed the most of the reason and the clearest definition of truth.

Over thirty years' experience with what are termed the phenomena of Spiritualism, and over forty years' acquaintance with Materialism, has placed me where I now stand. These are my conclusions. The phenomena demonstrate to me the continuance of our conscious existence after we pass out of our present earthly caskets; that many who hav left the form hav been able to assure us of their existence, and that such assurance, instead of injuring our usefulness or happines here, increases both and makes life seem a grand outcome, in harmony with truth and equity.

While I admire the courage and love of truth manifested by the Materialists, I am satisfied from long years of observation that Spiritualists as a class are a much happier (if not more reasonable) people than are Materialists. Those who hav become Spiritualists after nearly a lifetime spent in the honest conviction of Materialism, if their own opinions are to be credited, were and are greatly the gainers by the change. Among them are such men as the Owenses, the Hares, and a very large body, some of whom contribute to THE TRUTH SEEKER to-day. Materialists are very pronounced in saying that wherever they go Spiritualists are among their best friends, and I hav yet to find one that did not concede his willingness to hav matters turn out as we predict, while, on the other hand, I never knew a Spiritualist that hoped that as regards human destiny the Material school might hav the truth. Am I right when I think I observe a certain vein of despair running through all the writings of the Material school when they talk of life and its responsibilities; that they inculcate a desire to get free from its entanglements and trials; that it produces too much misery for the general amount of happiness; that on the whole it is more a failure than success? I can draw no other conclusion; it lacks the spirit of robust hope; it keeps the soul too much in the shadows; and we think lacks in a very large degree the elements of light and sunshine. Spiritualism has all these. We keep before us the bright side, and yet do not fail to see the shadows that necessarily exist. We believe the universe is a grand success; that mind, as its ultimate in man, is the crowning glory of nature; that we are but in our infancy; that there lies before us the most glorious unfoldment of our powers; that the future will demonstrate that wisdom, harmony, and equity are indwelling principles in the divine and natural order of the univercœlum, and that the present angularities, discord, and apparent wide-spread evils are but means to an end that shall demonstrate their need and justification.

These are my conclusions to-day, and this is why I think such minds as sisters Slenker's and Wixon's, with a very large body of men and women, are losing much of the true sunshine of this rudimentary sphere. Let not Bro. Jamieson imagine that myself or many others are afraid to discuss with him or Mr. Underwood the difference that divides us. He knows as well as I know that the best possible evidence cannot be presented in a tangible form to a mind molded and ingrained with Material philosophy, for the most potent and unseen forces, mental and spiritual, are without the range of the material ken. What is positiv evidence to me that no material philosophy can disprove or account for, would be no evidence to a mind that must test everything in a material crucible and with the evidence of his five senses. Our evidence is mostly outside of this realm to such an extent that the external, visible perception of it is not within the range of human possibility. This evidence, however, has a wide range of latitude, and there is a certain amount bordering on the domain of the material, and some within it, that reaches all classes and shades of mind. This fact of itself accounts for the wide-spread diffusion of our principles, the large increase of our followers, and the great diversity of opinions among us. Wherever our philosophy touches, it seems to change by magic the current of former thought, to liberalize, broaden, and deepen them, and to set free the nobler and brighter aspirations of the mind or soul. It is true that some there are who make too free a use of their newly-acquired liberty; the fulness of the riches of their "new birth" is more than they can use judiciously, and such as they bring reproach to every good cause; but who knows or can know, or can say truthfully, that these are not needed for some wise purpose in behalf of the general good?

Until the question is settled regarding the right to express our honest opinions freely, to write and print the same without fear or favor, and to discuss all that pertains to the mind and body without subjecting ourselvs to arrest by Comstock and his aid, our differences are trifling. The right to discuss all questions pertaining in any way, directly or indirectly, to the realm or operations of nature is as clearly self-evident as our right to life; and any society or custom that prevents it should be abrogated. If any person or party are allowed to say what I shall think or express, that violates no right of theirs to do the same, it is evident they and it are wrong. Until we obtain this simple act of justice from the despotic majority that rule the state by controling the church, we should bury the hatchet of contention and prove by our actions toward all true workers, more than by our words, that we are Liberal in the broadest and best acceptation of the term. I know that I truly represent the school of Liberal Spiritualists when I say in their behalf that they heartily wish the Materialists the best of success in their endeavors to Liberalize public thought and to make human nature more happy and more just. We will welcome their noble workers to our hearts and homes and clearly prove by our actions that whatever folly may lurk in our lines of thought and mental conclusions, there is no bigotry in our souls and no narrowness in our actions.

Let us be generous to one another and work side by side for human redemption—redemption from all narrowness that is cowardly; all narrowness for opinion's sake; all narrowness of intolerance; all narrowness regarding methods of utterance; narrowness in all directions and under all circumstances that militate against the largest, broadest, and deepest measure of human rights and human duties.

There are a large number of earnest, willing workers, a large constituency of thinkers, and an unnumbered host of willing minds ready and waiting to receive the truth. What seems most wise to do, let us do; and as "union is strength," let us be united. Do not let us be too anxious to court debate among ourselvs. Let us find the points of agreement and waste no time in holding a love feast over them. We must assail the injustice that enchains thought, bribes or muzzles the press, and stifles investigation. What we desire violates no principle of purity or justice. The mistake that our opponents make consists in esteeming things sacred that are not so. There can be no sacred books that do not recognize the sanctity of man. All customs, laws, or opinions that seek to make human beings and their rights secondary prove their own unworthiness. The age or popularity of any book or custom is no proof of its goodness or usefulness, for it too often happens that what has been esteemed the most sacred is often the most trivial. There is no surer way of traveling in the right direction than in guarding carefully the rights of others. Our own will be in little danger while we zealously observe what by right every intelligent person is entitled to. Selfishness should take the form of self-respect, and self-respect is best observed by self-abnegation; therefore let us rise into the calm atmosphere of human brotherhood, where justice, love, mercy, and charity are supreme. GEORGE LYNN.

The National Liberal Party.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Diamonds, diminutiv as they are, quickly attract our sight by their sparkle; thus it was that among the first things on reading the last TRUTH SEEKER my eyes fell, in an obscure little corner, upon a miniature item by Mr. Green. In this modest space he finds room to say, however, that, as it appeared to him, the National Liberal Leagues would be compelled to put candidates in the field. Thanks, Mr. GREEN, for these brave and opportune words. They gladden my heart, for I see the National Liberal party does not yet lie in a premature and unmerited grave.

It seems, in truth, that the times should compel us to take that step. The nomination at Chicago of a man whose record at best is coupled with the names, acts, and defense of national thieves should prevent all honest Liberals, indeed all honest men, from casting a vote for the Republican party. Unhappily honest men, although disgusted with the corruption of the field of politics, still vote for corrupt politicians who are inconsistently clamoring for purity. It is true that in the case of Mr. Garfield it is held that he fully answered the charges against him at the time, but how much is the assertion worth when made as with the Tribune and Times, by the way, papers that condemned him then as a villainously corrupted man who had betrayed the most sacred trusts?

No. Leaders of great parties and candidates for the Presidency of this young yet glorious republic, like Cæsar's wife, should be above suspicion. Let it not be said this is to ask too much. Such men there are, and there were in both the Democratic and Republican parties when each was in its period of usefulness. Such men were Thomas Jefferson and honest Abraham Lincoln. Compare these with the dominant individualities of the parties to-day, and see that indeed the time has come for the National Liberal League to present its platform, choose its leaders, and offer its electoral ticket.

One word more. So far I hav spoken but of men. It is because men only seem to be in question in the deliberations and thoughts of the two great parties. This fact is one more incentiv—indeed it is the one great incentiv to actions on our part. If the two parties in question are to-day lifeless and corrupt, it is because they hav outlived their usefulness. They present no more live and great issues. It has even gone to the derisiv length of each party claiming to differ in no essential particular from the other. Emulating the disorderly and mercenary legions of ancient Rome, it is men they present for their claims to power, not principles, for the good of the people.

Liberals, if now you see your opportunity, and come out proclaiming the great political rights, not of a favored few, but of the masses, if you construct a platform with the planks of full religious, social, and political liberty—not Socialism, not Communism, not Atheism—but individual freedom and full possession of combined natural and social rights; if you do this, you will hav bravely done the work of the hour, and for sounding now the trumpet of the deliverance for the people, future ages will hold you in sacred reverence and crown you with glorious immortality!

EDMOND GASTINEAU.

The Cause in California.

OFFICE OF THE FREETHINKER.
603 WASHINGTON ST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The charter members of auxiliary Liberal League No. 190, met the other evening and elected permanent officers for the ensuing six months as follows: President, Dr. George H. Fowler; Vice-president, Dr. E. G. Hoadley; Secretary, A. J. Boyer; Treasurer, W. S. Ray; Corresponding Secretary, Byron Adonis. The election was by ballot and viva voce, and was conducted with spirit and earnestness, the result calling out applause.

The writer presented the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we respect and honor D. M. Bennett for his heroic sacrifice in behalf of individual rights and Freethought, and congratulate him upon his liberty from the Christian bastile where he was unjustly and wrongfully imprisoned through the malice and bigotry of Anthony Comstock, Judge Benedict, & Co.

Resolved, That we tender to George W. Chaney, the independent Unitarian minister of Evansville, Indiana, our sympathy and encouragement in the noble position he has taken in defense of mental liberty and in the promulgation of truths that powerfully aid in the extirpation of superstition from the minds of otherwise intelligent American citizens.

Resolved, That auxiliary League 190 sends greeting to all of the auxiliaries of the National Liberal League, fraternal rejoicings that from the Atlantic to the Pacific the League that voluntarily binds and unites us is founded on that eternal truth which has justice as its basis, perfect mental liberty as its battle cry, and the welfare of humanity, regardless of creed, color, or clime, as its inspiring ideal.

Chiefs Adonis and Choynski spoke briefly and eloquently [modesty] on the resolutions, after which they were passed by acclamation, and ordered to be placed on the minutes. I am happy to hav to say to you that our League promises to hav some excellent speakers, as every member who addressed it spoke with great clearness, decision, and warmth. It is charged that the Liberals and Freethinkers are incapable of arousing enthusiasm, but our meeting the other night was a complete refutation of this, and we were ourselvs surprised at the enthusiastic spirit manifested. The League adjourned to hold another regular meeting on the following Monday evening, each member being appointed a committee of one to invite the friends of Freethought to attend and join the organization. The future looks bright and prosperous.

I hav conversed with a number of Freethinkers on the subject of the International Congress of Freethinkers to be held at Brussels next August, and it is the opinion of myself and all that the National Liberal League should be represented in that distinguished body. I am sure we will add our financial help to send delegates when we find that the project meets with the approbation of the auxiliaries at large.

Deep interest is manifested by the Liberals of this city in the coming Congress of the National Liberal League which, this year, is to meet on or about the first of September. As far as I can learn, they are decidedly in favor of taking political action and nominating candidates for President and Vice-President. We hav excellent material for the exalted office; such intellectual men as Elizur Wright, Ingersoll, T. B. Wakeman, and James Parton are the peers of the best men in the Democratic or Republican ranks. It is conceded that we could not elect our candidates, but it is believed that with Ingersoll for President, and Wright, Parton, or Wakeman for Vice-president, we could roll up a popular vote that would astonish the old parties and the God-in-the-Constitution fanatics. Such a fact would make us respected and heard. How is it now? The National Liberal League is a political organization, and its open and avowed purpose is to get control of the national and state governments. Its end and aim is to thoroughly secularize the republic, and, in the language of the immortal and revered Washington, prove to the world that "the Government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion," or any other religion. Knowing our purpose, and clearly seeing the end in view, why should we not commence the great work before us? In asking this question, I express the sentiments of all the Liberals with whom I am acquainted. We shall look eagerly for the meeting of the September Congress, and in the mean time will feel secure that the good and noble men who hav so far safely guided our ship of state, the National Liberal League, will, on the coming occasion, but add strength, swiftness, and security to the ship, and send her on another yearly voyage laden with precious truths, with hope for humanity, unflinchingly in the ranks of Freethought.

BYRON ADONIS.

T. B. Wakeman on the Political Situation.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The following letter I this day received from T. B. Wakeman, Esq, of your city, and I request that it be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I know of no one in the Liberal ranks whose opinions are worthy of more consideration than the writer of this letter. H. L. G.

NEW YORK, June 26, 1880.

Dear Mr. Green: It seems to me that the League Congress should be held early, and so that the audiences of your many Liberal meetings would be able to attend conveniently and make a goodly number. After the Congress another convention of the National Liberal party should be held, as before, the organization completed, the platform revised, and a resolution passed to support Hancock and English. The reasons for this should be a statement of the sins of the Republican party against liberty, which are very great, as Mr. Leland will show, if you need information. I do not think we should ask or expect any pledges or assurances from the Democrats. They cannot do worse for us than the Republicans hav done, and from their platform and history we may well expect that they hav returned to the traditions of Jefferson and real democratic republicanism. Any pledges we should ask or questions proposed to the candidates would perhaps injure them and do us no good. Let us consolidate our party and bring it to the polls independently. If that can be done with common sense and prudence we should be a power ever after. I am clear about it, and am Yours sincerely, T. B. WAKEMAN.

The Brussels Congress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav much pleasure in handing you five dollars toward the expenses of your trip to Europe as one of the delegates attending the International Congress about to be held there for the purpose of considering the position of Liberals, Freethinkers, and general progressionists throughout the world. And in doing so I feel that I hav only done what was my duty under the circumstances, inasmuch that to such spirits as you we owe the onward march of the great and growing army of Christian-annihilators, who with reason as their standard, press onward, undismayed, over the upas-planted plains of superstition, whose very atmosphere has polluted and rendered stagnant the silvery streams of thought, reason, and liberty. For while dogmatic priests and conventional sycophants hav knelt at the altar of retrogression and worshiped the powers that be, you hav dared step outside the pale of received opinion, and boldly and unflinchingly followed the broad road of right for the purpose of taking with you the family of the world instead of selfishly taking the conventional, narrow path where only the few may tread their way to safety while the masses unheeded rush but to destruction. And to you as the founder of new liberties in book and pamphlet publication, the people will some day rise up and bless you for the part taken against the iniquitous laws founded by the hireling of a so called Christian Association. If therefore the people of these United States wish to see a new era in the world of Freethought, they should do all they possibly can in aiding the representativs of such a Congress as that to be held next month in the city of Brussels, and be assured that every dollar so spent will bring a return tenfold its value by liberating the slaves of theology from the thraldom of priests, bishops, and cringing state sycophants, whose only purpose has ever been to cripple and keep in subjection the people of every nation. WM. COTTER WILSON.

Liberal News Items.

AUXILIARY Liberal League No. 195 is located at Elgin, Kane Co., Ill.

I AM pleased to learn by the last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that T. C. Leland proposes to giv the Liberal League movement the benefit of his able pen.

DR. T. L. BROWN, President Freethinkers' Association, has appointed Samuel Cosad, Jr., of Wolcott, N. Y., Recording-Secretary of the Association in place of E. M. Sellon who has removed from the state.

THE Board of Directors of the National Liberal League has recently made the following appointments as members of the Executiv Committee: For Washington territory, Willis McDannald, of Walla Walla; for Oregon, J. M. Mack, of Prairie City; for Illinois, F. F. Follet, of Rockford.

VICE-Presidents of the Freethinkers' Association of the various counties of the state of New York are earnestly requested to proceed to make arrangments to get out large delegations from their respectiv counties to attend the Hornellsville Convention.

THE Sub-Committee of the National Liberal League for Washington territory has been constituted as follows: Willis McDannald, Chairman, of Walla Walla; Ed. Orcott, of Palouse City; John Cochran, of Vancouver, and H. W. Hendricks, of Seattle. This Committee has just organized one large League in the territory and hav in contemplation a number of others.

LAST Sunday I had the pleasure of visiting the Hornellsville Liberal League. I found it in a most prosperous condition. The League has about a hundred members, and the numbers are constantly increasing. It holds a meeting in Dr. Shattuck's Opera House every Sunday afternoon. Among the members are a number of good speakers. Bro. J. H. Fuller, a member of the League, was formerly a Universalist minister. He is a man of ability, and I hope soon to see him on the Liberal lecture platform.

THERE are many of our German citizens who are in sympathy with the Liberal League movement, and I am pleased to announce that the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League hav had printed in the German language for gratuitous distribution a pamphlet containing the National Liberal League Constitution, the resolutions and platform adopted at the Cincinnati Liberal League Congress, forms for organizing Leagues, names of officers, etc. These pamphlets will be furnished on application by A. L. Rawson, 19 Lafayette Place, New York city, or by myself.

AS I HAV often remarked, if our Leagues expect to liv and prosper they must earnestly engage in some practical work. And I know of no better work to commence with than the establishment of a scientific and Liberal library. We now hav nearly two hundred Leagues, and if one-fourth of the number would establish good public libraries a grand work would be accomplished. THE TRUTH SEEKER office and Investigator office hav on hand hundreds of valuable books that should be distributed over the couutry in libraries for the education of the people, and our Leagues should commence the good work. I am glad to know that a number of Leagues are moving in that direction. Friends, giv the world light! H. L. GREEN.

New Auxiliary.

196. Prairie City, Oregon, Secretary Jules LeBret.

This League starts with twenty-seven members, and is likely to become a local power in the good cause of secularism. Any Liberal who wishes to hav documents for forming an auxiliary can be supplied by addressing,

A. L. RAWSON, Sec. N. L. L.
19 Lafayette Place, New York City.

GREAT VALLEY, N. Y., June 28, 1880.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Allow me to express my gratification to you and yours upon your survival of a living death from the Albany Christian bastile into a resurrection of a life of freedom, friends, and home, with mind unimpaired, to battle for truth and right.

And now let me call the attention of the Liberals of the United States to the momentous importance of heeding the call for a little funds to defray the necessary expense of having our government represented at the great International Congress of Freethinkers, to be held at Brussels, Europe, before the lapse of many weeks. Let every one respond. Don't wait, thinking that others will, but rather let us all do a little in a financial way, and I think we will never hav cause to regret it, but rather be proud to think in years to come that we gave a little substantial aid in so laudable an enterprise. Let us be represented by staunch men and women, and methinks the result will tell for truth in the not far distant future. Yours for truth,

A. F. ALBRIGHT.

Mrs. Slenker Criticised.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been an attentiv and interested reader of what your esteemed contributor Mrs. E. D. Slenker has written for some time past, and though I belong neither to the house of Lancaster nor the house of York—am neither a Materialist nor a Spiritualist—but simply one who wants to learn, I feel inspired or constrained to talk a little.

Sister Slenker says: "There are few who at the very last think or care whether there is a future or not. Sleep, rest, peace, is all they ask." Now I submit that that is all speculation. Was she ever there at the "very last?" What people desire who neither think nor care belongs, I should think, to what our Positivistic friends call the "unknowable." And that is what we may aspire to! After we hav been born, liv, grow mature, and ripen into the "full harvest of old age," we may attain a condition of imbecility in which we shall hav no preference between immortality and annihilation! What is the use of aspiring, struggling, and suffering through long years to attain to that negativ bliss which could be reached directly with a quart of whisky? What has been the use of all the struggles of the human race to reach what it already had all the way from the oyster to the chimpanzee? If that is all, the still-born infant got it without a pang—unless it was precocious, like John the Baptist. The idea that a person don't want to speak because his tongue is palsied so he can't, don't want to see because his eyes are closed or the optic nerve is paralyzed, or don't want to liv because the body is dying, are inferences from a premis which has been taken for granted, viz., that the body is the whole human being.

Sister Slenker says, "Now and then one dies in the full vigor of life and strength, . . but remember, these are not cases to judge by." On the contrary, are not those who attain to old age the exceptions. I presume I hav witnessed the death of a hundred persons, and not over ten of them were old, and not one had lived out "all his years," That sister Slenker will liv to be old is nearly as doubtful as a future life. Who wants to liv to extreme age? Who aspires to dotage and imbecility? If we are just to furnish food for worms, why not giv them a good feast, and not turn them off with a few old dry bones? If we are mere physical organizisms, and death is not an evil per se, let us aspire to die while we are men and women or beautiful children, and not mummies.

Sister Slenker says, "'I'll be good and happy by and by is robbing our race of its vast and boundless capacities.'" On the contrary, is it not the basis of all enterprise and effort? "I don't like what I hav got; I will huut for something better," is the only conceivable reason for exertion. If it is reasonable to work for an uncertain future in this life, why not for an uncertain hereafter? If we plant and cultivate for an uncertain harvest, we can enjoy "our daily bread" all the better, and if we work for a possible future life, it cannot certainly interfere with our enjoyment of this. "One world at a time" is good enough in science, but that world should be the universe. "One world at a time" is good enough in philosophy, but that world should be Duration. It is as natural for people to speculate and guess about what is just now called the unknowable as it is to be eaten by worms—and there is lots more fun in it. Let sister Slenker fix up an imaginary world of love and light and joy, to supplement the "dark chamber and the narrow house," which, from what we can see, appears to be the end, and see if it will not be more fun to think about it, and when she comes to the "very last," it can't hurt her a bit. The idea that it is a necessary missionary work to persuade people, and especially church people, not to fret themselves about a future life don't strike me. The church has sunk into such lethargy that the joys of heaven and the terrors of hell, set in vivid contrast, will hardly keep a congregation from going to sleep. A great many Spiritualists believe in and work for immortality, but they find as much time for earnest secular work as any. A few speculativ, ardent minds refer to it as a hope, or at least a possibility. Sister Slenker thinks if she could obliterate the idea from the human mind she would usher in a millennium. A man like Ingersoll cannot even make a mild suggestion of immortality over his brother's grave but forthwith some one will pounce upon his timid suggestion, quivering from the lips of love and anguish, and proceed to analyze it, and thinks he has done mankind a great service by showing that it is not proved as clearly as some of the propositions of Euclid.

One word about speculativ theories. We hear a great deal about exact science. Charles Bradlaugh says that no one has ever given a coherent definition of the word God. I think no one has ever given a coherent definition of the word matter. No one has pointed out a constant and invariable property of matter. No one has ever seen any matter. The nearest any one ever came to it, so far as heard from, was one of your correspondents who said that thought or mind results from the gray matter of the brain. Chemists hav appeared to show us that there are about a hundred tangible substances or elements, most of which are metals. Now, I take it, iron is not matter; neither is carbon or oxygen. If each of these elements has peculiar properties, then each of them must hav existed forever, or else there must hav been some properties lying around loose to be attached to matter to make an element of it. Bnt you can't unite all these elements or substances together to make one substance or matter, any more than you can mix together three gods to make one god. Underwood thinks matter is one of the properties of the Absolute. Be modest, brother and sister Materialists and Spiritualists. Own that you guess at what you start with; that Spiritualist and Materialist are not scientific terms; that you hav never penetrated to substance, and that all you know is what you guess at.

Discussion of the National Financial System.

BETWEEN DR. H. H. MORRISON AND JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

MR. TRUESDELL'S SIXTH LETTER.—CLOSING THE DISCUSSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav finished reading Mr. Morrison's closing article upon the financial question with feelings of deep disappointment. I had hoped from the beginning of this discussion that my opponent would giv our readers at least one new practical financial idea—one thought or theory in finance not already exploded a thousand times. I hav looked anxiously through all of his letters for just one little hint or suggestion of a practical improvement over our present imperfect financial system; but alas! I search in vain.

My opponent has completed the circle of his argument and arrived at his starting point without shedding any new light and without proving even one of his six original affirmations.

RECAPITULATION.

First. You affirm, Mr. Morrison, that "gold and silver, or both, are not the best materials out of which to make money." This affirmation you hav not proved, for the simple reason that you fail to describe a better one. Upon this question you hav apparently made one point against hard money, and every acknowledged economist in the world will agree with you that gold and silver are not always a true and unvarying standard for the measurement of values. Still these metals are better than no standard. The fluctuation in the price of the two metals, as measured by each other, and by the sum of all labor, and by every article of value known to the most eminent statisticians the world has produced, has shown their value to be more steady and their adaptation to monetary purposes far superior to any other substance or thing yet discovered.

While scientists do not agree as to the exact variation in the purchasing power of the two precious metals, they uniformly proclaim that gold and silver are less liable to fluctuation than any other known articles of value. Professor Jevons places the extreme variation in the value of gold, as measured by twenty kinds of skilled and common labor and by twenty of the most common necessities of life, at forty-eight per cent in fifty years, averaging less than one per cent variation per annum. This may be too high an estimate, or even too low, but it is certain that the price of gold and silver does fluctuate but very little as compared to other articles of value. For nearly a century the relativ prices of the two metals hav ranged between 14 1 2 to 1, and 16 to 1 During the last fifteen years, however, owing to the demonetizing of silver by some eastern nations, the introduction of gold into Asia from the mines of California and Australia, thereby largely displacing silver, the latter has declined in value. Yet all of these perturbations hav lowered the commercial value of silver by only about twelve per cent, while probably not another article of value in the world can be named that has changed in price so little. Our commonest products of labor and necessaries of life, like wheat, corn, potatoes, cotton, wool, and other commodities, often fluctuate in price from one to two hundred per cent in a single year. Surely none of these valuable articles would make a better monetary unit than the one we now hav.

Your second affirmation you hav not established for the same reason that you lost your first.

Third. You affirm that "our present banking system, with every other we hav had, is a fraud." This, too, you hav lost, and in your fruitless tirade you hav exhibited lamentable ignorance of the very rudiment of the subject. You hav been rebutted in all of your statistics and vanquished at every point.

Fourth. You affirm that "usury, now called interest, is a fraud and destructiv of the best good of humanity, both materially and mentally." This affirmation, too, you hav failed to prove; and for further evidence of the fact that interest is not a fraud or a curse to humanity, I respectfully refer the reader to the subject of interest in my letter number four.

Fifth. You affirm that "a full legal tender paper money, stamped with the fiat of the government, is the best money for the wants of the whole people that has yet been devised."

You hav not proved this affirmation, for the reason that you fail to define or establish the measure of your "fiat;" and for the other reasons I refer the reader to this letter further on.

Sixth. You affirm that "the contraction of the currency is one of the main causes of our industrial depression."

This is your last affirmation, and likewise your last failure. In this argument you prove too much and become an accepted witness against your own theory.

Surely a contraction of the currency could not take place unless it had been previously expanded. And this unhealthy inflation is just what the true economist would warn the people against. Contraction or repudiation are the inevitable results of great paper inflation.

While there is no danger of an over issue of full-weight coin in any country, there is the greatest danger to be apprehended from inflation of paper promises beyond their easy redemption and the legitimate demands of trade. An over issue of gold and silver money will always find relief in the jeweler's crucible or by export demand in payment of imported goods. Coin, being of intrinsic worth, is everywhere accepted and is desired as an element of wealth, while paper promises, having no intrinsic worth, are invariably an evidence of indebtedness, their whole potency lying in the promis of redemption.

When redemption fails, the power of currency fails. There never being a foreign demand for irredeemable currency, it cannot be exported; therefore a redundancy, or over issue, finds relief only in depressing its purchasing power at home. As the purchasing power of irredeemable currency declines, it stimulates the issue of a still greater volume, which in turn continues to lower its value; thus it seems to act automatically and like a falling body—continually gathering momentum and increasing in velocity on the downward path to final repudiation.

DO WE REALLY NEED MORE MONEY?

The claim so often advanced that we need more money by several hundred per cent than we now hav, I believe to be one of the weakest arguments against our present monetary system. If every debt in the world was due at one time, and payable to creditors out of the world, and the collection of all debts could be enforced in one day, then it is plain that the total amount of money should be equal to the aggregate indebtedness of the world. But none of these conditions exist.

First. Our debts are not all due at the same time. Second. Every monetary debt is payable to some one on this globe, consequently the money used to cancel an obligation to-day is not lost or destroyed by the transaction, but is again paid out by the creditor to purchase property or cancel other obligations. Thus it continues to circulate and to discharge its full value at every equitable exchange.

Again. The great bulk of mercantil and banking operations are carried on by a system of book accounts, which does not involve the use of money except in comparativly small amounts to adjust balances. It is often the case where accounts are thus kept—showing debit and credit to the extent of millions of dollars—that the balance is so small on settlement day that a few dollars square the accounts. Thus it will be seen at a glance that the aggregate indebtedness of this world, and the total amount of money or measure of value in existence (if either could be approximately estimated), would bear very little proportion to each other, while the debts and the credits of the world would very nearly balance.

The idea entertained by many Greenbackers that we should hav a cheap money equal in volume to the whole property or the entire debts of the world, is equaled in absurdity only by the purely ideal measure of value.

FIAT MONEY.

I am particularly disappointed, Mr. Morrison, in your utter failure to define your new monetary unit. When you first proposed a new measure of value to take the place of gold and silver, I asked you, in the plainest words possible, what that measure was, how it was to be defined, and by what gauge? how much, and what quality; what substance, labor, or thing does your new unit express? but all of these questions you hav signally failed to answer. The only apology for an answer you hav made is the ridiculous proposition, by legislativ act alone to clothe certain pieces of paper, of no value, with power to discharge debt; the value of such fiat paper to be based upon no substance, labor, or thing of intrinsic worth, but its potency to be wholly conventional. I think, Mr. Morrison, if you would spend a few days in close application to the study of political economy under the direction of an unprejudiced competent teacher, you would soon discover that money must necessarily possess a measuring power to create debts, as well as to discharge them. To legislate all debts out of existence without rendering in return a full compensation, a measure of their value, is simply legal repudiation, and this is the banquet to which you invite the financial world. Anything to pay debts, a legal tender without measure except in name (as healthy food for the commercial world as irredeemable milk tickets would be to feed babies upon), is equivalent to bankruptcy, outlaw, and repudiation. This scheme is nothing new, however; debts hav been discharged in this dishonest way in the past, and may be in the future, but what intelligent person is there among us to-day who would render service or part with valuable goods with the fact staring him in the face that such debts could be legally repudiated? Not one. With your scheme in force, we should be compelled to cancel existing contracts and to discharge present debts for "fiat money," but no power on earth could force the people to make new contracts upon such a basis. All economists agree that money to be stable must possess a purchasing power as well as a paying one. The theory of a full legal tender paper currency or purely ideal monetary unit is nothing new. Nearly every great nation on the globe has at some period in her history been deluded by this ignatis fatuus.

Let the "fiat" advocates read the history of John Law's wild inflation schemes in France from 1716 to 1726, which finally made bankrupt the whole nation, leaving the great bulk of real property in the hands of a few shrewd speculators, while the masses were reduced to absolute beggary. Still later in the year 1789 the French government again abandoned her real monetary unit for a flat one, issuing an irredeemable paper currency, the famous "assignat," which was proclaimed by law a full legal tender for all debts, public and private (all that the most ardent in the present time could wish).

The first issue of twelve hundred million francs in assignats was quoted at the Bourse in Paris at ninety per cent of their nominal value. As the volume increased, however, their purchasing power declined. With the third and fourth issues, amounting in the aggregate to three thousand million francs, specie advanced in price, as measured by the fiat standard, to over one hundred per cent premium, and by the same undefined measure nearly every purchasable article doubled in value. The true economist and the most intelligent people of France became justly alarmed. The nation's bitter experience with John Law's fiat money was still fresh in the memory, and they earnestly besought the government not to increase the issue of irredeemable paper money. In vain did Necker, their great finance minister, and other practical economists warn the government of this danger; in vain did they quote the financial history of other nations, and point out the hidden rocks and the shoal places where the ship of state would surely wreck; the masses were intoxicated with the new financial system, and only clamored for more fiat money. Like the Greenback party of to-day, the inflationists were divided into two classes, one party who believed in the principles which they advocated, while the other party did not. The latter class, though largely in the minority, were by all means the most dangerous, and they were composed largely of intelligent non producers, unprincipled speculators, worn-out politicians, demagogs, and unfortunate ones who had bought lands and other property on credit, and who now worked for inflation as the surest means for them to unload with a profit upon the unsuspecting poor. The same arguments were advanced then as now; one division of the assignat party claimed that the apparent rise in values was an indication of prosperity; and as three hundred million francs in assignats had doubled the price of nearly all commodities, a still further inflation would bring almost the millennium.

Another class of inflationists, realizing that the advance in prices was not real, but the power of the assignats had declined by one-half, demanded an immediate increase, arguing that it was a plain mathematical principle, if one thousand francs were now required to do the former work of five hundred francs, to restore the equilibrium it was only necessary to double the volume of assignats.

Thus the two factions stimulated each other with this kind of sophistry, both pressing for inflation until the other issues were made, increasing the amount in circulation to five thousand milion francs, while the purchasing power of this currency had fallen to one fifth its nominal value.

About this time the new-born economists made the astounding discovery claimed by the Greenbackers of to-day, that their fiat money had not really declined in value, but the whole derangement of their financial register was owing to the wicked speculation of the bankers and brokers in coin.

Says Proudhomme, in "Les Revolutions de Paris," Jan. 17 1791, "Coin will keep rising until the people hav hung a broker." (Great minds run in the same channel, Mr. Morrison.) But these idle threats and all of the stringent laws passed by the government combined failed to maintain their fiat money. Down, down, it kept falling in value until the price of assignats soon ceased to be quoted at the Bourse, when all property owners repudiated them entirely. In 1796 nearly the whole volume of assignats, together with the "mandates," another worthless currency just issued, was found in the hands of the laboring class, who were forced through their poverty to accept paper promises to the last, while a few individuals who had unloaded their burdens upon the unsuspecting poor were in possession of all the real wealth of the nation.

Another striking illustration of the evil effects of an imaginary standard is presented in the history of Russia. In 1769 the government tried to force an irredeemable paper currency upon her people. The first issue of two hundred million roubles in assignations were maintained by the government for a short time at par with the silver rouble, but as the volume of these assignations increased their purchasing power declined, all commodities advanced to a fabulous price, until the silver rouble finally sold on the exchange for four roubles in paper money, and the leading merchants in St. Petersburg and other large cities in Russia refused to longer accept assignations in payment for goods. "Paul I. was so enraged that he threatened to erect a gallows on the exchange for the special benefit of all who refused paper currency."

The most stringent laws were passed by the government prohibiting the sale of gold and silver; loud threats were made against all dealers in exchange, and many ignorant people clamored for the blood of a broker. But all to no purpose. The power of assignations kept falling, until the great merchants and principal land-holders throughout the empire quietly folded their arms and refused to part with their goods or estates except for coin or its equivalent. A few years later the government effected a loan, issuing bills of credit based upon the standard of the old silver rouble, and the assignations were finally redeemed at the rate of 350 roubles in paper to 100 roubles in coin. The great loss entailed upon the people by this repudiation of over seventy per cent of the entire paper currency of the country fell principally upon the poor, who were least able to bear it.

Thus the history of inflation was again repeated, a few rich men were made richer while the masses were left poorer than before.

Austria has had a still more serious experience with fiat money. In 1797 the government issued seventy-five million florins in legal tender currency. The volume of these irredeemable promises increased as their value diminished, until 1811, when the quantity in circulation amounted to 1,060,000,000 florins, worth but ten per cent of the value represented. Upon this subject Mr. Dudley P. Bailey, Jr., an eminent statistician, writes: "By an imperial patent, issued on the 20th of February, 1811, and published March 15th, the paper money was reduced to one-fifth its nominal value, at which rate it was withdrawn and exchanged for new redemption notes, called 'Vienna value' paper money. Of these the government promised that only enough should be issued to redeem the bank notes, but subsequently, pressed by fresh necessities, it evaded the promis by issuing anticipation notes, so called because they were issued in anticipation of taxes, but essentially like the redemption notes except in name. The necessities of the government carried the issue of anticipation notes up to 466 533,088 florins at the beginning of 1816, besides 212,159,750 florins of redemption notes, making the total of Vienna paper money at that date 678,692,838 florins. This was again reduced to two-fifths its nominal value, thus making two state bankruptcies within a period of five years."

The financial history of many other nations might be referred to in proof of the fact that the remedies suggested by the inflationists of to-day are a thousandfold more dangerous to the masses than the financial diseases they would cure.

In justice to you, Mr. Morrison, let me say before closing that I am a little disappointed, still our discussion has not been without its good results. You hav fairly represented the Greenback party. You hav conducted your part of the argument with more than average ability, and although failing to establish your points, you hav been in one direction a success—you hav thoroughly exposed to the eyes of more than fifty thousand readers the utter absurdity of the Greenback theory. Nothing betrays a crime or destroys any false theory so effectually as an attempt to defend it.

When Wm. L. Yancey and other pro-slavery men came North more than twenty years ago to defend American slavery, they sounded the death knell of that criminal institution. So will the present defenders of the purely ideal monetary unit expose to the public the fallacy of their position and eventually bury their financial god.

Syracuse, June 15, 1880. JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

Mr. Herbold Replies to Mr. Chapman.

"This contest excites great interest in the metropolis, sir." "I believe it does," said Mr. Pickwick. "To which I hav reason to know," said Pott looking towards Mr. Perker for corroboration, "to which I hav reason to know my article of last Saturday in some degree contributed" (Pickwick Papers, Chap. 13).

Mr. E. A. Chapman in his letter of March 21st, published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 17th, wherein he assumes me to hav been unduly excited over his article, reminds me vividly of the valiant editor of the Eatansville Gazette, who imagined all London excited over his lucubrations, and his opponents writhing under his sarcasm. In his latest, wherein he finds me unworthy of notice, but notices nevertheless, he recalls Byron's Donna Julia, who, "swearing she would ne'er consent, consented," and furnishes me with an excuse for writing at this late day a reply to his letter of March 21st. I should say rewrite, for a copy of this article was dispatched by me to THE TRUTH SEEKER office in April, but was lost, mislaid, or not received, as I am informed by a note from its editor.

I can assure Mr. Chapman that no undue excitement existed in my mind when I wrote the article, to which the editor affixed the caption, "Is Materialism Bigotry?" It was written simply as a protest against the monopoly by Spiritualists of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S columns, and I mentioned Mr. Chapman's name, I presume, because from the frequency and extreme length of his articles in defense of anti-naturalism, it was uppermost in my mind. But it might just as well hav been the name of that Greene, Michigan, disciple of Chesterfield, whose unconscious ventriloquism made him mistake his own braying for that of some one else, and whose acknowledgment is hereby acknowledged. I am aware that it cannot be interesting to the readers of this journal to hav two correspondents bandy words and call names. As Mr. Chapman has been pleased, however, to make several misstatements and misrepresentations, and as through silence on my part I might be placed in a false light, I write the reply, and ask space for the same.

Mr. Chapman quotes Webster for a definition of the word bigotry. Well, Mr. Webster was a great man, and it requires considerable nerve for any one to differ with him. I do not accept Webster's definition of the word creation, however, and I differ from him in the definition of one or two other words. In Mr. Chapman's eyes this may seem sacrilege, and justify the calling in of the police, but I can't help it. I define a bigot to be a man or woman who will persecute or discriminate against another, politically or socially, on account of differences of opinion. I hav never been guilty of doing anything of that sort, for I hold, and hav always maintained, that every man is entitled to his opinions, whatever they may be, and that he ought on no account to be molested or discriminated against in his individual rights for holding them. I am just that kind of an "animal" (Mr. Chapman's elegant and polite expression), that I can take Mr. Chapman by the hand, honor and respect him as an individual, and so can I any one else whose opinions differ from mine. But it is the veriest cant and rankest hypocrisy to prose about respecting opinions that one considers foolish or pernicious. Nobody ever did or does so sincerely who is at all consistent. Hence, if Mr. Chapman wished to make me out a bigot because I showed any disrespect for anti-naturalism, he need not hav filled so much space for saying so little. I distinctly admitted in my first article that if to hold my opinion anent Spiritualism was bigotry, to make the most of it. I am willing, if that constitutes bigotry, to abide by the appellation, for the term bigot, out of the mouth of Mr. Chapman, has no more terrors for me than that of Infidel out of that of the orthodox. Since men like Huxley are designated by that title, why should I complain? But I would like the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER to understand that I distinguish between the individual and the opinions he may entertain, and that while I may respect and admire the individual, I am free to combat and giv no quarter to his opinions which may to me appear absurd and pernicious. And all this without being either inconsistent or a bigot. I ask no odds in this respect.

As to Mr. Henry M. Kiddle, I reiterate that he is no scientific authority. Mr. Chapman cannot hav been more incensed at this gentleman's removal as Superintendent of the public schools of New York on account of his Spiritualism than I hav been. It was never my intention to deny Mr. Kiddle's erudition or scholarly attainments, nor hav I done so. It is not necessary for Mr. Chapman to lug his Webster in again for a definition of the word science. I know very well that knowledge is one definition of it, but it is so only in its widest sense. If every individual who has knowledge on any particular subject is therefore scientific, then the cobbler, who knows how to patch a shoe, or a laundress, who knows how to darn a stocking, can lay claim to the appellation. That, too, may account for the large number of scientific ladies and gentlemen to be found in the ranks of the anti-naturalists. But in the concrete sense, a scientific man is one who makes a practical and exclusiv study of one or more of the different sciences. This is my, and I believe every educated man's, definition, and in this sense Mr. Kiddle is not scientific authority, and it excludes, too, myself, who makes no pretensions that way, and Mr. Chapman who does.

The Materialism that Spiritualism indorses must be a queer, a very queer, article. The one is the very antithesis of the other, and between the two there can exist no more harmony than does between fire and water. It is the religion of naturalism, and knowledge against that of anti-naturalists and speculation. They cannot exist together. One or the other must and will go to the wall. When I used the expression, "War to the knife," I purposed simply to express the antagonism that naturally exists between the two systems, and to indicate or typify the nature of the struggle that must inevitably ensue between, and end with the destruction of one of them. In view of the comical fears expressed by Mr. Chapman and my Chesterfieldian friend from Greene, Michigan, for the safety of their persons from my supposed sanguinary disposition, I now regret that I hav not used an expression more adapted to their comprehension, and less likely to excite their apprehensions. I am not at all bloodthirsty, and hav none but the kindest feelings toward Spiritualists individually, and of their rights and privileges I am as jealous as I am of my own. I do not contend against Spiritualists, but against Spiritualism.

Mr. Chapman complains of the electrotype phrases I hav used in designating Spiritualism. My dear sir, I cannot help it if the opponents of anti naturalism of three decades ago used these selfsame objectionable expressions. I cannot, possibly. Perhaps the fact of Spiritualism having remained the same continued and stereotyped round of so-called phenomena, engineered by exposed and unexposed prestidigitateurs, yclept mediums, is responsible for the remarkable fact that the electrotype phrases of thirty years ago are in force, and applicable to Spiritualism to-day. I agree with you in expressing my surprise that orthodoxy should make war upon you. It is more than surprising. It is incomprehensible, at least to me. Both systems are founded on human credulity and that insufferable conceit that causes men to think themselves superior to, and exempt from, the inexorable laws of nature, to pronounce the whole universe a failure or a bubble, unless their own precious picayune individualities should be perpetuated. There really is no reason why orthodoxy, par nobile fratrum, should quarrel.

Materialists do not, Mr. Chapman, oppose Spiritualists because they seek to establish a future existence. All we ask is that you do establish it, but do so by a posteriori, not a priori reasoning, by proof and demonstration, not by assertion. Mr. Allan Noe closes a recent article, "I maintain a future existence; disprove it if you can," or words to that effect. That sort of thing is very clever in you, gentlemen, but we cannot humor you so far. You maintain, you assert, you claim. Prove it then, if you can. 'Tis not surely our business to prove the negativ of your assertions. With the affirming party rests the burden of proof. When Mr. Chapman pretends that I would probably rise and boast, "Them's my sentiments," in the event of Mr. Huxley's declaring the moon to be formed of green cheese, he should hav added by way of parenthesis, This is sarcasm. It is the severest thing I hav read for some time, or would be with the suggested addition. Dear Mr. Chapman, you must not be so cruel and cutting. Believe me, that sarcasm is not your forte.

I said in the article of March 20th that I had always believed in preserving my individuality, promoting the cause of Freethought in my own way, and in not being responsible to or for any opinions made by any body of men collectivly. It was those principles or inclinations only that I sacrificed when, as I then stated, I was persuaded that individual effort was of no avail in accomplishing the special object of total separation of church and state, or in other words, to carry out the aims and objects of the National Liberal League. There is no doubt in my mind that hundreds of other men with similar inclinations, sacrificed or held them in obeyance, in order to institute a combined effort against the arrogance of the orthodox clergy, and in favor of secularism. Any reasonable and fair-minded man could hav understood my meaning, and honored my motivs. It remained for a Liberal Spiritualist, with malice prepense that would hav done honor to a Jesuit, to pervert a simple remark, and to make it appear that I had publicly and naively confessed to the sacrifice of a cardinal principle or principles. So little am I capable of any such thing that while I hav given, and am giving, my best efforts to the cause of the League, efforts of which Mr. Chapman knows nothing, and I shall not boast, I am not therefore to be disciplined into, or muzzled from combating anti-naturalists in my own way, and on my own hook, and when I feel inclined. Messrs. Green, Wright, and Walker hav no cause to stand up to be forgiven by me, even, as Mr. Chapman in the next paragraph observes, "He forgave Mr. Babcock"—no doubt to that gentleman's liveliest and intense satisfaction. I honor these gentlemen to the full as much as Mr. Chapman or other Liberals do, but my opinions on Spiritualism are no concern to these gentlemen, and Mr. Chapman might therefore hav saved himself the trouble of invoking their sympathy and interference, as if they were a police patrol, charged with the surveillance of other League member's private sentiments or antipathies.

Certainly, Mr. Chapman, you claim to hav the only demonstrated knowledge of a future existence. Your whole system, as previously remarked, is all claim and assertion. "Whoever this man Herbold may be," as you so solicitously inquire, he will not hesitate to pronounce nonsense nonsense, from whatever quarter it may come, and with your leave he will not accept anything as a demonstrated truth, not even on the ipse dixit of Mr. Chapman, unless it has been so demonstrated to him. You are pleased to charge me with ignorance and deceit. This, coming from an individual who belittles a Huxley, fills the pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER week after week to the exclusion of readable and interesting matter, and who charges every opponent that is not awed by his choice stock of epithets, and therefore ventures to break a lance with this intellectual Boanerges, with being ignorant, is indeed an honor and highly appreciated compliment. Thank you, sir, kindly.

In conclusion I will briefly notice two remarks of Mr. Chapman's and then take leave of him. He attempts to break the force of my remark that Robert Dale Owen, whom he had quoted as a scientific authority, was taken in by the Katie King fraud in Philadelphia, by volunteering the assertion that "that fraud was a conspiracy on the part of the church to defraud the public and to crush Spiritualism and those mediums." Even if this was the case, what a testimonium paupertatis is Mr. Chapman here giving the mental caliber of the hundreds of "intelligent and scientific" Spiritualists, who with Owen were duped by his swindle. I hardly think they will thank him for it. The exposure recently, at the rooms of the National Spiritualists Association in London, of the celebrated medium Florence Cook, about whom Messrs. Crookes, Wallace, and Zoellner hav written stupendous works, more lengthy even than Mr. Chapman's articles, was owing, no doubt, to a conspiracy on the part of Exeter Hall to destroy the nimbus surrounding his scientific anti-naturalist trinity, to crush the poor medium, and to throw discredit on the cause? Sad occurrences these exposes, very!

Pray, Mr. Chapman, what is there "mean or libelous" in the sentence, as I wrote, not as you quote it: "It won't do to talk of scientific women (who favor Spiritualism) and then not giv their names even. A scientific woman is preeminently a rara avis, and when caught we should like to see the plumage?" Will you name one woman who is acknowledged as scientific authority on any of the different branches of science? Pray do, and I will withdraw the expression. I profess to hav as much respect for women, if they deserve it, as any gentleman in the land. But I confess—to fill the measure of my iniquity and imperfections in the eyes of Mr. E. A. Chapman—that I am not one of those who at the mention of an individual, because, and solely because, that individual happens to be a female and to wear petticoats, go into contortions and genuflexions of awe and veneration; and I further confess that I hav a sovereign contempt for those that do. CHARLES J. HERBOLD.

Gospel versus Freethought.

In a copy of the London Daily News (not a pious paper) was a list of preachers' engagements for the following Sunday, commencing with "St. Paul's cathedral, morning, Dean of Litchfield," and ending, "Salvation Army, Oxford street, 3 P.M., Mrs. Booth," and not less than a hundred prominent preaching engagements intermediate. All this in one city. Similar advertisements all over England. The same all over America.

Suppose for a moment there was only one hundredth part such organization and advertisement throughout this land for the dissemination of Freethought that there is for the propagation of gospel. What an awakening of common sense would be witnessed! And, at the same time, what a wilting of gospel untruth! Could only one per cent of the Sunday addresses be regularly made by Freethought lecturers throughout the cities and towns of America, that little leaven of one per cent would in time leaven the whole lump. The largest cities will hav to be the pioneers for the regular propagation of Freethought on Sundays, and ultimately the smaller towns might follow suit. Traveling lecturers as missionaries might some day be more frequent than now, so that at least each town of any size might afford one address on a Sunday, not as now, on the "mystery of godliness," but on science, or social progress, or any other subject, rather than on superstition gone mad.

The Liberal Leagues may in time become strong enough to start such an organized plan of address on Sunday so as to compete with the "saints" and "salvation armies." Many a local Freethinker might talk to his fellow-men as local preachers do now, and for less pay too. Gospel monopoly is at present paramount, but many regard it with silent contempt, and would be glad of almost any substitute.

The Brussels Congress.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Please don't think thy friends are not anxious for thee to represent them at the Freethinker's Congress at Brussels. I am very sure from all I hear that they are so certain that D. M. Bennett will be the first man chosen to go that they hav not deemed it necessary to even say so. But money is needed, and I inclose one dollar, as my share of the expenses to take thee there. Mr. Slenker is as enthusiastic for thee to go as I am, and he hopes thee will hav a pleasant, useful, and profitable trip. I trust thy friends will show practically the good will they feel by sending in liberal contributions at once for this purpose, and I am sorry I cannot do more myself.

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

The Political Situation.—The Duty of Liberals.

The nominations are made. The champions are stripped for the contest as to which party shall control the government for the next four years. Hav Liberals a duty to perform?

Personally, the candidates may stand on nearly equal grounds. We hav received letters from those who personally know Gen. Garfield, pronouncing him a worthy, liberally-disposed man. That he did some good work in Congress toward checking the onward march of Comstockism must not be lost sight of, and proper credit should be awarded. There is an unfortunate and troublesome matter about Credit Mobilier stock, perjury, and De Golyer pavement contracts, into a discussion of which we shall not now enter.

Gen. Hancock has an excellent record. No charge of wrong-doing has been brought against him. Gen. Weaver is undoubtedly an honorable man, but the contest in this campaign must be between the Republicans and Democrats. There is a deep underlying principle in the Greenback-Labor party, but it must be left far in the rear in this contest. One of the two great political parties must be our rulers. The Greenbackers will not probably get an electoral vote. Shall the Republicans be our masters for the next four years, or shall we try the Democrats? We hav tried the Republican party for a quarter of a century. At first it did well. It was the party of liberty, the friend of the oppressed and downtrodden. It was the savior of our country. But it became corrupt; bad men controlled it. Frauds, rings, and stealings disgraced it. It has become the party of the rich against the poor, the strong against the weak, the capitalist against the laborer, the party of the priest, the church, the ecclesiastical power.

Three-fourths of the priests of the country are Republicans. A large majority of church members are Republicans. The men most eager to place God in the Constitution are Republicans. Those most forward in Comstock postal-law legislation are Republicans. A Republican took it to Congress and urged it through. A Republican senator introduced it. Republican members passed it. A Republican President signed it. A Republican informer and detectiv has prosecuted it with the aid of Republican marshals, attorneys, and judges, and when 200,000 people of this country petitioned a Republican President to release a man who had been unjustly convicted and imprisoned under it, and when the church said to him, "No; keep him in prison," he disregarded the 200,000 Liberals and listened to the church.

These are the facts, and Liberals should not forget them in the coming election. The Democrats are undoubtedly most in sympathy with Liberals. They hav inserted an excellent plank in their platform in reference to the severance of church and state, which is about all the Liberals can ask of them. Both parties are evidently bidding for the Liberal vote, but we should unite with our best friends to oppose our worst enemies. A plank in the Chicago platform against sectarian schools is well, but it is not so terse, clear, and comprehensiv as that of Cincinnati. The Democrats hav promised to be our friends. The Republicans hav been our enemies. Let us make a wise choice as to whom we ally ourselvs.

It is premature for us to hav separate candidates of our own. It would be a futile effort. We could gain nothing but glory, and a poor article at that. Let us put our strength where it will be practical and effectiv. Let us not throw it away. A majority of us wish to defeat the ecclesiastical, priestly party. Ecclesiasticism is our worst foe. Let us strive to thwart it. Already are the Witness and other religious papers holding up the superiority of Garfield as a candidate because he is a religious man, a Christian. Perhaps the same sentiment was more tersely expressed by a somewhat humorous delegate to the Chicago Convention from San Francisco. After the unexpected nomination of Garfield, he approached a friend from this city with, "Well, M———, this means four years more of psalm-singing in the White House." Garfield's piety and religious antecedents will be his principal stock in trade in this campaign. (He was formerly a preacher, and Arthur is the son of a preacher.) In the Witness of June 17th, after laboring in a long editorial to make it appear that Garfield and Colfax were not so very bad in taking bribes (and then committing perjury about it), it exultingly exclaims in another article: "What a privilege it is, therefore, to hav the prospect of a decided Christian, as we believe Mr. Garfield is, for President of this grand republic! May he be guided and sustained by the Holy Spirit in his administration if elected!"

The Liberals of this country are not in favor of the triumph of the religious, pious, ecclesiastical party. They wish church and state entirely disunited as the Democratic platform prescribes. They should not support a preacher or the same party that preachers support. Our interest lies in the opposit direction. Ecclesiasticism, pietism, and Comstockism are what we specially oppose. The Republican party has fostered these and opposed us. Let us then turn from that party and look to the Democrats, who promis us a complete disunion of church and state. With Hancock elected, Comstock will be dismissed, and our government will hav no further use for such unprincipled spies and detectivs. The state governments will be left to punish the crimes committed within their limits, and the government of the United States, with its courts, marshals, judges, and attorneys will no longer be employed to send men to prison because they deny the truth and divinity of the Christian religion. The Republican party has trampled upon the liberties guaranteed to us in the Constitution. Let us join the Democratic party in restoring to us those sacred treasures.

The Moral Scorpion.

The scorpion is a formidable insect, varying from one inch to five inches in length, according to the parts of the earth where found. It belongs to the spider family, but its venom is probably more deadly than theirs, except, perhaps, the tarantula, which is a member of the same family. The mode of warfare of the latter is by biting, while that of the former is by a sting in the end of its tail. Both produce death by the venom which they eject. They are justly feared and abhorred by all who know the virulence of the poison which they secrete.

We remember reading an account of a fight which was encouraged by an observing naturalist between a scorpion and a much larger animal which also was poisonous. The contest was continued for a long time, the scorpion showing a great amount of persistency. He kept his tail curved over his back, and he planted the stings into his antagonist as often as he could manage to do so. He received most severe punishment, and in his agony and hoplessness he stung himself to death.

The late editor of the Index has more than once reminded us of the scorpion. The venom with which he seems to abound, his mode of attack, his persistency in the contests he provokes, the deadly intent of his thrusts, and finally the desperation of stinging himself to death in a hopeless encounter, bear, to us, a striking resemblance to the insect just named. He has certainly pursued us with the venom, the hate, and the persistency of the poisonous scorpion. Even in his last issue for June 24th, in which he gave his valedictory, and in which even his friends wished he would spare the exhibition in this his last appearance of the stings, the venom, and the thrusts for which he has become so noted, it seems he could not let the opportunity pass. He could not forego the pleasure, if pleasure it be, of giving his hated antagonist another full dose of his poison. In about a dozen different places he spews out his venom toward us particularly, with about his usual amount of unfairness and falsehood. The sharpness of his sting is gone, but the poison of the venom and the persistency of his hate still remain. If he can rouse the courage and determination to sting himself to death, it possibly may be one of the most appropriate uses he can put himself to. (Those who prefer to change the g in sting to k, of course can do so.)

It is not worth while, here, to designate his various mean attacks, made in his almost dying struggles, as they are so much like the multitudinous efforts in the same line for the last two years and a half, or more. He has probably indulged in as great an amount of hatred toward us as one man or insect ever felt for a human being before. It began in an ignoble envy and jealousy which we did nought to encourage. We recognized his intellectual attainments, and the superior opportunities he had enjoyed. We accorded him the respect and deference due to a really superior mind, and on no occasion did we speak ill of him, publicly or privately. But the seed of hatred was planted in the soil of his heart and it germinated and grew vigorously. When the minion of the church power caused our arrest, and the prison doors seemed almost to be opening for us, and with other men, we made an effort to get an unjust law repealed, he took open ground against it and did all he could to thwart our efforts. He did far worse: he applied to us such opprobrious epithets as "libertin," "promoter of obscenity," "foul Freelover," and much more in the same line. He also charged us with forgery, but failed in proof. He made numerous false charges against us and said many very false and unkind things. We counted nearly a hundred falsehoods which he printed in his paper, in connection with the quarrel he raised, and which continued till the meeting of the Liberal League Congress in Syracuse in 1878. Because a majority of the delegates to that Congress preferred the Hon. Elizur Wright to him as President his rage, though impotent, knew no bounds, and has not been assuaged to this day.

He has the arrogance to think he is the only man capable of conducting the Liberal element of this country. He is the "Consensus of the Competent," to whom all ought to obsequiously bow. The Liberal League in the hands of such men as Wright, Green, Palmer, Wakeman, and others, he thinks has gone to the eternal bow-wows, and is engulfed in indecency and obscenity. This he has cried forth and reiterated again and again. Even in his dying gasp alluded to, he says: "The present outlook of American Liberalism is threatening and black. . . There is a thunder-storm brewing ahead. . . [How long since did thunder-storms commence brewing?] . . For two years and a half the very worst elements in society (outside of the distinctivly criminal class), hav been seizing more and more the control of organized Liberal movements; and their ambition is to seize them all at last. . . Healthy organization has come to a complete standstill; unhealthy organizations are springing up like mushrooms all over the land. To go into the work of Liberal organization to-day without the keen vigilance of which I see no sign at present, would be to play directly into the hands of a party that is an incarnate moral pestilence. . . It is evident, therefore, that the present state of things cannot last, it is utterly incredible that the striking shame of it should be forever borne in meekness and submission by the intelligent, pure, upright people who compose the vast majority of the Liberals. A reaction will surely come; but it cannot, now that the party of license hav entrenched themselves so strongly, come without a tempest," etc., etc. Thus he goes on; the poor little scorpion must hav stung himself, and let it be hoped it will ere long be at rest.

In another place this poor envenomed thing calls THE TRUTH SEEKER a "mad-dog sheet," and piteously asks how long it will be tolerated by American Liberals. Let it be gently whispered to the poor scorpion that it bids fair to be tolerated some time yet. Let him die easily.

As this consensus of the competent is now about to retire from public view, it is well to remember some of his most brilliant characteristics:

1. He proved himself capable of entering into a plot or conspiracy to break down and ruin a competitor who had unjustly been sent to prison.

2. To enable him to get the material to perform his dirty work he proved himself capable of sending a person—a contemptible puppy in human shape—to this city to search for private letters, and to smell out the private affairs of certain individuals.

3. When the plot was matured, and the plans all laid, he published those private letters in thousands of extra sheets, interlarded with slander and lies, and sent them broadcast over the land.

4. To make his poison more effectual he sent his low sheet to the friends and patrons of the man he wished to destroy, their names being taken from a list stolen from the injured man.

5. He has followed up his villainous course, using the grossest falsehood and misrepresentation, and all in the name of "culture," "purity," and "morality," until, utterly defeated, he is compelled to retire, hors du combat, from the field. May his like not be seen again.

We learn he is to hav charge of the education of young men—Hebrew and otherwise—and it is ardently to be hoped that he will not teach them what he has practiced. Let him not teach those young men to be sneaks, liars, and slanderers. Let him teach them decency, truth, and honor. Let also all rejoice that the Index is now and henceforth to be free from poison, venom, malice, and lies; that it will no longer be a nest for scorpions.

The Signal of Distress.

The editor of Mind and Matter for June 26th quotes a cry of distress, a lusty call for help, made by Bundy in his R-P. Journal, and givs, in fact, Bundy's entire wail. Bundy it seems is wanting money pretty badly, and he calls upon his patrons to pay up their arrearages, and advance a year's subscription, or the paper must "go up." His words are these:

"This money we need; and it is absolutely essential to the life of the paper that every debtor exercise the utmost effort to pay at once. There is a widespread notion current that we publish a paper for the 'fun of it,' having plenty of means outside of the income from the Journal. Such is not the case, and whenever the paper ceases to be self-supporting, should such a time ever come, it will gracefully bid adieu to the public and join the large army of similar enterprises 'gone before.' . . . If you fail to respond, your loss will be greater than ours. If you want Spiritualism by such a paper as the Journal is, you know how it can be done."

Has it indeed come to this? Is Bundy so near "gone up the spout" that he begins to talk about stopping his paper if money is not sent in right away? Is he in such financial straits that he thus has to make the grand hailing sign of distress? Is he indeed so near sinking beneath the billows of a righteous retribution?

It is pretty well known that when S. S. Jones died the Journal was in a successful condition. It had a large circulation, and had become a financial success. But within the two or three years that Bundy has been running it, and pursuing his scoundrelly course of lying, slandering, blackmailing, and defaming people immensely better than himself, since he has been trying to the utmost to break down those in a similar business, it has suffered greatly in consequence. We do not know as we hav been correctly informed that since Bundy commenced his despicable, contemptible, and most unjustifiable course towards us while in prison, his paying subscribers hav dropped off more than half, but we do know, from the letters we hav received, that great numbers of his readers left him in disgust, and now he is hoisting the signal of distress.

We wish no harm even to a deadly enemy. We hope those who like a paper conducted by an unprincipled, slandering, lying villain, a man who tries with the little ability he possesses to break down and destroy others, and to utterly ruin them financially and in reputation—we trust those who wish to sustain such a paper and such a man will forward their spare dollars to Bundy at once. The prospects, from the way he talks, must be cheering for them to do so. Yes, help the vile calumniator and traducer, lest he lose some of his bread and butter, and faint by the way. We do not wish to exult even over a fallen foe—the man who tried to kill us and destroy us forever—but if his dishonorable sheet is in the dire strait he represents it, it is the most pronounced case of "served him right" that we hav ever met with. The man who resorts to the most low and base means to destroy others does not deserve success. Such a paper, such a man is unworthy of the support of honorable, high-minded people. Hypocrites, liars, and slanderers are not the class which American Liberals and Spiritualists should sustain.

The Freethinkers' Congress.

We hav been in a somewhat unsettled state of mind as to whether we should cross the Atlantic and meet with our brother Freethinkers in Brussels next month, and had about concluded to let the matter be decided by our friends and patrons over the country. If they cared much about our going we presumed they would aid us a little so we could go, and had about decided if half enough did not thus come in we would stay at home and let the Congress get along the best way it could without our presence. But since we hav perceived that Mr. Abbot, in his last issue of the Index, and Bundy of the R.-P. Journal are very much opposed to our going and think us an unfit person to represent the Freethinkers of America, it has settled the matter in our mind. We hav decided to go whether our friends send us the money or not, that is, if we can borrow enough to go with, and we guess we can.

As for people to represent, there is no lack. Numerous organizations hav sent us credentials duly signed and executed, and more are coming in every day. These are independent of THE TRUTH SEEKER readers, who number some fifty thousand. We are daily receiving earnest assurances that they wish us to represent them at Brussels and desire us to go. They deem us a good enough representativ for them. We do not wish to represent the Abbot-Bundy crowd. We do not desire to represent liars, slanderers, defamers, traducers, calumniators of men, women, and children, ungentlemanly, dishonorable meddlers and nosers in other people's private affairs, buyers and publishers of people's private letters, users of names from an abused man's stolen mail list to send their lying slanders to, and for the purpose of doing deadly injury to a man already deeply wronged. We do not want to represent such men as will jump upon a brother, when bound and prostrate, and do all they can to help his enemies beat his brains out, and supply those enemies with weapons when theirs are broken. No, we do not wish to represent that class of lying, sneaking, unprincipled scoundrels, vilifiers, and maligners of the good and well-disposed; nor do we believe that our brothers across the water wish that class of villains to be represented among them. From all we can learn of that Congress, it is to be composed of gentlemen and persons of honor and truth. Whenever there is a Congress gotten up of Paul Prys, nosers into other people's private letters, meddlers, busy-bodies, mischief-makers, tell-tales, tattlers, blackmailers, suborners, falsifiers, liars, traducers, defamers, hypocrites, self-righteous howlers, Pharisees, plotters, conspirators, low-lived detectivs, informers, garroters, sneaks, assassins, those who try to their utmost ability to injure their fellow-beings, who will kick and beat a prostrate foe, who will do their utmost to ruin and destroy a struggling brother; maligners, befoulers, slanderers, and calumniators—yes, when a Congress of this kind is held, we shall recommend as fit delegates Abbot, Bundy, and Comstock—the A B C of low-lived villainy and falsehood.

As to our fitness or unfitness as representativ we hav little to say. We can only assert that we hav endeavored to lead a decent, honorable, temperate, industrious life. If we hav done injustice or wrong to one of our fellow-beings we do not know it; and we can truthfully say it was not intended. We hav written some private letters, it is true, but they were private and harmless, and A., B., C. & Co. had no business with them whatever. The wrong that was committed in writing them was pardoned years ago; and Abbot and Bundy were uselessly and dishonorably employed in digging them up, publishing them, lying about them, circulating them broadcast over the land, and trying their utmost to "raise hell generally" about them. Verily, verily, they shall hav their reward.

We are glad to assure our readers that we shall be made happy on our European trip by the society of true, honorable Liberal friends. Mr. A. L. Rawson has decided to go; our good friend Mr. A. Minski, of Superior, Neb., will accompany us; Mrs. Dr. E. B. Foote and Mrs. Augusta C. Bristol sailed for Europe on Wednesday of this week; Dr. T. S. Andrews and wife, of Kipton, Ohio, are going, though they may leave a few days before we do; Mr. Edmond Gastineau and wife are going, and they are all good and true Liberals, and will be fit representativs of American Freethinkers. Messrs. O. B. Frothingham, A. E Giles, G. E. Hoffman, and Mrs. Ernestine L. Rose are now in Europe, and it is hoped they will be able to attend the Congress. Mr. Abbot tries to throw out some slurs in reference to Mr. Frothingham, but we are very sure Mr. Frothingham has not authorized Mr. Abbot to be spokesman for him, and that he is in sympathy with the Freethinkers of America, and not with the exclusiv, self-righteous, extra-cultured Pharisees and narrow-souled hypocrits who wish to set themselvs up as the "Consensus of the Competent."

We will not deny that we hav a desire to go to Europe, independent of the Congress. We hav for many years wished to visit that part of the globe before we "pass in our checks," and believing we shall never be any younger than we are this year, we hav thought we would like to go now, and thus, by attending the Brussels Congress and having a little recreation also, be able to kill two birds with one stone, or, perhaps, two stones with one bird. And we don't know but we are justly entitled to a little recreation for a few weeks. Our range was rather circumscribed during the past year, and now, if we hav an opportunity of enlarging it a little for a few weeks, it may serve to equalize matters somewhat.

We cannot go till Volume II. of "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" is finished. It will be out in a few days. It is now in press and will soon make its appearance. We expect to leave about the middle of the present month, and to be home again near the middle of September. We hope to be remembered by our numerous friends while absent.

We will append the names of those who hav contributed toward the European trip, and will just once more modestly observe that if there are still any—and there may be a few—who cannot sleep well nights because they hav not sent us that dollar, they had perhaps better set their minds at rest, and giv a little play to their generosity for once. If there is now and then a newly fledged Liberal, just broken loose from the leading-strings of the church, where all his spare dollars were expected to be paid in, he may wish to giv a dollar on this different occasion. But we don't want to insist, you know, dear friends.

The Case of Mr. Bradlaugh.

The English House of Commons has degraded itself in the eyes of the intelligent and growing Liberalism of the world; it has renewed the work of the Inquisition, and is oppressing a worthy man on account of his theological and religious views. It is a most extraordinary spectacle which that government is at this time presenting to the world. Charles Bradlaugh, a man of intelligence, probity, and moral worth, having been legally and clearly elected a member of the House of Commons by the voters of Northampton, has been refused a seat by that body because he does not subscribe to the Christian creed, including the Thirty-nine Articles of the old theological platform. He first objected to taking the prescribed Christian oath, and wished to affirm. That privilege was denied. When, upon further reflection, he concluded to take the oath with such mental reservations as would not do violence to his conscience, he was refused the right to take the oath When he again presented himself as the member duly elected by the citizens of Northampton, he was peremptorily refused a seat by the Tory or religious party of the house; and when he refused to abandon his right and leave the floor, he was placed under arrest and confined in prison for a whole day. Thus a duly elected member of the House of Commons, bearing the mandate of his constituents, and vested with the one vital and all-absorbing function of the English Constitution, is refused his seat, and is even thrown into prison, for asserting the sacred rights of the electors, violated in his person. When it is borne in mind that this display of religious intolerance takes place in the year 1880, and in the country which vaunts itself as the mother and home of free thought and free speech, well may the world stand appalled with consternation and horror. It is a monstrous and almost incredible proceeding, and tells us in thunder tones of the oppressiv power which the church still holds over the rights of the people and the individual.

It is a most disgraceful exhibition of high-handed bigotry and theological domination over the most sacred rights guaranteed by custom and the Constitution. Such conduct can only produce a feeling of resentment and indignation on the part of all fair-minded people in the world. It is an attempt of the theological party to crush and trample to the earth the right of a man to maintain his honest convictions. It is the same spirit which lighted the fires of Smithfield, Geneva, and hundreds of other places where millions of the human race hav been tortured to death because they had not found favor in the eyes of the theological party, and because they dared to do a little of their own thinking. It is saddening to see the spirit of intolerance and persecution thus again aroused and asserted in high places and where it should not be looked for. It must serve to alarm us on this side of the Atlantic, and show us still more clearly the character of the same foe with which we ourselvs hav to contend.

Mr. Bradlaugh, however, has shown himself a hero—a sturdy defender of his own rights and the rights of his legal constituents. Upon regaining his liberty he has appealed directly to the people. He is making vigorous and eloquent speeches to the people of Northampton. His meetings are being largely attended, and the greatest degree of enthusiasm in his favor is aroused. Sympathy for the wrongs that hav been done him comes to him from all parts of the world. His friends in this country are fervid and outspoken. The tyranny of the theological power is denounced more than ever. It is only a question of time. Such injustice from the party in power must inevitably work its own defeat and aid in its final overthrow. The right will be triumphant when kingly and priestly despots are hurled to the earth. Bradlaugh will ere long be permitted to take his seat in Parliament; he will triumph over his enemies and over the inquisitorial, intolerant, persecuting power of the ecclesiastical party which is trying so hard to crush him. Bradlaugh and truth must win. Religious tyranny and oppression must go to the wall.

Is It Father or Son?

On June 23d the daily Truth printed a long account about the disposition of Anthony Comstock to not pay his just butcher's and grocer's bills. Since it was printed one of the reporters of Truth had an interview with his Dirtiness in which he denied that it was he who did not pay his grocer's bills, but that father of his who has often made him ashamed by his improper conduct. It is unsafe to giv full credence to anything the son may say. If he tells the straightforward truth it is a departure from his usual course. His explanation about those unpaid butcher's and grocer's bills is not entirely satisfactory. There are those who think that the son who is drawing a salary of eighty dollars a week for most miserable services, should see that his poor aged father is not under the necessity of cheating grocers, butchers, and bakers out of the money that justly belongs to them. It is well known that the son has unfeelingly suffered his aged parent to be brought to the very verge of starvation. But for the charity of friends, in no wise related to him, it is believed the old man would hav starved. Many and many a day has the old man walked the streets of this great city without a mouthful of food to put into his stomach, his naked toes sticking out of a miserable pair of shoes and in the coldest of weather, while the son was drawing the snug salary of $80 every week. What does he care for his parent so that Colgate and Crosby approve his vile conduct?

Equaling Jesus in Fasting.

Our Liberal friend, Dr. Tanner, of Minneapolis, Minn., now in this city, within the last few days commenced at Clarendon Hall, for scientific purposes, a protracted fast of forty days. Dr. Hammond and several other regular physicians insist that the thing is impossible, but we believe it can be done. Dr. Tanner three years ago passed forty-two days without tasting a mouthful of food. He has narrated to us all about his experience during those forty-two days, and as he is not a Christian we think he can be believed. This long fast, as now, was self-imposed, but we think it requires more self-government and will-power than we could well command. When we hav sometimes gone eight or ten hours without eating, we felt as though we could not stand it any way in the world; how then must a person feel about the thirtieth or fortieth day? The Doctor says the pangs of hunger were the keenest about the eighth or ninth day, after which the acute hunger gradually subsided, though the weakness increased. He fell off in flesh some twenty pounds, if we remember correctly, and his friends, who did not know that he was fasting, became alarmed about him, and thought he was going off with a rapid consumption. Dr. Tanner says such protracted fasting is a splendid means of curing many chronic diseases, especially those which depend upon an impure condition of the blood. He insists that scrofula, salt rheum, and even secondary syphilis can thus be effectually cured. The theory certainly seems reasonable. We long hav thought fasting a very excellent mode of curing attacks of disturbed stomach, headache, feverishness, etc. In point of economy it certainly excels all other pathies we know of. To stop taking food is certainly much cheaper and better than making a drug shop of the stomach, or having doctors to pay two visits a day at $3.00 each. Dr. Tanner is now constantly under the inspection of able physicians, who report from day to day that he takes no food whatever. We do not intend to try the experiment of fasting forty days just yet awhile. We will go to Europe first, anyway. We had rather yield the point that in this respect Jesus Christ and Dr. Tanner can excel us. But when it comes to being tempted by the devil for forty days and nights, we will not abandon our post. We are not afraid of him. Only let us hav a reasonably full stomach, and we will defy him to do his worst.

Freeville Meeting.

Mrs. Colby and Mrs. Smith are engaged to attend a meeting at Freeville, N. Y., on Sunday, July 4, at which time a very large gathering is anticipated. Persons wishing their services can address them as above.

"The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times."

The following is what H. L. Green says of the above-entitled work in Mind and Matter:

The old adage says, "Giv the devil his due," and therefore we must giv a little credit to Comstock. Probably if he had not sent D. M. Bennett to the Albany Penitentiary we should not have had written "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," which is one of the most valuable theological works that has recently been published. For the last week I hav been reading the first volume, and I am greatly pleased with it. Mr. Bennett not only givs us much from his well-stored mind on the subjects treated of, but givs us also what has been written on these subjects by the best and most distinguished thinkers of this and former ages. It is a most admirable work for reference, and no person who desires to be well informed on the issues that divide the orthodox and Liberal world can afford to do without it. It is a very large work, the first volume containing 835 pages. I can't see how Mr. Bennett could hav written so much while in prison, or how he can afford to publish it so cheap—the two volumes for $5.00.

Discussion.

Mr. Mair's Reply.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In reply to your introductory letter permit me to say that I regret using the words in my note, "uncalled-for misrepresentation, blasphemy, and obscenity," because you have taken them as a personal charge against yourself. I did not intend my letter, when I wrote it, for publication, as it was merely a private note, to which I asked a reply also by letter. But since you have called for substantiation, I shall give my reasons for applying the words "misrepresentation," and "obscenity" to parts of your paper, omitting blasphemy, to which you do not object. This latter word, however, I would say for myself, was not used as an anticipative argument.

In the abstract of Col. Ingersoll's lecture in your issue of May 29th, are these words: "After a while, we are told that this wise God thought he would try his hand on a new race, so he selected the Hebrews. . . He paid no attention to educated Greece. He totally overlooked the Roman people with their advanced civilization." With those who are unacquainted with history the sarcasm might have some weight, but to ordinarily well informed people who know that at the date of the call of Abraham neither "educated Greece," nor "the Roman people with their advanced civilization," had ever begun to exist, the whole thing would seem merely a flourish of rhetoric. This is what I call a misrepresentation.

In the same paper I consider the article entitled "Abraham's Bosom" obscene. Such language as "damned mean enemies" (issue of June 5th), "a damned fool," and the witticism as to the "attractions of Abraham's antiquated wife,"etc., are to me obscene. I consider the morbid delight with which the sins and filthiness of many professed Christians (especially clergymen) is paraded before the public in "Notes and Clippings," obscenity. Even if Christianity be false these are things to sorrow over, not to exult and scoff at. But you will believe me when I say that I did not mean any offense by the language used, and would not have used it had I known the letter was to have been made public. As to the alleged obscenity of the Bible, I presume that will be a proper topic to introduce further on in our discussion.

I wished to confine argument to the Bible itself for several reasons. If it is a book inspired by God he can and will authenticate it to every soul that honestly seeks him. "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." If the book itself is false, no arguments of its beneficial effects can make the religion it teaches of any force. If it be true, no objections against it, drawn from the disloyalty of its professed followers are of any avail. There is the book; it shrinks not from the most searching criticism, provingly answering the need of men, as nothing else can, by its unity, by its prophecy, by its morality, by the known answers of a living Savior to the calls of those who receive the book, proving by all these, and many other infallible proofs to those who honestly study it, its divine origin. And this is a proof that can not be overturned by any sophistry or ingenuity of men, available alike to the most illiterate as to the most learned.

However, I will at your desire, open the discussion to all that legitimately belongs to the subject, premising at the same time that I have as many objections to Christendom as you have, as a corruption which scripture itself foretold, and from which it warns me to separate myself. And please understand me, I do not defend anything but what I find taught in the scriptures, and I will not discuss what you call "Christianity as taught elsewhere," neither do I desire to palliate or deny the vileness of many who professed to be followers of Christ. But I will discuss every one of your propositions as far as they prove aught against the genuineness, authenticity, or divine inspiration of the Bible, and shall trust to your honor and manliness not to charge Christianity with the evils of Christendom which have been brought on only by disloyalty to the teachings and doctrines of the book it professed to obey.

As the next article will be the commencement of the discussion proper, might there not be a more condensed arrangement of the propositions? For instance, the first, second, third, and fifth might be made into one thesis; number four into another; number six another; number seven another; the eighth, ninth, and tenth into another; the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth would coalesce as another; numbers sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen as another; numbers nineteen to twenty-three another; number twenty-four another; and number twenty-five the last, making ten distinct theses. After the discussion of these I should then ask permission to take the initiative in affirming the following:

1. The progressive order of transactions related in the Old and New Testaments prove their divine origin.
2. The unity of the Bible proves its divine origin.
3. The miracles related therein affirm the same.
4. The prophecies of the Bible confirm its divine authorship.

The opening thesis, then, of our discussion will be, "Christianity is neither new or original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion, for, 1. The belief in an offspring being begotten by a God upon a human virgin is nearly a thousand years older than the mythical story of Jesus and his virgin mother; 2. Other so-called saviors and redeemers have been believed in and reported to have been crucified and to have died on the cross many hundreds of years before the same was said of Jesus; and, 3. There is not a dogma, rite, sacrament, or ceremony in Christianity that did not exist in pagan systems from five hundred to two thousand years before Christianity was known in the world."

Upon reflection, I should like, with your permission, to rearrange the succeeding propositions as follows:

Second thesis. Miracles and supernatural achievements have been as fully and as truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

Third thesis. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

Firstly. It was not written by Jesus himself nor by his apostles.

Secondly. What are called the four gospels are unauthentic or spurious productions. Not one was written by the one whose name it bears, and not one was known to be in existence until one hundred and fifty years after the time of the reported death of Jesus.

Thirdly. There were large numbers of what were called gospels and epistles in the first few Christian centuries which were not admitted into the Christian canon, but vied with them in correctness, and were as much entitled to be admitted as a large majority of the books that were called inspired and were accepted as such.

Fourthly. The early Christian Fathers were designing, hypocritical, and dishonest. Their contentions and quarrels about matters of faith and the authenticity of certain gospels and epistles continued for centuries.

Fourth thesis. The teachings of Jesus are defective in morals, intelligence, and scientific information, and, so far as they are of value, his moral precepts and teachings were equaled by many sages and teachers who preceded him. The Bible itself was written by men illy informed in scientific knowledge, and does not harmonize with the facts and principles in nature known to be true.

Fifth thesis. The doctrines and claims of Christianity have been a curse instead of a blessing to mankind in many respects. Instead of being a religion of love it has been a religion of hate, contention, war, and bloodshed.

It has fostered ignorance, superstition, and falsehood, and has retarded education and science in the world.

It recognizes and supports the most obnoxious systems of kingcraft and priestcraft, upholding slavery, despotism and every form of oppression in its assertion that all power is of God.

As a proof of the above, the leaders and bright stars of the Christian church have been among the worst tyrants and oppressors of human liberty the world has known.

Sixth thesis. The Bible and Christianity have oppressed woman and have deprived her of the rights to which by nature she is justly entitled.

Seventh thesis. The Bible and Christianity are unprogressive in their nature. They are founded upon the doctrine and authority of God himself and are therefore incapable of progress and improvement. While all branches of art, mechanism, science, architecture, and agriculture are capable of progress, the Bible and Christianity admit of none.

Eighth thesis. The Bible and Christianity do not teach the highest class of truth and the best variety of religion which mankind are capable of receiving. They are of the past, not the present; and as they cost incomputable treasures in labor and money to sustain them, and as science, reason, and truth teach us a far better and truer religion at only a moiety of the other, the world should discard the former and embrace the latter.

In conclusion, to notice your kind permission to obtain the assistance of my "friends, the clergy," allow me to say that as I do not find in the New Testament any authority for the Episcopalian or priestly idea of clergy, I repudiate the office as earnestly as you; and as to asking their assistance, while I cannot but admire your magnanimity in giving me this permission, I yet prefer to rely on my own research and reading for historical notes and on the spirit of God to teach me to reply to any sophistry as to his own peerless book.

You "trust that" I "will enter into this" discussion "thoroughly." I want to do so. Let us, then, have facts and truths and authorities, and not mere assertions without proof, and argument instead of ridicule and jest, which are ever confessions of weakness.

In the hope of receiving the former in your proof of this first thesis, I remain, sincerely yours,

G. M. MAIR.

Moses Hull and the R.-P. Journal.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: That old Roman virtue, which said, "Saul, thou art permitted to speak for thyself," seems, if ever any of it belonged to that Western sheet called the R.-P. Journal, to hav died out. The Journal regularly traduced and denounced me during the life of that archvillain S. S. Jones, and all for no other reason than because I compelled him to pay an honest debt, a thing he never would do if he could avoid it. Since his death, I had hoped, for the good of the Journal and Spiritualism, it would become more honest; but alas, the leopard cannot change his spots. The following letter was written to the Journal sometime since, and as it fully explans itself I only ask you as a lover of fair play to giv it a place.

Permit me to say I am glad you hav gone for Underwood in the way you hav. There is more of the same yet to come. As ever, MOSES HULL.

Belvidere, Ill, June 18, 1880.

MOSES HULL ASKS FOR JUSTICE.

Editor R.-P. Journal: I believe I never asked a favor of you or the Journal; I do not now ask or desire any favors, I only ask for justice; and that, not so much for my sake as to test your fidelity to the standing motto on your first page. In former years, the Journal denounced me very bitterly—whether it made anything or I lost by the denunciations, I do not know. Under its present management there has been less of that vindictiv spirit, but the "leopard" has not wholly "changed his spots."

When the Bennett letters were published, my name was dragged into comments in a false light. Not one word concerning me in that article had even a shading of truth.

Afterward when the Second Society of Spiritualists of New York, unsolicited by myself, employed me, some editorial comments were made by the Journal, which took the position that I had brought disgrace on every other speaker who had occupied or would occupy that rostrum. I was compared to a mad dog, etc. It appears, however, that the speakers thought and still think differently, as the society has more than a dozen applications from good speakers for every Sunday in the year.

My February engagement did not kill the Society, (in fact, no society ever died or dwindled on my hands,) but made a universal demand for my services in April. The April engagement caused the Society by unanimous vote to call me back for the five Sundays of May. During the nine Sundays of April and May, the Society paid every cent of its former debts, hired a larger hall at a greatly increased expense and paid its running expenses, in so much that at the end of the engagement its board of officers unanimously passed the following:

"As this is the closing lecture of Bro. Hull's ministration, we cannot forbear a word of just comment upon his course. He has given to us food, pure and unadulterated; lecures filled with instructions, profound, yet plain of comprehension, replete with logic and full of knowledge. His stock of proof seems inexhaustible, while his manner of meeting argument is fearless, he knowing whereof he speaks. We hav to thank him for strength gained; for courage added; for light in the way of truth. Would that we might giv him a testimony of more value than words. Our kindest wishes shall follow him, and we shall hope for his return at no distant day that our hungry souls may be fed."

On the same day that the above was read to a very large and respectable audience, and was received with a storm of applause, I bought a copy of the R.-P. Journal and in it read the following from Giles B. Stebbins:

"The Second Society of Spiritualists employs different speakers and seems to be in good condition. Mr. Welden, the main manager, is I judge a man of good intentions, but has made a grave mistake in employing Moses Hull, a vulgar and notorious Freelover, according to his own statement, who has never made any sign of repentance, but holds his tongue on that subject like a moral coward, finding it pays poorly to be a martyr, and evidently wanting to get into favor with the Spiritualists. Let him alone to go his own way."

It was to call attention to this that I took my pen. Of course I know the animus which prompts all such statements as the above, but of that I will not speak. I only ask space to analyze Mr. Stebbins' statement—to sift out its errors and falsehoods.

1. "Mr. Weldon made a grave mistake." Did he? Was it a mistake to get a man there who held a large audience from first to last? Whose moral character is without a stain? A managainst whom no man, woman, or child will pretend to bring a charge? One who finds the Society in debt and leaves it free from debt? One who tells them, as they all say, more truths than they ever heard in their lives before? Is that a mistake? Then I submit that Giles B. Stebbins, and not Moses Hull, should hav been the speaker.

2. "A vulgar and notorious Freelover."

I wish Mr. Stebbins had been more explicit. He accuses me of being vulgar; what is that? Does he mean that I am one of the common people? If so, I plead guilty. Or does he mean low, ill-bred? If so, I deny the charge and call upon him for proof.

I am a "notorious Freelover." Yes, I am a Freelover, not as notorious, however, as I wish I was. Is Mr. Stebbins a Freelover? does he know of any bond-love, slave-love, or any love that is not free? If so he will confer a favor by telling what that love is, and where it is to be found.

3. "Moses Hull has made no sign of repentance." Repentance of what? What is a sign of repentance? Shall I go to Pope Stebbins and confess? Confess that I hav loved? that I love now? God is love; shall I confess to a little of the God-power? I am called upon to repent of believing in freedom, that greatest of boons, and, to repent of love, the one attribute more exacting than all others. No, Mr. Stebbins, let your guillotine fall; I prefer it to an entree into your august presence at such a sacrifice as you require.

4. I am accused of holding my tongue on that subject. When? Where? On what occasion? Come, Bro. Stebbins, explanations are now in order.

5. I am a moral coward. When did Bro. Stebbins find that out? How strange! the king of moral cowards calling the man of all the world, who has always dared, a moral coward! Could Bro. Stebbins hav been "clothed and in his right mind," when he made that charge? Now, to show where the moral cowardice is, I hereby challenge Mr. Stebbins to meet me in oral discussion on the notorious Free-love question. Bro. Stebbins here is a chance to show your courage. Meet me face to face; prove these things, or slink back into the coward's castle.

6. "I want to gain favor with the Spiritualists."

How does he know? I hav never asked Spiritualists for an appointment in my life. I am a Spiritualist—hav been for seventeen years. I hav in many respects gone beyond the majority of mere phenomenalists; I am not sorry; I am glad. I curry no favors. The Spiritualists and all others are hereby publicly invited to never ask me to go to their platforms to speak until they can accept me as I am and my gospel as it is, and want me because I am what I am, and because I say what I please.

Hoping, Mr. Editor, that these lines will disabuse the minds of honest Spiritualists with regard to my seeking to ingratiate myself into their favors, and assuring you that my time is fully occupied, not only every Sunday but every day, I subscribe myself.

"The vulgar and notorious Freelover," MOSES HULL.

A Few More Figures.

There is loud call for reform in law-making. There is not one intelligent voter out of each thousand who will dispute the serious need of such reform. All agree that there are too many laws made, amended, or altered. This great evil was observed many years ago, and biennial and triennial sessions of legislatures suggested as the remedy. But this was soon discovered to be a postponement of the evil and no mitigation. Now I hav before said that the evil is in the system, which has outlived its day. The representativ system of law-making should be abolished. But what can we do without it? We reply that the very things that hav made the system out of date hav made it practicable for the people to do their own law-making, namely, the railway and telegraph systems. Time was when everything moved slowly and legislativ bodies were harmless. To-day the accidental body of men chosen from various points and places in some central locality is immediately surrounded by, exposed to, and made the creature of innumerable temptations. There are to-day a thousand schemes, conspiracies, plans, for one that originated fifty years ago. And to-day the sentiments of a whole nation can be gathered in a few hours. It is now practicable for the people to vote for or against every necessary statute proposed. The fact is that not more than from four to ten bills out of every hundred proposed is ever passed. Two-thirds of all the bills passed are repeals or amendments of existing statutes, while many of the other third are merely local or personal and should be provided for by general law in almost every case. Let us take the history of our Congress. Here is a table compiled by the New York Evening Post, republished in the Chicago Tribune of last Thursday (May 20th). From it we learn that the Congress of 1837-9 introduced 1,965 bills and passed 114; the next Congress introduced 1,406 bills and passed 55; the next Congress introduced 1 384 bills and passed 201. Each Congress from 1843 up to 1863 introduced about an average of 1,500 bills, and passed an average of about 180 bills. Congress the 39th introduced over 2,300 bills; the 40th Congress introduced over 3,700 bills; the 41st over 5,900 bills, and each passed from eight to ten hundred. The 43d Congress had 6,435 introduced, and 858 passed. The 44th Congress had 6,230 introduced and 712 passed. The 45th Congress had 8,736 introduced and 742 passed. This Congress, the 46th, is but half over and already over 7,900 bills are introduced. Here we see is a great and growing evil. It must end, it will end if end it does, in violence and bloodshed. The only way to prevent this is by timely discussion and so opening all eyes and making nearly all agree on it that the evil must be abated. Reform is out of the question, and will, like those old slavery compromises, merely cover up the ugly spots, giv longer time for the evil parasites that hav thriven by the opportunity to fortify their positions, until finally such intolerable abuse results that some mighty explosiv protest must occur. Those who favor simple reform admit that what are called the annual bills are not over fifty each year and cover all the requirements of each year. How easy to provide for such by a general act. It is doubtful if there is outside of such bills any need for one act a year besides. Remember that at all times government is in operation under a volume of statutes that has been found ample in the past. A small tribunal or committee to draft such a law as may be clammored for and to tender it to the people to be voted on at any general election to take the place of Congress and state legislature, with some provision for supposed emergencies, would be a great improvement on the present system. This would be government by the people indeed. As it is we are governed by these legislatures and Congress, who betray us in the interests of whoever and whatever choose to bribe them. There is not a man living who does not sneer at the very idea of legislativ purity being possible any more. Most people blame the times and the people, and ascribe it to the corruption of the age. But the least reflection ought to convince any person that the system itself is to blame. It is a system that would lead to corruption and bad faith among the sternest Puritans and Spartans in times of great commercial activity and partisan strife. It is a system adapted only to the simplest manners and customs. To-day the bribes increase with the lures and temptations. The modern representativ is situated very differently from his predecessors of half a century ago. No indeed! Unless ignorance, coldness, and want of opportunity may be ranked as virtues, we are not whit worse than our forebears. Let us therefore be wise in time, and skilfully remove the weak and rotten supports ere the mighty structure fall. Of course what is here suggested will provoke the laughter, the scorn and derision, of the class that lives by the abuses of statute making. They hate the cry of reform as badly as do the pampered flunkies of a careless master despise the word economy. But no matter. This government was founded for the great, laboring, toiling millions, and is their very own. That others may liv under and enjoy it is a mere accident—a result of its catholic spirit. These masses want the most economical, simple government that is possible, and will finally hav it.

Book Notice.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav received and re-read "The Clergyman's Victims," and it has been almost as interesting to me on the second reading as it was while it ran through THE TRUTH SEEKER.

It is a simple narrativ of the strong and powerful influence a preacher has over the ladies of his congregation, and more especially the young and single girls of his church—an influence which when wielded as was that of the Rev. Cloud Elmer, for selfish and sensuous purposes, is one of the most dangerous and disastrous that can be imagined.

Looked up to with simple, girlish trust and confidence as one who is next to God himself in goodness, nobleness, and holiness; the friend, adviser, and guide; the confidant of all the most sacred and secret thoughts and feelings of the heart, having unlimited access at all times to their presence, is it any wonder that the results are as depicted in this "o'er true tale" of Mrs. Ball—terrible, sickening, and calamitous in the extreme?

It is to be hoped this little book may find its way into thousands of homes, where its earnest, thrilling utterances and simple, true philosophy will help to create a newer and happier dispensation. I cordially recommend it to all thy readers as an interesting tale and one that is well adapted for missionary purposes, not among the heathen, but the pious Christians of our own civilized and enlightened country. Mine is already out doing, I trust, a good work and sowing good seed. Respectfully,

Snowville, Va., June 13, 1880. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Mrs. Slenker on the "Gods."

The Winsted Press of the 17th has the following sprightly notice of Volume I. of our last work. The editor introduces the article in these words:

"Mrs. Slenker's glowing eulogy of D M. Bennett's new work, 'The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times,' is, we believe, thoroughly deserved by that production, the first volume of which is now out. The book was written and compiled by Mr. Bennett while in prison, a convict for the hideous crime of mailing a copy of 'Cupid's Yokes,' a small pamphlet published by E. H. Heywood, of Princeton, Mass."

The following is the "glowing eulogy" referred to.

A GOOD GOD BOOK.

Editor Winsted Press: I wish to tell thy readers that I hav read Mr. Bennett's book, the "Ancient Gods," and am greatly pleased with it. Most of us know heaps about the gods of modern Christianity—Jehovah, Christ, Ghost, and the Bible—but very few know much concerning the gods of the ancients. Here in Mr. Bennett's beautiful volume we hav hundreds of these old deities, resurrected and pictured in colors as vivid and natural as life itself. And strange to tell, they are many of them nobler conceptions than the gods of this our nineteenth century, which goes to prove that the boasted religion of the day is a hindrance and stumbling-block to real goodness and useful knowledge.

As are men and women, so are their gods, and by reading of all these "gentlemen of the air" we can learn much of the people who invented and created them. The vast amount of time and labor that it required to dig out from historical records so many biographies of gods, goddesses, and demigods is almost inconceivable, and yet all this has been accomplished in a few brief months by Mr. Bennett, during his hours of cessation from labor as an unjustly imprisoned convict in the penitentiary. It is a work of which he may well be proud, and one that will liv and be appreciated long after the writer has gone to the last sweet sleep that knows no waking.

The volume has a handsome portrait of the author, as a frontispiece, and it is said by those who hav seen him to be a veritable counterfeit presentment of this indefatigable worker for Freethought. Every person needs a work on mythology. The gods are the most important "personages" the world has ever known, and the knowledge of who and what they were and are will always be indispensable to any one who makes the slightest pretense to scholarship; and in this work of Mr. Bennett's we hav a whole library in two convenient volumes, printed in large, clear type, that almost reads of itself. Is there a single Infidel worthy of the name who will not feel a desire to purchase this great work, not only as a personal tribute to a man who has vicariously suffered for our rights, but also for its own intrinsic merits?

I wish I was able to put a copy in every library in the world. It would do more to open the eyes of the god-believers than almost any other book. If you wish to divest a man of religious beliefs, set him seriously to examining all the religions of the world, and he will rise from the task an Infidel to all of them. Just so with godisms. Any array of gods brought one after another under the stern criticism of reason and common sense makes them appear so weak, frivolous, and absurd that one is compelled to reject the very best of them as empty delusions and baseless dreams.

"The finite is for us the gleaming whole;
Here all divinity, all glory lies,
All we can dream or hope of paradise;
. . . . . .
It is our heaven, and all that we can be,
Our mortal or immortal destiny."

Letter from O. A. Phelps to H. L. Green.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., June 10, 1880.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: I inclose a very interesting and enthusiastic letter from Prof. O. A. Phelps. If you can find space for it, I would like to see it published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Fraternally yours, H. L GREEN.

CHANUTE, KAN., June 2, 1880.

Dear Friend Green: My debate at Osage Mission was a grand opportunity for Liberalism. An audience of six hundred people assembled nightly for six nights, and would willingly hav come six more. The Liberals are jubilant. Am arranging for another debate with Mr. Pool at the same place, and also at Burlington, upon the following propositions: 1. The theory of evolution explains the genesis of creation. 2. The evidence of the resurrection of Jesus is not sufficient to establish a fact. 3. The teachings of the Bible are a constant menace and source of danger to our form of government. Am also arranging to meet Rev. Mr. Cunningham of Odessa, Missouri, in debate this fall.

Why is it that there has never a word appeared about the formation of the League at Scundia, my last trophy?

Shall probably go to Colorado this summer for a few weeks, returning in time to participate in the Bismarck Convention.

We are prepared in Kansas to make a political issue of Liberalism, and shall probably do so two years heace. Our platform will probably contain these among its demands: Taxation of church property, repeal of the entire Sunday law, exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, and the discontinuance of religious exercises in the state Legislature, and other planks of a kindred nature. It has been suggested by some one that the Liberals should concentrate upon some advanced state like Kansas, and thus establish a "precedent." It would be a good idea. I think about two campaigns will giv us the victory.

I do hope you will not find it necessary to resign.

Yours very truly, O. A. PHELPS.

A Pious Fraud.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The state of Colorada established at Boulder a university which has been in successful operation for three years. The Methodists of Colorado in 1864 chartered the Colorado Seminary at Denver under the control of their conference. It had a sickly existence for a few years, and to quote their own language, "a debt incurred for running expenses, and placed at a high rate of interest, ultimately sent the property to sale."

The last annual conference proposed to re-open it on September 1, 1880, and in the pamphlet issued, they say: "We need the help of every friend of Christian education in Colorado in this work." To show the basis upon which this Christian education is to be built, they go two thousand miles from home and insert an advertisement as the "University of Colorado, and suppress the fact that it is a denominational boarding-school seminary, and display the alluring card that "non-resident students liv with the President." But let the following piece, clipped from the Boulder News and Courier of Colorado, of June 11, 1880, speak, as it does, for itself:

HEALTH AND LEARNING COMBINED.

COLORADO, DENVER.

University of Colorada.—For both sexes. Opens Sept. 1. Non-resident students liv with the President. First-class advantages at reasonable cost.

The above is an exact copy of a card published in Scribner's Monthly. There has evidently been a serious mistake somewhere. If not, then something more serious than a mistake. But it is hardly conceivable that an institution founded expressly for the inculcation of religious knowledge would start out with a deliberate and intentional appropriation of an honored title not its own. If so, it will need to be corrected by secular power according to secular ideas of righteousness. Will some good Methodist in Denver rise and explain?

The Constitution of Colorado forever prohibits the application of any religious test, also the appropriation of public funds for any sectarian purposes whatever, by any school district, township, county, town, city, or state, so our good Methodist brethren are headed off from the funds, but, as the sequel shows, not from stealing the title of a state institution of learning. A LIBERAL.

J. EDWIN CHURCHILL, of Florida, has decided to take the field as a Liberal lecturer. Bro. Churchill is an able man and should be liberally sustained. He can be addressed, for the present, care Prof. A. J. Oliver, Jasper, Fla.

Letters from Friends.

LOWELL, NEB., June 18, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In your TRUTH SEEKER of June 12th, a brother subscriber, Mr. Richard Flint of Centerville, Utah, wishes to know of good farming lands for sale. You wish any knowing of good farming land for sale to write to the brother, but as you did not giv his address, I write to him through your indispensable paper. Now, I wish to say that I hav been living here for the last four years, and hav had good crops of wheat, oats, barley, corn, potatoes, and all kinds of garden stuff. Previous to that year the grasshoppers did much damage here. Wheat does not look as good this year as it did last, on account of the scarcity of rain in the spring. We are having good rains now, and wheat is growing very fast, and corn never looked better. Nearly all the government land is taken, but some of the railroad land is still for sale. It is some of the best land in the state, and is sold at from five to eight dollars per acre. It is situated in the Platte Valley, from two to five miles from the town of Lowell. Some of it is bounded on the north by the river, which is a great advantage for cattle, and for cutting grass. Two sections adjoining my farm are still for sale. Mr. J. Bloodgood, a neighbor and brother subscriber, was a farmer in Iowa, and he says he never raised such good crops in that state as he has here. Three of his relativs with their families are also living here, and are all doing well and enjoy good health. He has about two thousand bushels of corn still in his crib. If Mr. Flint concludes to come here, and will drop me a note stating when, I will meet him at the depot with a team, and drive him around, and show him all the good land I know of. I hav a good team of horses. Mr. Flint will find that I am not one of the "rag-tag and bobtail," as painted by Mr. Underbrush, or Underwood.

Yours for truth, GEO. GRAY.

RUSH, PA., June 19, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Herewith I inclose two dollars as subscription for a new subscriber in this place, Mr. Charles Flummerfelt. This new subscriber has been a member of the Methodist church for twenty-seven years. He has been class-leader, trustee, etc., also a camp-meeting member. He has read your paper and some other Liberal publications, and now says he will hav THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Respectfully yours, M. G. SHOEMAKER.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 18, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find check for five dollars, for which continue your paper another year. Allow me to say that in my humble opinion your publication is a very valuable, as well as a very interesting one. A TRUTH SEEKER never comes to me that does not contain one, or more really solid articles, and if all the other matter were valueless, I still would be a gainer in reading your journal. Hoping that you will continue to hav physical and mental strength sufficient to enable you to manfully fight the good fight, not particularly of faith, but rather of fact, I am your humble brother (none of us are angels yet), A. P. BAILEY.

WALLA WALLA, WASH. TER., June 14, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Gopher Hill Liberal League met yesterday, and passed the following resolution unanimously:

WHEREAS, D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, has recently suffered martyrdom (by imprisonment) for the cause of Freethought,

Resolved, Therefore, that we, the members of this League, do join with friends in the East in heartfelt rejoicing over his liberation from that Christian bastile, and to him we tender our warmest sympathies and esteem, and to Anthony Comstock, the sneak, the spy, the inquisitor-general who procured his arrest, and the Christian judge who pronounced his unjust sentence, we tender our heartfelt contempt,

O. R BALLOU, Chair.,
MRS LILIAN BALLOU, Sec.,
WILLIS MCDANNALD, Cor. Sec.

ROCK FALLS, ILL., June 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am glad to say a word to you again to your face, as I seem to see you now that you are out of that infernal place where Christian, half Infidel, and half Christian bigots confined you. The meanest thing connected with the whole affair is the contemptibly cowardly way they hav conducted their side of the warfare. It beats the slaveholder who whipped Amos Dresser in Nashville, while hundreds of miles from his friends, and half a dozen wicked devils like himself holding one small man. The quicker these tools of the church get back into her folds the better it will be for humanity. Liberals cannot repose confidence in men of such spirit. There are many of us that can never forgiv Abbot and many of his associates for trying to fasten the stigma of obscenity on all those who happen to differ from them. To-day I am seventy-three years old. Sincerely your friend,

W. E. LUKENS.

GARDEN GROVE, IOWA, May 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: My feelings are joyful in view of your release from confinement. Nature bestowed a mental and physical constitution equal to the punishment inflicted by your Christian persecutors. THE TRUTH SEEKER must liv. I inclose post-office order for $5.00, for which please send to my address a copy of "Nature's Revelations of Character," the balance will renew my subscription for another year, from May 1, 1880

Most respectfully, L. M. HASTINGS.

WHEELING, W. VA., June 9, 1830.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see in your very friendly contemporary a notice of your grand reception home. I mean the Milan Monthly Review. What a glorious period in your life history; may you liv to see your enemies punished for their hellish work, let them be high or low, is my prayer. Rejoicing with you in your regained freedom, I wish you to send me the pamphlet of the grand reception. Yours,

S. HARTMAN.

NORTHFIELD, MINN., June 15, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: Allow me to express my gratitude for the great pleasure derived from a perusal of this week's TRUTH SEEKER, No. 23. First, your reply to G. T. Rockwell is a perfect gem of inspiration. How long will it take Liberals to become liberal? What could be grander than that sermon by George Chainy on ecclesiastical lynch law? And I always feel like thanking David Bruce, E. A. Chapman, and others for their noble championship in defense of Spiritualism. If these great men can but feel the answering wave of unspoken thought that is welling up from the great heart of humanity, they must feel amply repaid for their efforts in the glorious work.

Yours for the truth, SADIE RICE.

ALLEGANY, N. Y., May 31, 1880.

A. L. Rawson, Dear Sir: Yours of the 24th at hand. Please find inclosed two coupons for $2. Yours of the 24th I read before the League yesterday, and by vote they contributed $2 toward the expenses of sending delegates to the World's Congress, to be held in the city of Brussels next August, and they were very much pleased to think we were able to hold a Freethinkers' World's Congress, as it shows our cause is progressing.

As soon as it is decided where the Annual Congress is to be held, please let me know, and oblige

Yours truly, ROBERT PEET, Sec.

HOLLAND, MICH., May 6, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: You will find inclosed a notice of my husband's death. Please copy in your paper. He has taken the paper about a year and a half, and has ever esteemed it above other literature. He not only appreciated and admired THE TRUTH SEEKER for its circulation of good work, but was heart and soul in sympathy with its loyal proprietor, D. M. Bennett (who, thank God, we hear is free once more from the tyrant's icy grasp). May the balance of his life be among the flowers, whose aroma of strength and prosperity may cause the thorns of the past to wither 'neath his footprints of his future destiny.

My dear husband was a loyal Spiritualist, one of the nobler type, who was so much needed to strengthen the bonds of future triumph; or, in other words, we can ill afford to spare the soldier who dares to aim at truth and justice when the enemy approacheth. I hav lost what to me is more than the world can ever know. When his friends are mourning his early and sad departure, may they know that I, his waiting wife, am the saddest of all forsaken widows.

Please inform me by card or letter if we are in arrears with the paper, or how we stand, as I wish to continue its coming. Yours very respectfully,

MRS. ADDIE MCCULLOCH.

LE ROY, KAN., June 8, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Find cash inclosed for trial subscriber. Send to O. H. Wykoff, Le Roy, Kan. Keep it before the people that every "law" promulgated for man's government should hav the unqualified approval and broad seal of indorsement of nature's God indelibly impressed thereon, and that all else are void. As ever,

A. V. COFFIN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav to-day received an eight-page tract with a pictorial head, two cocks, evidently gotten up by the Comstock Puritans to defame and crush you. It came, I suppose from Boston, in a sealed letter envelope, postmarked "Bos. sp'g," the rest illegible. The cultured sender has disguised his handwriting in directing it to me. Clerical nest-hiders will no doubt enjoy reading it more than Solomon's Songs or Beecher's love-letters. The sick rooster, I suppose, may stand for such disgusted Freethinkers as "Don Quixote" Coleman, the cultured plagiarist and "Professor of scholastic nescience."

BISHOP CREEK, CAL., May 1, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I, with several others here, hav given three cheers for your liberation. I think they will find that you are a Tartar as well as a martyr. I should hav written you oftener while you were in prison, only I did not like to, not knowing whether you would receive it or not.

It must hav been a great and grand change to come from prison and its associates to Chickering Hall, among friends. I hope you were able to stand up as well under your good fortune and liberty as you showed in the deprivation of them. I congratulate you as being, perhaps, the last who shall be imprisoned for opinion's sake, for that was really your only offense. Yours with fraternal greeting,

COLEBROOK, CT., May 9, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Find inclosed one dollar to continue my paper. Am somewhat short of funds or would send more. I rejoice with you that you are out of prison; but my satisfaction at your release is equaled, if not exceeded, by my detestation of the intolerant meanness of your persecutors. If they were confined in prison for one year, I do not think that moral justice would be outraged, nor that there would be any occasion for wasting sympathy upon them. Yours, etc., L. O. BASS.

ANTRIM, N. H., June 26, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed find $5 for the Brussels Convention. I appreciate the work you are doing for the human race, and am willing to extend to you something more than wordy sympathy, which is all very well as far as it goes, but it takes something besides sympathy to pay the expenses of the war you are engaged in. One would naturally suppose that a class of people styling themselvs Liberals would be liberal enough to be a great deal more liberal toward D. M. Bennett than they manifestly are in the matter of coming forward with the material aid to send the most fit and most deserving man in this country to the Brussels Convention. I sometimes almost conclude that the world of mankind are not worth saving, that they deserve to be made slaves of; they seem at times to be too infernal lazy, stingy, and indifferent to raise a hand to help themselvs or to giv decent aid to those who make it their life-work to lead them out of bondage, and, above all, to see the mean, dirty, low, cowardly attacks upon you, and under such circumstances, by those professing to be the true representativs of Liberalism. But if you hav not completely squelched your cowardly assailants, "then I don't want a cent;" and if Abbot & Co. hav not sunk themselvs to the common level of blackguards and social outlaws, then I can't conceive what they could do to get to such a level and escape the penitentiary. I had formed a pretty correct opinion of Underwood before he made his attack on you. Long liv D. M. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER!

Yours for impartial justice, GEO. GEER.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 9, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: Am really glad to congratulate you on your release and arrival home again, and that you had such a rousing reception at Chickering Hall on Sunday night last. There are not many "penitentiary convicts" who get such a hearty reception as you did, and I feel that you appreciate it. Well, like a cork, the old Infidel is up and on top again, and I hope he will stay there. No one can hav your feelings on emerging to light and friends but those "who hav been there." I hav tried to put my feelings in your feelings' stead, but they will not fit. I can only hav a faint idea of their intensity. While I cannot feel to advise reprisals, I trust you will liv to get even with the men who plotted and circumvented your imprisonment, especially that arch sneak. If impassionate, impartial history can be heard you will all be seen in the ages to come, in your proper places. Wishing you a happy and prosperous future,

I remain your friend, C. GARWOOD.

MANSFIELD CENTER, June 11, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND: Inclosed please find check for ten dollars, this is my annual opinion of you. I am your everlasting friend and well-wisher. This is for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. Very respectfully yours,

J. S. MACFARLAND.

LOCUST VALLEY, N. Y., May 11, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ., Dear Friend: I hav your favor of yesterday and with it your first volume of your new work "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," which does great credit to your perseverence and industry, as an intellectual recluse during your martyrdom. The animus, in the manner of your confinement, will be well repaid in thus enlightening your race againust all superstitious creeds, and cause your enemies to hide their diminished heads, and go down to their graves as simple conscience-striken persecutors.

I value your work the more as a present from yourself, and as containing so good a portrait of your valued self, though I did not desire the amount sent to be so diminished by your present of so costly a work, and so the more thanks for your generosity and good expression in that life-like portrait accompanying it.

In lieu of the paper sent last Autumn, put in type and lost with the fallen type, I send to you another, more recent, for TRUTH SEEKER, with stamps to return the same if not acceptable; but its scientific reasonings and originality, with its probable truths, I hope will commend it to your liberality and that of a thoughtful public.

If you find the other paper, "Equal eternity of Mind and Matter and their Characteristics," please let that succeed and oblige. In Boston Banner of Light, of May 1st, third page, is a very flattering notice of my "Sequel to Essays," which you now hav on sale.

Yours most truly, CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

FAIRFIELD, PA., May 17, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: "Gods, etc.," Vol. I. has come to hand and surpasses expectation. It is a complete Cyclopedia on the subjects treated.

The Bible of the future will be nature, its interpreter science, and its god the unknown and unknowable—the mighty and insoluble mystery of the universe.

Yours truly, A. O. SCOTT.

VALLEY FALLS, KAN., June 24, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: In reply to your request for funds to be represented at Brussels you may put me down for one dollar. Would gladly aid you more if I were able at present. I hope the Liberals in this country will take enough interest in the matter to contribute enough to be ably represented there. I hope you will enjoy a trip to Europe, and come back home hale and hardy to carry out your proposed plan of lecturing (a capital idea), but not in the big Eastern cities only, for we want the gospel of truth also preached to us Western heathens, especially here in Kansas, the banner state of Liberalism, but I can assure you there is hard work before us yet, I think, here in Kansas as much or more than anywhere else. We hav too many so-called Liberals among us who are Liberal enough in principle, no doubt, but they hav not the courage or backbone to say so for fear somebody might hear them and might lose a customer or offend a good Christian, even some members of the League are not any better; possibly a good strengthening plaster would help them some. Also your coming here to deliver a few lectures would do us an amount of good, but I will not promis you such good things as sister Tomes of Michigan. I am afraid if we feed you on too much sweet things you would not feel like giving our Christian friends the bitter truths, but we won't let you starve, nor shall you get less in flesh while you stay among us, so don't be afraid to come, if possible. I am almost sure the editor of the most bold and outspoken Infidel paper will get big audiences everywhere, and your enemies will hav another cause for envy. A lecture trip would increase the subscription list by the hundreds, probably by the thousands, and would prove also in that line a pecuniary success which your untiring efforts so much deserve. Fraternally yours,

SUSAN REICHERTER.

HOOPER, UTAH, May 29, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT, Dear Sir: I inclose you postal-order for three dollars, to apply for THE TRUTH SEEKER subscription from July, 1879. I shall send for your late productions soon. I exult in the thought that you are again at the helm of free thought, free speech, and free press. Guide the bark of truth till it shall ride triumphantly over superstitious error and Christian malice and falsehood. My sincere desire is to speedily see American Christian bigotry and despotism buried in oblivion, with its leaders, aiders, and abettors.

Could there be a greater wrong committed in civilized America than the sentiments expressed by Howard Crosby in that miscreant Comstock's obscene society, that their false imprisonment of you for no offense, is worth millions to the cause of liberty? for the very fact that after the Christian Comstock, with his Jesuits, hav reached every nook and corner of the land to find a flaw in your life or character without success, for if Anthony Comstock had any cause to persecute you, he and his obscene employers would not hav been under the necessity of sending you to their Christian bastile under a protest.

Put on your strength, Bro. Bennett; you hav borne the cross, you shall wear the crown of truth.

Let the cry of obscenity fill the civilized world till mankind shall rise en masse and demand what it means, and the answer will be, the Crosby-Comstock boomerang in its rebound has struck the church; she totters and falls, and that the Bble has been weighed and found wanting. The Bible societies hav published tens of millions of this obscene book, and by compulsion and fraud its obscenity has been forced upon all mankind, till earth and its inhabitants reel under the teachings of this the foulest, the obscenist, of all holy bibles. This Jew and Christian book teaches the child, the man, and the mother, that God inspired holy men to write this book, which teaches by precept and example every crime known to man—the sons of God seducing the daughters of men, because they were fair; in fact, God himself taught Sarah how she could hav a child, when she had none by her brother, Abraham. Then this holy book tells how this all-wise God turned Lot's wife to a pillar of salt, and burnt up all the men with fire and brimstone so that God might manifest his wisdom by inspiring Lot's two daughters to make their father drunk, and sleep with him alternate nights, so they might again start this obscene crowd. No doubt if the Christian Crosby, Comstock & Co. could trace their genealogy they would prove they are very near kin to these obscene ancients.

Bro. Bennett, excuse me for writing on this subject; our mission is to do good to all men, and if I can heap a few coals of fire upon the Comstock clan, for their good, I think it my duty to do so. If Anthony Comstock or Crosby can prove their lineage direct from God's chosen favorites of old, it will be glory to them and the church. Let me start them on the track.

Bro. Bennett, will you please refer to THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 24th and see for yourself if my letter contains anything to cause any one to make the unjust charges which Walter Walker and six indorsers charge against me in TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 24, 1880? If you will examin the two letters you will see W. Walker indirectly admits every point I made. What they say against the Tribune is false in every item. Many of my friends feel worse than I do about it; they think you gave me no opportunity to reply to such a batch of falsehoods. I leave it now in your hands entirely. I hav thought, and was prepared to giv you all the particulars, the cause why I wrote as I did and given you the cause and effect right along. I conclude in my mind that the false statements published against any man does not injure him with his friends. Here I rest my cause; time proves all.

I am sorry if in any of my communications I hav written a word to hurt the feelings of any true man.

I will not trouble you with any of my foolish letters.

Ever your friend, EDWARD F. MUNN.

HARWICH, June 5, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER; Dear Sir: Your liberty since your restoration, it seems to me, must be more highly prized than it otherwise would hav been had you not been deprived of it; and I hope it will giv an impetus rather than a check to your endeavors to deal manly blows against the powers of darkness on every hand.

I hav just been reading your answer to Mr. Underwood's letter of May 26th, and I am sorry to be obliged to say I think he is reckless of the truth. I hav had a very high opinion of him, and would be glad to retain it, but it does seem to me he has been too hasty in magnifying a little trivial affair, which is indiscreetly paraded in the public prints to the discredit of a man whose life has been, so far as I can learn, as faultless as the best.

There are many fair-looking houses that hav skeletons in them, but they are kept out of sight, and there is none the less culpability on that account. Few there are that would make so clean a breast of it as you hav done, which, one would suppose, would silence all calumny and reproach, at least among Liberals.

I hav noticed several cases about here where persons hav been very forward in showing up some sexual indiscretion in others and soon were humbled by the same in their own households. "Go and sin no more," was all the rebuke that the man of Nazareth had for the woman taken in adultery. There is too much straining at gnats and swallowing camels. Let none be very much troubled about the motes in others' eyes while the beams are in their own. A new order of society must and will be brought about with regard to religious and social life, and it is the province of Freethinkers to engineer it through.

There is a good deal of the Freethinking element in this community, but for some reason they are apathetic or indifferent; but I hav a six months' subscriber for you, and will endeavor to secure others. Find inclosed $1.50.

B. F. ROBBINS.

ALLIANCE, O, June, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find postal order for the sum of $5.15, which please apply as directed.

In view of your recent persecution by the hell-hounds of the church, and the late Republican nominations at Chicago, is it not apropos that Liberals should know the antecedents of Garfield and Arthur. R. B. Hayes was a pliant tool in the hands of Comstock and his persecuting gang of church bigots, and can we as Freethinkers stand another term of their hellish intolerance? I think our only hope of peaceful tolerance lies in the defeat of Garfield and Arthur. Garfield is a church bigot of the most radical type, and Arthur is the son of a Presbyterian minister. These men believe that "Gaud" is going to hav us Freethinkers roasted hereafter, and of course they think it their bounden duty to make it as warm as possible for us here.

If the Republican candidates are elected, Comstock and his gang will hav full sway, and if they do not make it hot for unbelievers they will forfeit their reputation miserably.

If Garfield was not in favor of your free and unconditional pardon he should not be supported by the readers of your paper. I hope you will ascertain this fact and publish it. I hav been a lifelong Republican, voted for Hayes, but hav become so disgusted over it that I shall never vote for a bigoted churchman again. OLD REPUBLICAN.

DALLAS, TEX, June 17, 1880.

BROTHER BENNETT: I got one of the little sneak-thief pamphlets about May 6th, mailed from Boston, headed with two big roosters, one crowing and the other puking sick. I knew it was from Abbot, so I privately read it and laid it by. I think he is the sick rooster and Bennett the game-cock of the walk. Poor, little, contemptible, malicious Abbot made another failure, whilst the Bennett Reception was a grand success, and THE TRUTH SEEKER and its publications are growing in public favor.

Now, Bro. Bennett, let me advise you a little. The Liberal public are sick and tired of so much talk about Comstock, Bundy, and Abbot. Please don't fill the columns of our favorit paper with them, but drop them all and treat them with silent contempt. That is the desire of your friends hereabouts. ALLEN JOHNSON.

DETROIT, MICH., June 23, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I am well pleased to see so much in your paper upon the finance question, but hav not yet seen the real issue touched upon. I yet hope to see the greenbackers come out to oppose all interest of any kind on money or lands. In my opinion, interest on money or bonds is but a tax upon industry for the support of vice and crime.

Inflation means that the poor man does not pay interest enough to the rich. Vanderbilt, drawing two cents interest every second is never inflated, but it is the poor industries that are troubled with inflation. There never was money enough in any country for the use of all the people, nor ever will be so long as one man can loan it to another and get interest for its use. Let us hav money—a full legal tender—enough for every man or woman to pay cash for every necessary want anywhere where the flag of our Union waves. Let pawnbrokers and national bankers earn money honestly. Let money be like postage stamps—good for the face at all times. J. H. WOOD.

LEBANON, O., June 20, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 19th contains an article headed "Buckeye Brevities," by Charles J. Herbold, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in which he says: "D. N. Morley, Lebanon, Ohio, writes words of encouragement and sends a small remittance toward defraying expenses of stationery and postage. This is the second time that gentleman has come to my assistance. If there were more Liberals like him in this state something more could be done in the way of pushing on the work." The writer in said article has my name D. N. Morley. It should be D. M. Worley. Please correct and oblige, Yours truly,

D. M. WORLEY.

LAMAR, BARTOW CO., MO., June 12, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: In reply to the inquiry of Mr. Richard Flint, of Utah, as to where he could find good farming land, I desire to tell him. There is plenty of good land for sale here in this county at $5 to $6 per acre. This is a beautiful country, delightful climate, abundance of fruit, a plentiful harvest, and three Liberal Leagues in the county. A Liberal colony is under way. With a railroad now being built through the county, the outlook is fair for as pleasant, prosperous, and happy homes in this county as are apt to be found in any country. It is hoped to be made especially agreeable to Liberals, though we will try to be liberal enough to extend a welcome hand to any good citizen of whatever religious belief. That is his property, so to speak, not ours. Respectfully, CLINTON HUFF.

MYRTLE CREEK, OREGON, June 6, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I write you a few lines to let you know I am not dead, neither hav I joined the church. But I must confess that I hav given you a reason to think so by my not settling with you for THE TRUTH SEEKER, the best paper in the world. Any person who subscribes for your paper and don't pay for it is no Liberal in the true sense of the word, and he had better join some church, where he can hav the benefit of prayer. The reason why I hav not sent you any money is because it was absolutely out of my power. I worked at mining all winter and made nothing. I hav now struck a prospect and just completed a ditch, so I hav got them in shape and can make a little money soon. I will pay you all and try and buy some of your books. This little gold dust I send to you as a present. I panned it out to-day. We get both fine and coarse gold in our mines.

Well, friend Bennett, I must say that I don't believe that there ever was a man sent to prison for as trifling a thing as they trumped up against you. It is my candid belief that there is not one man in America but deserved imprisonment as much as you did. Yours as ever, T. B. SPEAKE.

LYONS, MICH., June 21, 1880.

D M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I, for one, do not say No. I say, Yes, by all means, go to the Brussels Congress. Inclosed please find one dollar for that purpose, and I bid you good speed. I wish I was able to do more. But let every Liberal do as much and you will hav plenty of funds for that purpose. I hope to liv to see the day when all mankind can think for themselvs and not be stigmatized for it. I am a true worker with you and all Liberals in this glorious cause. I do not belong to any particular lodge but to the whole Liberal lodge throughout the world. Yes, Mr. Bennett, I say, Go, by all means.

Your friend ever in this cause, D. S. LAMPHER.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILL., June 6, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: At a regular meeting of the auxiliary Liberal League of Campbell Hill, a resolution was passed that the members of this League subscribe as much as each individual feels able to contribute toward defraying the expenses of sending D. M. Bennett to Brussels as a representativ of the National Liberal League, provided he is sent. We hav subscribed $1.75, and several members to hear from. Our subscription, no doubt, will look very small when completed; but it is my opinion that if every League will make up as much in proportion to its numbers and wealth there will be plenty of funds, not only to send Bennett, but half a dozen others if desired. If the Liberals wish and expect to succeed, they must come down with the cash. We will do well to take lessons from the orthodox; they come down with the cash; every Sunday-school scholar is on hand with its pennies or nickels, and they thus always hav the sinews of war. A man is not apt to take much interest in a cause that costs him nothing. If a man invests his money in an enterprise, he is sure to work with energy for its success. HORACE NEWELL, M.D., ALLEGANY, N. Y., June 14, 1880.

MR. BENNETT: I hav just returned to this place after an absence of about two months. It givs me great joy indeed to know that you hav been liberated from the fangs of an inveterate enemy to freedom and intelligence. I say an enemy to freedom because within the last two decades she has demonstrated herself to be the same. Besides, the works of all candid historians show that she was never an enemy to slavery. Again, I affirm an enemy to intelligence, for we hav abundance of proof to show that from her origin to the present time she has been a mighty obstruction to the developing intellect.

Mr. Bennett, when I contemplate the suffering you endured while in prison, it really pains me, and then I comprehend better than at any other time the melancholy truth that "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." But let us look forward with hopeful eye to that great day in the future when, for the evil they hav done, the name of Comstock and all your malicious enemies shall pass, accompanied with some powerful epithet, to eternal oblivion, while your name shall be sung with praises by the voices of the eloquent for the good that you hav done in giving freedom to, instead of stifling, human thought and speech, "for to taste of human flesh is less criminal in the eye of God than to stifle human thought."

ULLMANN B. SOULE.

GALENA, IND., June 10, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I, with thousands of others, am proud to congratulate you upon your liberation from an unjust imprisonment, and only hope that you will from this and forevermore be allowed to remain free from Christian bigotry. But rest assured that your imprisonment did the cause of free thought, free press, etc., an immense amount of good. I speak what I know to be true in my neighborhood. If you had not been wrongfully incarcerated, I would not hav had the pleasure of inclosing in this small epistle three dollars for a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to be sent to the address of James P. Merrywethers, Galena, Indiana. Mr. Merrywethers is aged seventy-six years; and according to the rules of nature, he has not many more years to remain on the lap of mother earth. Therefore he wants to learn as much truth as possible, and I am certain he has struck the proper channel; so thinks he as well as myself.

Ever your friend, LAFE LAMB.

DETROIT, MICH., May 10, 1880

D. M. BENNETT, Honored and Dear Friend—Honored by the persecutions of priestcraft, that bane of civil liberty; honored above all men in being sent to a religious prison for free press, free speech, and free mails, in this, the most enlightened period of the world's history—let me congratulate you upon the enjoyment once more of freedom of body, to breathe the free air at pleasure, and myself, with all the rest of mankind, upon the release of our champion of mental and civil liberty. Oh, how I wish that my ability was equal to my desire to place your words and brave works in the hands of every thinking person in our broad land.

How I would like to see you and shake your hand in true, earnest, and fraternal grasp! I think I appreciate some of your past experiences more truly than almost any other of your friends because of similar trials, only that my affliction had long since proved true, while yours proved to be only misconception. I hav often, since your first statement came from Albany, thought how you and all your friends should rejoice that your companion and wife proved herself your true friend.

I can think of no man in this country we could so illy spare from his life work as yourself. I hope that you may liv to see the abundant fruitage of your labors and be abundantly rewarded in all things.

I am sorry to hav let my paper run past its date; but it is, I believe, the first time, and I hav many things to contend with for the privilege of being an Infidel. I hav to walk the path of life alone, with bigotry picking at me on all sides. I hav long felt the dreadful curse of ownership, and hav not the bravery to break the collar. But the seeds of liberty hav sprouted, and the fruit is being eaten by many. We may all hope for better things to come to others for our efforts.

Inclosed please find one dollar for my subscription.

Yours fraternally, J. H. WOOD.

HANNIBAL, MO., June 8, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find $2.00, to apply on my subscription. I commenced taking THE TRUTH SEEKER as a trial subscriber, and I and my family hav become so much interested in it that we cannot do without it. We are Liberal Spiritualists, take the Banner of Light, and had it not been for your unjust persecution should not, in all probability, hav made the acquaintance of THE TRUTH SEEKER, as we are in humble circumstances and really feel unable to afford it, but since both your foes and those who should hav been your friends hav done and are still doing all they can to crush you and your valuable paper, we feel we must do all we can to thwart their efforts. I want your new works, and mean to hav them as soon as I can spare the means to get them.

I see in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 15th, a Mr. Beal, of Canada, asks the advice of Liberals as to where is the best place to settle, as he contemplates moving into the States. I would say, right here, that any Liberal desiring to find a home among congenial souls in a fine country, had better go to Barton county, Mo., where Mr. G. H. Walser, editor of a monthly paper called the Liberal, proposes to form a Liberal colony and build up a Liberal city, a city without a church or saloon. I hav just returned from there, and shall, as soon as I can settle up my affairs here, move there. The site selected for the place is fifteen miles west of Lamar, the county seat, on a new line of railroad running from Ft. Scott to Springfield. The road is finished to within five miles of the place. It is a prairie country; soil, a black, sandy loam, grows fine wheat and fruits of all kinds adapted to this latitude, plenty of coal, and rock for building purposes. Is a fine grazing country; land can be got at reasonable rates. Any one wishing further particulars, can address G. H. Walser, Lamar, Barton county, Mo. I would also say subscribe for the Liberal; it is only $1 a year.

Well, friend Bennett, I am heartily glad you survived your unjust imprisonment, and long may you liv to wield your pen in defense of free speech and a free press is the earnest desire of your humble subscriber,

SILAS ANDREWS.

NEW WASHINGTON, O, June 22, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Allow me to congratulate you upon your delivery from durance vile, and say that every Liberal should heartily rejoice that you were incarcerated, as it has furthered the cause of freedom more than any event that the world has ever been able to record; but in the rejoicing for the good of the cause, let them throw out very largely the sympathy that should fill the breast of every honest lover of liberty, for yourself when considered as the victim of the greatest outrage that has ever been perpetrated upon humanity under the pretence of justice.

When I read your trial it made me feel almost as the Christians of olden times. When they had the power they gave their victim a mock trial after the time, place, and manner of his torture had been decided. I thought the same feeling actuated me toward your persecutors, but upon further thought I felt ashamed that I would allow myself for a moment to be like unto them, and thought it would be best not to watch and pray, but to wait and work.

Yours fraternally, JAS. M. BUREN.

BURLINGTON, KAN., May 30, 1880.

BRO. BENNETT: As Mr. Truesdell, in his last letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER, on finance, refers a number of times to "fiat," I would like to hav him, for the benefit of us Greenbackers, define the word fiat, for I am of the opinion that all the circulating medium is fiat money.

Lines on the Trinity.

That three are one and one are three,
'Tis an idea that puzzles me,
Yet, by the learned ones 'tis said
That three are one in the Godhead.

The father then may be the son,
For both together make but one,
The son may likewise be the father,
Without the smallest change in either.

Thus, father, son, and Holy Ghost,
Are three in one, and one at most,
Yea, and the blessed spirit be,
Father, son, and trinity.

This is the creed of Christian folks
Who call themselves quite orthodox,
All which, against plain common sense,
You must believe or give offense.

'76.

A Fourth of July Poem.

BY CHARLES BRADLEY.

From earliest years most fondly led,
By mother's love with cakes and flps, toward Watts.
I've been a diligent peruser of
The poems, and often wished I could indite.
The smallest bird that sings in summer's train,
Yet swells the universal voice, in which
The angels join.
Perhaps to-day upon the battle-field,
Where freedom comes to celebrate her birth,
The last soldier of the Revolution stands,
An old husbandman, who in his springtime
Sowed with his blood the seeds of liberty,
Comes in the autumn of his age to view
A little of that harvest which can ne'er
Be gathered till the heavens are no more;
Alone he comes, but to that soldier's eye
Shades of the mighty, grander than in life,
Move o'er the glorious field, alone but waited on
By honor, love, obedience; his country's blessings
Bear his soul to heaven, but ere he cross
Death's languid river, to see no more in life
The land he loves, once more he comes to view
And stand upon that field, where young Freedom,
Like an angel bathed in blood, first kissed
The world she came from heaven to save.
There in all the glory of their youth they Fought shoulder to shoulder through the days
"That tried men's souls." There his comrades died,
And there they conquered dying.
Pious as pilgrim at his prophet's shrine,
With tears that honor pays at glory's tomb,
The soldier turns to bid their graves farewell.
Ah, th ir graves he will not see again;
Daylight and the silver moon shall visit
Them no more. Above their graves cities stand
And grow beneath one sheltering flag.
In the solemn temples free men serve
The god of freedom; in happy homes
The mother's hopeful and rejoicing heart
Hovers o'er the cradle of her free child.
The father's arm is bare for free labor
To sustain the angel sleeping there;
While from the fertil and unbounded land,
Which God for life's free feast hath spread
With the incense of the flowers, but sweeter
Far than they, childhood's free and happy voices
Rise, well pleasing, to the eternal throne

On that torn and bloody field, seeing this,
The soldier's feeble and bewildered heart
Can hardly bear the joy; he leans upon
His staff, and looks to heaven, satisfied
With earth. It is his nation's dawn; it is
The dawn of her great manhood. And the dim
Eyes, in the ashes of whose age the battle
Fire is buried but not dead, now seek
Once more, with their last gleam of joy and pride,
In the free heaven the flag which they hailed
So proudly when the twilight of the Revolution gathered o'er us.
O nativ born, of climate or of soul!
Free hearts from every land, of every tongue,
We are Americans! America is ours,
Yet not for us alone, but for all nations
And all peoples yet to be, our free flag waves.
Prophet-like, it sings the day when man,
So long oppressed, shall stand at last erect,
And thrones be tenantless and kings unkinged
Before him; when the nations, old and gray,
In anguish and in chains, shall clothe once more
In the long-lost birthright of liberty,
And be glorious in their apparel;
When darkened Asia and abused Europe
Shall retake as we retook, and hold as we,
Liberty as life inalienable forever.

Wave on, then, ye morning stars of freedom's
Endless day, great assurer of equal rights;
Sign of America's faith and hope, wave on!
Till thou hast fanned and purified
The whole heavens from every cloud
And shade of tyranny. Well o'er thee,
Blest banner, as once o'er Bethlehem
Might the angels sing, o thou light that led
Our fathers through their dark and ambushed way into the promised land,
Kindle in our hearts our father's fires, and when freedom
Calls, make us, too, men. How oft, for thee and
For his country fighting, the bleeding soldier's
Dying eyes have blest thy stars;
How oft, how oft, when bound across the sea,
The sailor's heart is lingering where
Thy far-off shining fadeth o'er the wave;
His lessening country fills his swelling soul.
At Perry's, at Decatur's name,
The child of ocean weeps; his grim visage,
Rough worn 'gainst every coast that fronts
Old ocean's roar, to the glorious memories
Of his country's banner scorneth not a tear.
Wave forever, our life is in thy waving.
Hark! I hear the merry sounds of home;
"The church bells are ringing, the village is gay.
And Columbia is decked in her bridal array."
Hear it, tyrants of God's earth, and tremble
At your doom! Hear it, exiles of liberty!
And let your hearts go up to heaven,
The year, the day of your redemption!
Is at hand. Hear it, men of our continent!
For freedom's superstructure is so large.
We want it all, and more, for her foundations.
Shout, ye dwellers of these lands and waters!
From Patagonia to the clime where
Franklin sleeps, and higher yet, if higher,
Earth or sea; shout till heaven's arches ring,
And the angels join the ever blessed,
Ever glorious cry, This is the month and this
The happy day on which America
And liberty, before God, became one forever!

SOCIALISM.

A REPLY TO

ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK, D. D.

BY AN INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST.

12mo, 67pp., 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts.

He blames Dr. Hitchcock that the latter perceives a huge human misery, but neither sees nor seeks any other solution than that the weakest must go to the wall. It is against his passiveness that "Socialist" cries out. Is there no help for the miserable? he asks. The doctrine that government should merely "protect," he attacks, and insists that it should "assist," also. While he does not believe that "property is robbery," or wholly subscribe to "the world owes me a living," he affirms "the world owes me a chance to make a living."—N. Y. Herald.

A BUSINESS MAN'S RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL VIEWS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 206pp. Price $1.

The author's conception of a possible future life on this earth is really eloquent and beautiful, and will enlist attention. A curiosity to see what a philanthropic business man has to say upon the social problem, from a poor man's standpoint, will doubtless alone induce many to buy the book. The bold and trenchant blows which he deals "Society" in all its ramifications of corruption and inhumanity; his earnest and manly plea for the social regeneration of the lower classes—will, unless we are much mistaken, make the book the best-abused and best-liked production of the day by these two classes respectively.—Critical Review.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

WHAT is a weed? A plant, the virtues of which hav not yet been discovered.—Emerson.

ON earth there is nothing great but man; in man there is nothing great but mind.—Sir William Hamilton.

TRUTH is brought to light by time and reflection, while falsehood gathers strength from precipitation and bustle.—Tacitus.

REASON, my father, by the gods is given.
To men, the noblest treasure we can boast.
—Sophocles.

THE common rabble estimate few things according to their real value; most things according to the prejudices of their minds.—Cicero.

TRELAWNY asked Shelley on one occasion, "Do you believe in the immortality of the soul?" Shelley's answer was unmistakable, "Certainly not; how can I? We know nothing; we hav no evidence."—Sotheran.

DID the Almighty, holding in his right hand truth, and in his left hand, search-after-truth, deign to proffer me the one I might prefer, in all humility, but without hesitation, I should request search-after-truth.—Lessing.

KNOWLEDGE is as food, and needs no less
Her temperance over appetite, to know
In measure what the mind may well contain;
Oppresses else will surfeit, and soon turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.
—Millon.

OF all the senseless babble I hav ever had occasion to read, the demonstrations of those philosophers who undertake to tell us all about the nature of God would be the worst if they were not surpassed by the still greater absurdities of the philosophers who try to prove that there is no God.—Huxley.

THE clergy keep telling us that it is dangerous for the mind of man to be free. I deny it. Out on the intellectual sea there is room enough for every sail. In the intellectual air there is room enough for every wing. And the man who does not do his own thinking is a slave, and does not do his duty to his fellowmen.—Ingersoll.

WHAT is a man,
If his chief good and market of his time
Be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more.
Sure, he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and God-like reason
To rust in us unused.—Shakspere.

IT is astonishing how a conception of original sin or total depravity, which transforms God from an object of adoration and affection into a hideous and detestable being, could at any time, however barbarous, hav been found acceptable, or how the casuistries by which people strive to modify its hardness could ever hav been listened to with common patience.—Strauss.

THEOLOGIANS no longer speak with authority. They are content to suggest and to deprecate hasty contradiction. Those who believed on trust hav passed into uncertainty. Those who uphold orthodoxy cannot agree on what ground to defend it. . . . Doctrins once fixed as a rock are now fluid as water. Truth is what men trow. Things are what men think. . . . What is generally doubted is doubtful.—Froude.

IF the view I hav taken did really and logically lead to Fatalism, Materialism, and Atheism, I should profess myself a Fatalist, Materialist, and Atheist; and I should look upon those who, while they believed in my honesty of purpose and intellectual competency, should raise a hue and cry against me, as people who by their own admission preferred lying to truth and whose opinions therefore were unworthy of the smallest attention.—Huxley.

A FEW years ago a Methodist clergyman took it upon himself to giv me a piece of friendly advice: "Although you may disbelieve the Bible, you ought not to say so. That you should keep to yourself." "Do you believe the Bible?" said I. He replied, "Most assuredly," to which I retorted: "Your answer conveys no information to me. You may be following your own advice. You told me to suppress my opinions. Of course a man who will advise others to dissimulate will not always be particular about telling the truth himself."—Ingersoll.

ALL that is necessary, as it seems to me, to convince any reasonable person that the Bible is simply and purely of human invention—of barbarian invention—is to read it. Read it as you would any other book; think of it as you would of any other; get the bandage of reverence from your eyes; drive from your heart the phantom of fear; push from the throne of your brain the cowled form of superstition—then read the holy Bible, and you will be amazed that you ever, for one moment, supposed a being of infinit wisdom, goodness, and purity to be the author of such ignorance and such atrocity.—Ingersoll.

IT is not by shirking difficulties that we can remove them or escape them; nor by evading the perplexing problems of life or speculation that we can hope to solve them; nor by saying Hush! to every over-subtle questioner that the question can be answered or the asker silenced. Men cannot go on forever living upon half-exploded shams; keeping absolute laws with admittedly false preambles on their statute books; professing creeds only half credited and quite incredible; standing and sleeping on suspected or recognized volcanoes; erecting both their dwellings and their temples on ice which the first dreaded rays of sunlight they know must melt away.—Greg.

Odds and Ends.

"ARE you prepared for death?" the clergyman asked, with a tremor of emotion in his voice as he took the sick woman's hand in his own. A shade of patient thought crossed the invalid's face, and by-and-bye she said "she didn't hardly believe she was; there was the little bedroom carpet to be taken up yet, and the paint up-stairs had hardly been touched, and she did want to put up new curtains in the dining-room; but she thought if she didn't die until next Monday she would be about as near ready as a woman with a big family and no girl ever expected to be." That woman got well.

CHRISTIANS.

Two ragged urchins stood one day
Beside the great church door,
And watched the folks in rich array
From out the temple pour.

"My eyes! but ain't they tony though!
And don't they sport the dress!
What be they, Joe?" "Oh, I dunno—
They're Christian folks, I guess."

They be! Then if we had the cash,
And nothing else to do,
And washed and dressed and cut a dash,
Should we be Christians too?"
—Boston Transcript.

AUNT SALLIE'S CONCLUSIONS.—"The Liberal League! La me," says Aunt Sallie, "what new-fangled society is that?" and she dropped the first number of the Rational Appeal, and took a huge pinch of snuff.

"Oh, that," says the elegant nephew, complacently stroking his mustache, "is a Liberty party that advocates the equality of human rights, the taxation of church propertw, etc."

"Taxing the house of God," echoed Aunt Sallie, "wouldn't that be awfully blashemous and wicked!"

"Can't see it in that light," said the irreverent nephew, "for common report makes him the richest monopolist in the world, owning the earth and the fulness thereof, to say nothing of the cattle on a thousand hills."

"Sartin," mused Aunt Sallie reflectivly. "I don't see why he is not just as able to pay his taxes as the widow Brown, with only that small house and lot, and five children to support. But I don't know what the minister will say, for he is always begging for him as though he was the raggedest pauper in town."—Rational Appeal.

MR. and Mrs. Tom Mulcahy lived on a farm. They were shrewd and thrifty, and had the reputation of being close. Finally Mrs. Mulcahy sickened and was about to die. Finding herself nearing the end, she expressed a desire to put things in order before that event occurred, and old Tom prepared to listen.

"Tom," said Mrs. Mulcahy, "there's Mrs. Smith up at the crossing, she owes me $1.80 for butter; see ye get it."

"Sinsible to the last! Sinsible to the last!" said Tom. "I'll get it."

"Then—then there's Mrs. Jones up at the creek, she owes me $1.50 for chickens."

"Ah! look at that now for a mind; she forgets nothing."

"And Mrs. Brown in the village, she owes me $2.30 for milk."

"D'ye hear that? Sinsible to the last! Sinsible to the last! Go on, my dear."

"And—and——"

"Yis?"

"And Mrs. Roberts, at the toll-gate, I owe her——"

"Ah! poor dear! poor dear!" broke in old Tom, hastily; "how her poor mind does be wandering! Sure we've allowed her to talk too much intirely, so we hav."

CENSUS-TAKING.—"Hav you got my name down?" demanded one woman.

"Alice Gaffney," was the response.

"Well, it ain't Gaffney; it's Gooligan, I'm one of the Gooligan family of the Eleventh ward, and I want it put down."

The desired change was made and the woman satisfied.

In another house was found a burly, jet-black negro, with a white wife holding a baby in her arms. Their marriage certificate hung in a conspicuous position on the wall, and the man pointed to it with evident pride. The baby bore the high-sounding name of Arthur Eugene Forrebee, and when asked its color the man responded with a laugh:

"Dat's our baby, but I don't know whether you'd call him black or white; 'spose you call him half-and-half? Dat chile was born back here in Cullen street, de hardest street in Philadelphy."

Having given his occupation as soap-fat gatherer, the man inquired what all the questions were asked for. He was told that they were to be sent to Washington.

"Hole on, hole on!" he exclaimed; "I don't want to go to Washington as no soap-fat gatherer. I'se a cook by purfession; put me down a cook."

At another place a brazen-looking white woman asked if the police were collecting information to send them all to the House of Correction. One old colored man asked:

"Is dis yere for de draft? Bekase I'll play sick like I did when I was in de army before. Yah, yah, yah!"

A colored woman weighing about three hundred pounds leaned out of a second-story window and coolly surveyed the visitors as they rapped at the door. Then she asked what they wanted.

"We want to see you a moment," was the reply.

"Well, here I is," she responded, with a chuckle; "de Lord knows I'se big enough for you to see me."

Notes and Clippings.

A MAN has invented a chair that can be adjusted to eight hundred different positions. It is designed for a boy to sit in when he goes to church.

GEORGE RIPLEY, the well-known writer and critic, who was associated with Emerson, Dana, Hawthorne, and others in the Brook Farm community, died on the 4th.

THE venerable Mrs. Tyler, the widow of ex-President Tyler, has joined the Roman Catholic church. Her daughter and granddaughter unite with Mrs. Tyler in taking this step.

A LITTLE Sunday-school miss was asked by her teacher, "What must people do in order to go to heaven?" "Die, I suppose," replied the little one. The teacher didn't question her any further.

A YOUNG man convicted at Athens, Georgia, of forgery, was, according to the Atlanta Constitution, "an activ member of the Young Men's Christian Association," yet he habitually "played and drank in the billiard saloons."

THE Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas has decided that money lost by betting on a race cannot be recovered through the law in that state, which only covers "money wagered upon any game of address or of hazard." The case was a bet on a pedestrian mateh.

THE new oath for the French soldiers contains no reference to the Deity or the republic. It will be taken on the 14th of July, as follows: "In the name of the regiment, I swear on my honor to remain faithful to the Constitution, and to defend this flag until death."

THE outcry against the emigration from Ireland is preposterous. Lord Carlisle, a former lord-lieutenant, hit the mark when he said that he hoped the emigration would continue till those left could always command by their labor sixty cents a day; but that is just what many landlords don't want.

THE Methodist ministers of Boston hav formally requested the city authorities to cease giving free concerts on Sunday in the public parks, on the ground that such music is "promotiv of Sabbath desecration and injurious to public morals." They seem to be afraid of all opposition to and competition with their dolorous psalm singing.

THE shy planet Mercury now once more visits the evening sky, and those who keep a sharp watch for him soon after sundown will catch him twinkling a few degrees above the western horizon. It is three months since he last shone in the west after the sun, and during that time he has made the circuit of his two-hundred-million-mile track, and is ready for another lap.

THE Mayor of New Bedford was invited to make an address at a union Sunday-school picnic. The Methodist minister thereupon advised his congregation to stay away, saying, "When I joined the church of Christ I promised to renounce the devil and all his works, and I cannot now allow the schools to be represented by the person proposed without entering a protest."

MANY people are under the impression that England stands at the head of all the Continental nations as regards the number of its periodical publications. Such is not the case. Germany heads the list with 3,778; England follows with 2,509; and France comes next with 2,000. There is then a great falling off. America boasts 9,129, being more than the three nations above named put together.

IT is noticeable that most of the Baccalaureate sermons this year refer either directly or remotely to the prevailing sentiments of skepticism. They handle the subject very gingerly, however, and are characterized by a wailing refrain of "Please don't do it." But none of them picture the horrors of hell as a penalty. How differently this thing was done a quarter of a century ago. What has made the change?

THE Jesuits are now being expelled as quickly as possible. Great excitement prevails all over Paris in consequence of a recent demonstration, both against and for the Jesuits. While being expelled from their institution in the Rue de Sevres a large crowd gathered at the entrance and hooted the priests issuing therefrom. At Lille and other provincial towns the demonstrations were, however, mostly in favor of the order.

PREACHING to New York Presbyterians on Sunday, the Rev. Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh, uttered these words: "Every true Christian is independent of light from without. He does not need the testimony of the church. He has, in the language of the apostle, an unction of the Holy Ghost." What is this but George Fox's doctrine of the "inner light?" Is the Rev. Principal Cairns a Quaker masquerading in a Geneva gown?

AN English clergyman, the Rev. Thomas Ratcliffe, Vicar of Stapleford, was charged before the Nottingham county magistrates the other day with assaulting Sarah Johnson, a married woman. It appeared that the complainant went to the churchyard on Friday night for the purpose of cutting the grass growing on her child's grave. While so engaged the defendant appeared, and, charging her with trespassing, struck her and knocked her down. He was fined a guinea.

SOME little girls in a Brooklyn Sunday-school were studying the history of David, the passage for the day being that which describes the shepherd boy's victory over Goliath. The teacher asked the question, "Now, can any of you, little girls, tell me who killed the giant?" Quick as thought one of the smallest responded, "Jack." The teacher had some difficulty in explaining the difference between the inspired yarn and the no less authentic story of "Jack the Giant Killer."

DEACON JACKSON, of St. Louis, called a sister in the church "an old cow." She had him arraigned before a committee, which recommended his suspension, but a majority of the church voted against such punishment. That was the situation when, at a prayer-meeting, Deacon Jackson took his accustomed place in the amen corner. The pastor suggested that under the circumstances, he had better take a back seat. He refused to be thus humiliated. Then Deacons Smith and Bird ejected him after a violent struggle.

WHEN Anthony Comstock told our reporter of the vast quantity of "evil reading" and pictures he had seized from little children in a school up town we could not resist the impression that he was rather too serenely confident of our innocent credulity. Now, the Superintendent of Schools says this remark of Comstock's was all "blow," and that he intends to call upon Mr. Comstock officially to designate the school. We imagin that the vice suppressor will find it harder to point to chapter and verse in this affair than he does when he addresses Sunday-schools on his life work.—Truth.

ONE of the subjects for study or discussion at the Conference of Believers for Bible Study at Clifton Springs, N. Y., is, "The Testimony of Scripture in Relation to Itself." Literally defined, this means the testimony the text of the Bible offers in proof of its own divinity. Truly an interesting subject, and one of which a discussion will immensely advance the claims of that book to inspiration. Doubters want external-collateral evidence, not the mere assertions of the book, to satisfy them. If books are to be allowed to prove their inspiration by their own assertions, the market could soon be glutted.

TRUTH must persist in directing public attention to the many abuses incident to steamboat travel. Either the officials to whom the supervisory duty is entrusted are not numerous enough, or they are incompetent. Steamboats daily leave the piers crowded far beyond their legalized capacity. But few or more are provided with a sufficient number of boats in case of an accident, and the life-preservers in many instances are of the poorest kind. The late disasters hav only had a temporary influence in the way of increased vigilance, and something more radical in the way of change is imperativly needed.—Truth.

IF the Rev. Dr. Walsh is correct in his explanation of Anthony Comstock's prosecution of the Sabin case, it is the most scoundrelly piece of business Comstock ever undertook. The character of the books he bought of Sabin was such that it seemed nothing could be said in defense of Mr. Sabin. It is due to Comstock that he be heard before opinions are formed but if it shall finally appear that to revenge himself upon Mr. Sabin for once having been witness against him he induced that gentleman's son to buy him these books on the plea that he was an amateur collector of prints, as the Baptist clergyman charges, no punishment known to the law would be too severe for this man, who professes to be engaged in the work of purifying public morals.—Truth.

THE Old Catholic church seems to be in a worse plight than ever. At the meeting in Geneva of the Swiss Old Catholic Synod, Bishop Herzog reported that in the canton of Berne alone twelve parishes and ten priests were lost during the year. This was by reason of the parish election laws, through whose operation the Roman Catholics succeeded in electing their own priests, and thus getting the appropriation which the government allows. In other cases there was a similar result to elections. In only two parishes where elections were held were the Old Catholics successful. Only forty eight parishes are now left to them. A new book of prayer, compiled by Bishop Herzog, was adopted by the Synod. The original promoters of the Old Catholic organization are greatly discouraged, and there are now no fears that the Roman Catholic church will suffer any losses in this direction.

THE Observer recently offered a prize for the best essay refuting modern Infidelity. The prize has been awarded. If the Observer really desired to benefit mankind, why did it not offer a prize for the best essay on the subject of modern Infidelity? Would the Albany Law Journal offer a prize for the best essay against usury, or in favor of the Statute of Limitations, or for or against either side of these or any other legal subjects? Or should we expect a medical society to offer prizes for the best essay against the theory of emotional insanity? Would not prizes be offered in these cases for the best essay on the subjects, leaving each writer to his own view? And would not the best thought be called out in this way? Why is it, then, that a religious journal, in hunting after thought on modern Infidelity, should confine contestants for its prizes to one side of the issue? Is it because Infidelity is so strong and the foundation of modern religion so weak that the former must be choked off to prevent its gaining the supremacy?

THE Indianapolis Journal is responsible for the following touching "pome:"

I thought the deacon liked me, yet
I wa'n't adzackly shore of hit—
For, mind ye, time and time agin,
When jiners ud be comin' in,
I'd see him shakin' hands as free
With other sisters as with me!
But juring last revival
He called on me to lead in prayer,
And kneeled there with me side by side,
A-whisperin' he felt sanctified,
Jes' techin' of my garment's hem—
That settled things as far as them
Thare other wimmin was concerned!—
An'—well! I know I must a-turned
A dozen colors. Flurried? La!
No mortal sinner ever saw
A gladder widder than the one
A-kneelin' there and wanderun
Who'd pray! So glad, upon my word,
I railly couldn't thank the Lord!

THE meteor that fell near Macon, Ga., on Tuesday night is said to hav looked as big as a barrel, and as it rushed down the sky it lighted up the whole city. When it exploded the earth shook and the frightened negroes dropped on their knees and began to pray, recalling the scenes on the Southern plantations during the great meteor shower of 1833. It is estimated that the meteor struck the earth about forty miles from Macon. It is interesting, in the light of astronomers' theories, to contemplate the possibility that this mass may hav been hurled from the sun during some disturbance of his surface, like those that are now visible through a telescope. It is fortunate that the great central orb of the solar system does not often amuse himself by throwing a million-pound shot at some one of his fleet of worlds. Still more interesting is the theory that such meteors hav been shot forth from a distant star, Sirius or Aldebaran perhaps, and hav fallen to rest upon our earth after a journey through space whose length makes an arithmetic nod.

The Godly Women of the Bible.—Continued.

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE 19TH CENTURY.

ELIZABETH AND MARY.—CONTINUED.

Now, this Holy Ghost is nowhere described in the sacred scriptures. Only the effects of his administration are considered of any importance. But the godly commentators have told us "that the Holy Ghost is a living, conscious person, is plainly implied here, and is elsewhere clearly taught (Acts v, 3, 4); and that in the unity of the godhead he is distinct both from the Father and the Son, is taught with equal distinctness (Matt. xxviii, 19; 2 Cor. xiii, 14)."

Of course we must accept this lucid definition, which will aid us mightily. So then the Holy Ghost was and is a veritable person, of the masculine gender. Please bear that fact in mind as the holy farce proceeds.

It was promised Zacharias that his baby John should "be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb." Now if the Holy Ghost was a full-grown person, must not that baby-boy have been stuffed to a bursting uncomfortableness to have been filled with an adult person, a ghost, too, and a holy one besides? Moreover, how about the Ghost, to be crowded into a little baby?

Again. This Holy Ghost person is not introduced or rendered visible in the sacred drama, notwithstanding Gabriel told Mary that "the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee." Accepting the definition above, "a living conscious person, distinct from both the Father and the Son," and that the "godhead united is the infinite or universe," when this person—one-third of the godhead or the infinite—"came upon Mary," must not an avalanche have fallen upon her? We leave a blank for the commentators to fill, which several do in this wise: "Power of the highest, the immediate energy of the godhead, conveyed by the Holy Ghost." There, ought not we to be thankful for that definition?

Now comes "overshadow, a word suggesting how gentle, while efficacious, would be this power, and its mysterious secrecy, withdrawn as if by a cloud from human scrutiny."

Thank you, Messrs. Commentators. Then there was no avalanche, though a third part of the godhead, being a person of the masculine gender, "came upon Mary?" Oh, now we understand. It was the force or energy of the triune whole, conveyed by this one-third personal male Ghost, distinct from the other two-thirds, and embodied gently, that is, by absorption, diffusively, but efficaciously (that is, with sufficient power to produce the desired and designed effect) on to or into Mary in mysterious secrecy (did she realize it herself?), and afterward withdrawn as if by a cloud from human scrutiny.

Reader, where do you suppose those holy commentators found that explanation? Did Gabriel tell them, or Mary, the mother of God, or did the Holy Ghost reveal it, that we might not longer remain ignorant of the infinitesimal processes of the immaculate conception?

Could Mr. Bennett have availed himself of this comprehensive analysis of these learned ones, it would have superceded the necessity of some of his most "vulgar" questions in his "Open Letter to Jesus Christ."

"That holy thing born of thee" the D.D.'s declare to mean "that sonship efflorescing into human and palpable manifestation."

Isn't that beautiful, sublime, godly, celestial?

But we must leave the Son and his attributes, for it is with the mother we have to do, except as the Son is introduced in relation to the mother or woman.

Gabriel, having announced the birth of John, naturally felt an interest in the success of his job or the fulfilment of his promise, so he kept a sharp eye on matters; and having been hovering around during Elizabeth's five months' hiding, as only an angel could, he understood perfectly how the case progressed and run no risk in informing Mary of the condition of her cousin, thinking it would be a good test in regard to her own case, and so it proved, for it set her on the qui vive to learn the truth of Gabriel's assertion, as she already knew of Elizabeth's barrenness, age, and continual prayers for a son. So as soon as Gabe left her she arose and went into the hill-country in haste and found Elizabeth at home, for she had returned from her unaccountable hiding from her husband (possibly to enjoy angel ministrations from gentleman Gabriel).

This again transfers us to the home of Elizabeth.

Scene Fourth. An interview most transporting to these lovely cousins and not void of interest to us poor mortals, since the soul's salvation of the universe depended upon these two godly women. The sacred historian describes it thus: "Mary entered into the house of Zacharias and saluted Elizabeth. And it came to pass that when Elizabeth heard the salutation of Mary the babe leaped in her womb; and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Ghost. And she spake out with a loud voice and said, Blessed art thou among women and blessed is the fruit of thy womb. And whence is this to me that the mother of my Lord should come to me? For, lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears the babe leaped in my womb for joy. And blessed is she that believed; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord" (Luke i, 40–45).

The chaste commentators declare that the "babe leaping" denoted that "this maternal sensation was something extraordinary—a sympathetic emotion of the unconscious babe at the presence of his Lord;" or, in other words, that the six months' fœtus was conscious of the conception of Mary, and that the child conceived by the Holy Ghost was the "Lord."

Could it be believed that some men, in the light of the nineteenth century, would write themselves down as such credulous dupes or knaves were it not for the fact before our eyes in print? And, furthermore, that silly men and women could be found who would believe such wicked nonsense?

The design is apparent. In order to prove that Jesus was the son of God, the Holy One, who had been prophesied of from the Garden of Eden, "the seed of the woman that shall bruise the serpent's head," the Savior, yea, the very Lord God himself, the account is made to represent that first the fœtus was inspired to leap, and then the mother to know and affirm, without any external knowledge, that Mary had thus conceived the Lord, for our divines go on to say that, "turn this as we will, we shall never be able to see the propriety of calling an unborn child 'Lord,' but by supposing Elizabeth, like the prophets of old, was enlightened to perceive the Messiah's divine nature, upon whom (Mary) and her unborn babe, in an ecstacy of inspiration, she pronounces a benediction, feeling it to be a wonder unaccountable that the mother of her Lord should come to her." The holy divine adds that "the virgin received an additional benediction (verse xlv, 'she that believed') for her implicit faith, in tacit and delicate contrast with her own husband." It will be remembered that Zacharias fearing, doubted, and as a judgment was struck dumb. Elizabeth and Mary had no such squeamish fear in regard to Mr. Angel's predictions and performances, and the doubting husband could be reproved by the wife for his incredulity. No doubt these lovely pattern women would like to have persuaded the husband and lover to believe the miraculous interposition of God in the presence of Gabriel in their absence, the one hiding and the other at home in Nazareth, or with her cousin Elizabeth.

We have no account that Gabriel visited them during their pregnancy, but as many important items are omitted in God's word, the fact might not have been stated. The divines go into rapture over the holy visit, exclaiming, "What an honored roof was that which overarched these cousins, and yet not a trace of it now is to be seen, while the progeny of these two women, the one but the honored pioneer of the other, have made the world new."

As soon as Elizabeth ceased her benediction, Mary caught up the strain and in ten verses magnifies the Lord for what he has done for her, etc. The holy commentators are again in raptures over this "magnificent canticle," and inquire; "Is it unnatural to suppose that the spirit of the blessed Virgin had been drawn beforehand into mysterious sympathy with the ideas and tone of this hymn? . . . In both songs these holy women, filled with wonder to behold 'the proud, the mighty, the rich,' passed by, and in their persons the lowliest chosen to usher in the greatest events, rejoiced in that great law of the kingdom of God by which he delights to 'put down the mighty from their seats and exalt them of low degree.'"

Was not there a little of the selfishness and pride of the old carnal Adam exercised in those grateful songs by these holy women, Messrs. Divines, since themselves are the chosen who had "found favor with God," even though it is attempted by a misconstruction to convey the false impression that "in both songs the strain dies away on Christ," referring to Hannah of the Old Testament notoriety, who sung in similar circumstances the birth of her son Samuel, "under the name of Jehovah's King," who was the Christ.

"Mary abode with Elizabeth about three months, and then returned to her own house." Then we catch a heavenly glimpse, in scene fifth, of John's birth and circumcision:

"Now Elizabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son. And her neighbors and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her. And it came to pass that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father. And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name. And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called. And he asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marveled all. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God. And fear came on all that dwelt around about them; and all these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea."

It is surprising that all who heard this wonderful story should question, "What manner of child this shall be? And the hand of the Lord was on him."

It now became Zacharias' turn to go into ecstacies, for his doubting ceased with the birth of the child, his restoration of speech, and the incipient fulfilment of Gabriel's prophecy. So he "was filled with the Holy Ghost" (a living, conscious person), and ran on prophesying of the infant Jesus, who was to be born, forgetting his own baby John, except as he declared, "he shall be called the Prophet of the Highest and go before him," which the record manages to fulfil. Probably this is all fabrication for the purpose of establishing the divinity of Jesus, as none but Luke mentions the circumstance.

Elizabeth does not figure largely in this scene, and she and the old priest here disappear from the stage and are no more seen or heard of in the glorious scheme of salvation, their introduction having been only necessary to furnish parents for John the Baptist, especially Elizabeth for a mother. There is nothing criminal recorded against her, though she was an enthusiast, which is more than can be said of the majority of the women of the Bible.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 2.

"Each woman should claim and hold complete ownership of her body." "Easier said than done," is the too frequent reply. And so it is. But the greater the trial the harder the labor, the more pure and perfect will be the joy in achieving it and feeling that you hav won. When we read the history of the temperance cause, and consider the long years of labor, of earnest soulful effort, and the millions of money that has been spent in trying to win men from a love of spirituous liquors and teach them the great evil of indulgence in rum drinking, we almost despair at the outlook of what is to be done to remedy this greater and more universal intemperance of excessiv sexual commerce. It permeates all classes of society, in marriage and out, and is almost a universal evil all over the world. There are a few priestly celibates who really liv celibate, a few widowers, bachelors, and young men, a few widows, nuns, and old maids, and doubtless a great many young girls who liv pure, chaste, and virtuous lives, and so also do the Shakers as a class, and a few full believers in Christ and Paul, but all these are but as scattered, glimmering stars in the vast firmament. And of them all, how many liv pure from a real knowledge of the laws of hygiene? So few you could almost count them on your fingers. And just so was it once with liquor intemperates. Those who let rum alone because of its greatest evil, the destruction of mental and bodily vigor, were few indeed.

But the day of light and knowledge is here, and the eyes of the blind are being opened, and we hope and trust that this last, greatest, and most important battle to be fought for purity, health, and happiness will be of shorter duration and require less outlay of time and means in proportion as the glorious light of science, fact, and experimental knowledge is thrown upon it.

There are thousands of good, brave, and noble men who are working with full hearts and strong resolves for purity of sex, for hygiene of mind and body, but not till woman comes in all her strength of power to the front, and givs herself—her all—to the work, will the real battle begin. And that it may be waged in love, in heartfelt kindliness of spirit, is the guerdon of success. Each woman must claim ownership of herself; not clamor for more rights, but quietly be a law unto herself, and take the rights that are hers by virtue of her inheritance, as the mother of all who liv. Until woman owns herself sexually she never will be able to stand by man as his equal in power or consequently his peer in intellect. She must be pure herself, and demand it of all whom she admits to her friendship and home. She must teach it as the first lesson to her children; teach it not as mere social custom, but hygenically and thoroughly as a demand of nature, and one that is imperativ and absolute, one on which health of body, strength of mind, and all the vital forces are dependent. Without purity and cleanliness sexually, there can be no purity and cleanliness of mind, and no true health and vigor of body.

The great mass of the people hav sinned in ignorance. They knew not what they did. They inherited desires and passions, and thought in gratifying them they only yielded to a natural law of their being. If some few discovered, when too late, that they had sacrificed health, vigor, and intellect at the shrine of lust they did not want themselvs to blame, but deemed it a disease and sought medical assistance; and doctors compounded remedies, advertised them widely, and pocketed fortunes, but never once told the poor victims of selfish gratification that their only help lay in purity and abstinence. Now and then a nostrum would change the form of the disease and a cure would be triumphantly heralded only to hoodwink hundreds of others into trying it.

It is not doctors and medicines the world needs. It is knowledge, light, and revealed experience!

Age after age one person after another has tried to giv to it this greatly needed boon, but the mills of the gods grind slowly, and perhaps the time is even now hardly come when the people will consent to hear and look upon the naked truth. But it is the duty of those who do see the evil and know the remedy, to speak, even though all refuse to listen. A seed may be sown here and another there and of them all a few may take root and grow into a tree, and one tree which produces the fruit of purity and correct living is worth ages of toil and labor. Like "Apple-Seed John" in Lydia Maria Child's poem in St. Nicholas—we will plant the seeds and hope some future race may enjoy the crop:

"Weary travelers journeying west,
In the shade of her trees find pleasant rest,
And they often start with glad surprise
At the rosy fruit that round them lies,
And if they inquire, whence came such trees
Where not a bough once swayed the breeze,
The answer still comes as they travel on,
These trees were planted by 'Apple Seed John.'"

Letter From E. C. Walker.

IOWA MASS MEETING.—NOTES OF TRAVEL —THE BELVIDERE CAMP-MEETING.—LECTURES.—LEAGUE CONGRESS, ETC.

Iowa Liberals hav, upon the whole, been backward in the good work of organization and propagandism. There are a few superb workers, men and women, scattered over the state, but for one of these activ apostles of the gospel of humanity there are ten nonbelievers in the popular religion who are sitting with the licked fingers of laziness upon the stool of apathy, hugging to their breasts the comforting delusion that they are Liberals. Men who will privately assure you that Christianity is a gross superstition still occupy pews in its churches and contribute liberally for the support of its ministry, while they giv not one cent to help the cause in which they profess to believe, take not one Liberal paper, and know nothing, or next to nothing, of the momentous events of the last three years. Now, it is proposed to stir up a few, at least, of these sleepy souls, and get them to take a little interest in progressiv thought and vital reform work. To this end a mass convention of the Liberals and Secularists of Iowa and adjoining states has been called to meet at Marshalltown, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, August 27th, 28th, and 29th. Three sessions will be held each day in Woodbury's Opera House, and some of the best of speakers in the country will address the assembled disciples of justice.

The following speakers hav been invited, and hav readily promised to be in attendance: Prof. W. F. Jamieson, Mrs. H. S. Lake, and Mr. W. F. Peck. Dr. A. J. Clark of Indianapolis, Ind., has also kindly tendered his services, and will be on hand. T. C. Leland, O. A. Phelps, and others hav been invited, and it is hoped that they will be there. Good music will be procured, and everything done to render the meeting a complete success. But we shall not meet at Marshalltown only to listen to elegant speeches. We go there also to organize—to bring together our isolated workers, and devise ways and means whereby we can do practical work for truth and justice. Liberalism has a mission, and we shall accomplish that mission, if we are but true to the central abiding principles upon which the League was founded—liberty, love, and justice. Further particulars concerning the meeting will be furnished soon. In the mean time I want to hear from all who can attend, or will do anything to make this convention a success.

On Tuesday, June 8th, I started for Belvidere, Ill., to attend the camp-meeting at that place, called by our excellent brother, F. F. Follett. I traversed the river, valleys, and crossed the prairies of Iowa in the coaches of that excellent railway, the Chicago and Northwestern, stopping at most of the cities and towns upon the way to look up the interests of the cause, and engage in the sale of Liberal literature. At Cedar Rapids there are many Liberals, though but few of them comparativly dare avow their real sentiments. Among the earnest workers whom I hav had the pleasure of meeting there, I will mention Mrs. M. M. Reed, Chairman of the County Committee of the League; Sam'l Holland, S. J. H Wolf, L. B. Dawson, and Dr. A. B. Dennis. A very strong League might be organized here if the self-styled Liberals, who are pouring their money into the coffers of the Universalist and other orthodox churches, would but do their duty.

At Bertram and Mechanicsville we found some outspoken Freethinkers, as also at Mt. Vernon, the seat of a Methodist college; but at all of these places there are few if any Liberal papers taken. At Lisbon we partook of the hospitality of that most uncompromising Liberal, Joseph Levy, and here I met H. Sailor and W. Spinner, two more stanch men. Efforts hav been made to organize here, but so far without success. Apathy and indifference are the great obstacles in the way of organization everywhere.

At Wheatland we hav an excellent worker in the person of that staunch Radical, Jerome Dutton. He has done all in his power to form a League here, but has wisely concluded that the time is not yet ripe for the establishment of a successful organization. Better not organize than to prematurely combine and then quickly pine and die. Sunday, the 13th, I spent in the farm mansion of those devoted Liberals and friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Leroy and Flora Dutton. Here I met Charles and L. D. Dutton and other friends of the cause—friends of the labor and currency reform cause as well. Among the Liberals of Clinton county whom I hav met I hav perceived less of that narrow-minded bigotry which can see but one evil afflicting the race, and has one pet universal panacea, than among any other equal number of Freethinkers. These people are not afraid of new ideas, and examine all questions in the light of science and reason, not through Mrs. Grundy's spectacles.

Mr. A. L. Pascal has just been elected Secretary of the De Witt League. This should become a large and flourishing organization. There is abundance of material if only gathered up and properly utilized. The veteran worker at this place is E. Sweeting. I am under obligations to him for many kindnesses bestowed. At his home I made the acquaintence of A. L. Penfield, an enthusiastic Liberal and a young lawyer of ability and promise. He needs and should hav a larger field of work and usefulness. He has my sincerest thanks for favors extended. At Clinton I had the extreme pleasure of meeting for the first time Mrs. H. S. Lake and Mr. W. F. Peck. Mrs. Lake had just returned from a lecturing tour in which had been included the towns of Maknoketa, Tama City, Manchester, and Vinton. She wins the praise and admiration of all true Liberals wherever she goes. At the three first mentioned places she had full audiences. Mr. Shelling writes me from Manchester that she is the best and smartest lady lecturer they hav ever had at that place. At Vinton the attendance was small, but "sixteen enrolled themselves as liberty's lovers," and there are now grand prospects for a League at this point. Mrs. Lake goes next to Dixon, Ill., thence to Cedar Falls and western Iowa. Address her at Clinton, Iowa.

Our earnest German friend, Otto Wettstein, at Rochelle, Ill., is doing good work for the cause. He is helping to educate his townpeople both intellectually and in the way of true art.

Arriving at Belvidere, we found F. F. Follet up to his eyes in work. To him belongs all the credit for getting up the meeting. He announced a free platform, and it was such in the fullest and best sense of the word. The attendance was small, though increasing from day to day, and the interest was unflagging to the end. Some narrow-minded bigots were terribly disgruntled because Materialistic speakers were allowed upon the platform, but the leading Spiritualists, the men and women of sense, such as Dr. Juliet D. Severance, A. B. Severance, Moses Hull, Mattie Sawyer, Mr. Follet, and others, the reformers, who hav got out of the narrow boundaries of sect, the friends of humanity who realize the grave issues of the hour, exhibited no such short-sighted bitterness, and they succeeded, in conjunction with the audience and the speakers representing the other phases of thought, in making the Belvidere camp-meeting one of the most harmonious ever held in this country. Two sessions daily were held upon the fair grounds, and in the evening Adelphi Hall witnessed another outpouring of the truth. A conference meeting of one hour was held at the beginning of each forenoon and afternoon session, after which the rest of the time was taken up with the regular addresses of the various speakers. An interesting discussion upon the subject of Spiritualism vs. Materialism was kept up between Moses Hull and W. F. Jamieson, each making several speeches during the course of the meeting. They are both excellent speakers, and handled the subject and each other in a courteous, dignified, earnest, and truth-seeking manner. In addition to the various discussions and speeches as to whether man shall liv again, Moses Hull delivered an excellent address upon the "Conflict between Capital and Labor;" Mrs. Dr. Lawrence spoke grandly upon the labor problem, and delivered at Adelphi Hall a fine discourse upon the subject of health; Dr. A. J. Clark spoke upon the subject of "Mind," and also upon the Bible God; Mattie Sawyer chose for the subject of a finely-delivered speech, "Compensation;" and the writer of this presented the claims of the Liberal League, and urged the necessity of thorough organization. The marriage question was fearlessly handled by Moses Hull, Mrs. Severance, and others. In the first hall meetings Moses Hull spoke of the progress which the race has made, and he showed that the individual has always been right and society always wrong, and he maintained that such was the case to-day. Institutions must adapt themselvs to the changing necessities of the human family, or they must go down. In the conference meetings many an antiquated wrong got an airing, and especially was our one-sided educational system given a good drubbing. The speakers all agreed that that only was true education which developed alike the mental, physical, social, and emotional departments of our natures. How to make our home Liberal meetings a success, and the proper way in which Freethinkers should educate their children, were discussed by the writer and others. Good music was furnished by the Andrus family, of Beloit, Wis., by Moses Hull and Mattie Sawyer, and by some Liberal friends of Belvidere, whose names I did not obtain. Altogether, the Belvidere Camp-Meeting was a very enjoyable and instructiv affair, and it is to be hoped that many more gatherings of a similar nature will in the days to come cheer and instruct the faithful workers in the harvest-fields of humanity.

A letter just received from Dr. Shorland Harris, Mason City, Iowa, states that Humboldt Liberal League, No. 188, is alive, holding meetings each Sunday, and that its members intend to make it a power for good in Cerro Gordo. To W. F. Jamieson is due the credit of sowing the seed which has produced such goodly fruit.

The general impression abroad among our people seems to be that the Directors of the League will not call the Fourth Annual Congress at Bismarck Grove, as desired by many Western Liberals. If we cannot hav it there, how will St. Louis suit?

Prof. O. A. Phelps, "the Charles Bradlaugh of America," is making arrangements for a lecture tour through Iowa. Communicate with this indomitable worker at once. Address at Kansas City, Mo., box 991.

It is hoped that T. C. Leland will attend the Marshalltown Convention. If he concludes to come, he would like to make arrangements to deliver a few lectures on the way thither. Let our friends in Illinois and Iowa living upon the main line of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad write to him at 201 East 71st street, New York city.

From here I go northwest through Wisconsin to LaCrosse, then through southern Minnesota into Iowa, and shall spend most of the time between now and the Marshalltown Convention in northern and eastern Iowa. I am prepared to speak upon the live issues of the day whenever called upon, and will do all I can to help on the good cause. Terms reasonable. Address me at Norway, Benton county, Iowa.

Now, friends, let me hear from you concerning the rally at Marshalltown. E. C. WALKER.

Evidences That "God Is Love."

And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I hav created from the face of the earth; both man and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I hav made them (Gen. vi, 7).

And if ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant:

I also will do this unto you: I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart: and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it.

Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury, and I, even I, will chastize you seven times for your sins.

And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.

And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you (Lev. xxvi, 15, 16, 28, 29, 30).

As I liv, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you (Ezek. xx, 33).

I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generations of them that hate me (Deut. v, 9).

Thus saith the Lord: Behold I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.

That all flesh may know that I the Lord hav drawn forth my sword out of his sheath: it shall not return any more (Ezek. xxi, 3, 5).

And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom by the hand of my people Israel; and they shall do in Edom according to mine anger, and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God (Ezek xxv, 14).

Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword (Matt. x, 34).

Finally,

He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water (St. John vii, 38).

This is inducement in time of drought.

Soul Existence.

Cudworth insists that there exists a magical connection between the soul and the body, the soul being first created. We are then to believe that soul and body were formed from nothing by a being who was never created at all. More than this, that matter and spirit are independent of each other, although they hav existed in a state of union, time out of mind.

Telescopes can see better than we, and of what would we be informed without feeling, sensation, and those mental processes which are the effect of time and sensation?

Can a highly organized body exist without soul, or an atom without motion?

The human constitution exhibits a complex arrangement of influences and results, which include the highest order of ethereal manifestations, but a complex nature and a double nature are two entirely different things, and the latter cannot be predicated of any experience which we call our own unless we can do without sensation, or raise a child in a dungeon by spirit influence alone. As well may we believe in a trinity as in a double nature. An organization highly advanced would of course require a proceeding influence as a part of itself if this could be called soul.

Suspend a small weight by a string and it will vibrate as you will it, or by the magnetic force of your mind.

Thus we exert ourselvs in various ways, and that activity and consciousness of the same is the mind, but the modus operandi is strictly material.

An atom will never work except from its own sensitiv side. Thomas Aquinas remarked that the soul was material in action.

Nature's weakness is shown, as her highest achievements fall back upon themselvs.

A human being is an exotic of the highest order, but there is no place for him yet in the great universe.

Which do we resemble most—our Father in heaven, or the grandparents whose dear portraits decorate the garret wall, and some ancestors whose pictures are not there?

To be cheated by an overgrown weasel is often a sad thing, but to get at the soft side of any nature you must address the emotions, the reason being a second sober thought. These facts are well known by orators and poets, who play upon human nature as an instrument which thrills to their lightest touch. Respectfully, ALHAZA.

REV. TOM TELLIER at West Pawlet said in his farewell sermon, "You can't afford to hav this church closed." Of course we can't. It is like the darky who came running home from church to lock up his hens, and said Bill Jones had fell from grace, and that poultry would hav to catch it. The same may be said of the Baptists here. It is only by constantly shaking damnation in their faces, and making them think they hang over hell by a hair, that the Liberals can be protected in their lives and property. D.

SEVERAL members of the Baptist church at West Pawlet hav said that they will not trade any more at a certain merchant's store, because he is an Infidel, and say that nobody ought to patronize him. D.

Wrongs too Oft Repeated.

Many deep injuries within the last sixteen months hav been inflicted upon the editor of this paper. For one who has tried to hav his conduct square with the principles of truth and justice, he feels that his fate has been a hard one. Among the great wrongs thus visited upon him, few hav felt to him more cruel, uncalled-for, and ungenerous than the almost ungentlemanly attack of Scribner's Monthly for the current month. It is a magazine which has a high reputation, it has over a hundred thousand readers ; it has not been regarded as a sectarian publication ; then to hav such a bitter, untruthful statement, so much in the interest of the bitterest enemies of THE TRUTH SEEKER editor, is deeply to be regretted, and more so as the same unfair article is copied into other publications, as the Chicago Inter-Ocean (which has manifested a special spite toward this paper and its editor, and other papers of a similar caste.

The article referred to in Scribner's is entitled, "The Apotheosis of Dirt," page 463, and was written to throw contumely upon the Reception Meeting held in Chickering Hall on the evening of May 21 last, and to cast opprobrium upon the person honored at that meeting. and particularly to laud Anthony Comstock and his very virtuous achievements. We counted a dozen misrepresentations, falsehoods, and gross slanders in the article, and feeling much aggrieved, we wrote a private letter to Dr. J. G. Holland, the editor of the magazine, pointing out his misrepresentations and asking a privilege to make some reply to his slanders. In his answer he took the position that he had not wronged us; that we had been convicted of mailing obscene matter ; that our Infidel opinions had nothing to do with that conviction ; that he did not choose to go behind the decision of the court, and believed we had suffered no injustice ; that we were of a low moral status, and that in view of all this he could not allow us a place in his columns to correct the wrong done us.

Since the meeting in the Tremont House in Boston, last September, of the late editor of the Index with his friends, Anthony Comstock, Charles Ellis, and a few more choice spirits of the same ilk, to devise means by which to crush THE TRUTH SEEKER and disgrace its editor (then in prison), from which place the meeting was adjourned to Cambridge, the home of the late Index editor, when it was decided to publish those private letters, already sufficiently alluded to, few attacks hav appeared to be more contemptible and utterly mean than this article of Dr. Holland's, especially when he refuses us the opportunity of defending ourselves where thus wilfully assaulted. It is entirely in the spirit of the Index and R-P. Journal articles that hav so often outraged every principle of truth and justice.

1. After slurring the Chickering Hall meeting, which was composed of as respectable an audience as ever filled a hall in this city, he goes on to say that we "had been, by due process of law, after a full hearing of testimony and examination of facts, convicted of sending obscene matter through the mails." The falsity of this assertion will be readily perceived by those who hav read the verbatim report of the trial ; such will remember that we were allowed to introduce no evidence, and were refused to show by writers, authors, readers, publishers, and booksellers, what the character of the tabooed pamphlet was. As truthfully might it be claimed that John Rogers, Bruno, Socrates, Jesus Christ, and the hundreds of thousands of those who hav been tortured to death in the Inquisition, had a fair trial —"a full hearing of the testimony and examination of facts." It was a foregone conclusion that we must be convicted ; it was a plan of the Young Men's Christian Association, that being the third time we had been unjustly arrested at their instance. Nearly every person who understands the case knows it was a piece of religious persecution. Thousands of persons in this city know this to be the case. Mr. C. K. Chase, in the office of the Department of Justice at Washington, said as much to us while we were in prison. "Ah," said he, "the church was too strong for you." Attorney-General Devens was of the same opinion, and said that the pamphlet of Mr. Heywood is not of the character contemplated by the law under which we were convicted. Secretaries John Sherman and Carl Schurz expressed themselvs emphatically in the same way, and pronounced our imprisonment an outrage. Pardon Clerk Judge Gray, and Col. Rogers, the President's private secretary, said the same over and over again, and denounced the injustice that had been done us. A gentleman attached to the government informed us that everybody connected with the government fully believed that our conviction and sentence were unjust. He said every man freely expressed this opinion save Mr. Hayes, and he thought so, but had listened to the appeals of Comstock and the church to keep us in prison. If we were justly sent to prison, why were other persons in this city who sold the same pamphlet not served in the same way? Thousands of copies were sold before we were arrested, and thousands hav been sold since. Why also did the President instruct Mr. Comstock to bring no more suits for mailing that pamphlet? The man who insists that we were not arrested and imprisoned for opinion's sake is either ignorant of the facts, is a bigot, or a liar.

2. The Monthly next says the pamphlet "could only hav been written by its author with an impure motiv." Every one who knows Mr. Heywood knows this to be a slander. His motiv was sincere; he is probably as pure as Dr. Holland himself, and far less a hypocrit.

3. He continues, "And could only hav been received by the public with a polluting, degrading effect." The first person has yet to be heard from who has been degraded by it. No one can be found who has been injured in any way by it. Many feel that they hav been benefited by it.

4. "The claim that this book was of a scientific nature, or that it only contained certain advanced views of social and sexual questions, was not admitted by the court, and could not hav a moment's consideration by any body of men excepting one made up of bawds, blackguards, and Freelovers generally." The unfairness and untruthfulness of the latter part of this quotation are too obvious to need a word to point them out. There are many people who approve of the pamphlet who are not inferior to Dr. Holland in all that constitutes honorable men and women.

5. "Who are those who sympathize with him? Infidels —to a man ; Infidels—to a woman ; for it is to be remembered that some of the speakers—to their everlasting shame be it spoken !—of the Sunday-night meeting were women." This infamous slander hardly needs a comment. If it were true that none but Infidels sympathized with us, it would change nothing. Infidels hav the same right to feel sympathy and to express it, whether male or female, that others hav. But it is not true that we had the sympathy of none others than Infidels. We know of many Christians, and some clergymen, who sympathized deeply with us. The women who participated in the speaking and exercises of that meeting were as honorable and as true as any women this country affords. No true gentleman would publish such unfavorable insinuations about persons he knows nothing of.

6. "The conclusion is entirely legitimate that when a man's Infidelity leads to a lowering of the sense of moral obligation and to the bestializing of character, his doubts were from his dishonest heart, and not from his honest head." Here an effort to damage us is most apparent. We hav made a few mistakes in life, but we believe that our "sense of moral obligations" is equal to the majority of men and that we hav done as little toward injuring our fellow-beings as perhaps Dr. Holland himself. We defy him or any other of our accusers to show where we hav defrauded any one, where we hav seduced any one, where we hav committed adultery, or where we hav told an untruth. If a man does nothing to unjustly injure his fellow-beings he is not a very immoral man.

7. He next quotes, with much approval, Abbot's base slander: "There is not another man in America who has wrought such incalculable injury to the Liberal cause as D. M. Bennett." A greater untruth was never uttered, and when it is repeated by J. G. Holland it is still as false as ever.

8. "There speaks an honest man," referring to the extract just given. How a greater falsehood could be uttered is hard to conceive.

9. "They" (the great majority of the Infidels of the country) "hav openly and blatantly confessed themselvs to be sympathetic with the Freelove doctrins." A greater untruth could hardly be told. Nothing of the kind has been done. Not one in ten of the Infidels of the country are Freelovers, and not one in ten hav expressed sympathy in that direction.

10. He next praises Anthony Comstock—"a man whose neck some of them would be as glad to wring as they would that of a Thanksgiving turkey" (the wringers meaning Infidels). Upon what data does Dr. Holland make the assertion that any Infidel wishes to wring Comstock's neck? Has he the papers to show for that slander ? Infidels would be glad if Comstock would act according to the dictates of truth, liberty, and justice, instead of being the sneak, persecutor, and liar that he is. They would like to "wring" a little truth and honor into him if possible. They wish him no greater harm.

11. Dr. Holland, in lauding the great and good deeds of Comstock, givs the number of obscene books he has seized the number of photographers' negativs seized and destroyed, the number of persons arrested for selling obscene literature. These figures were probably obtained from Comstock himself, as the article is written in his interest and from his standpoint. But the statements are undoubtedly as utterly false as Comstock's statements made about finding obscene books and literature in the schools of this city, an account of which will be found on another page. Nothing is more sure than that Comstock is an infamous liar and that he is becoming much better understood than he has been. Dr. J. G. Holland has undertaken a pretty heavy contract, to make the people of America believe that Anthony Comstock is a truthful, honorable man.

12 "The watchfulness, the intrepidity, the self-devotion with which he has effected these wonderful results stamp him as one of the most useful and remarkable of the Christian workers of our time. We know of no social reformer who deserves more gratitude from the American people than Anthony Comstock. May God spare him long to stand between the villainous host who hate him and our beloved children, whom they are trying, with fiendish malignity, to pollute and destroy! And may Elizur Wright liv to be ashamed of the use the Freelovers hav made of him!"

These are the words of Dr. J. G. Holland, the editor of Scribner's Monthly. While he hates us and cannot say enough against us, he loves Anthony Comstock, the man who hired three girls, by paying them $14 50, to exhibit themselvs in a nude condition before himself and five other men, where they sat for an hour and twenty minutes looking at the show, as proved in Judge Gildersleeve's court; the man who took prostitutes to Mr. Rice's photograph gallery and tried to induce him to take the pictures of those women in a nude condition; the same man who has often and again used his utmost ability to tempt persons to commit crimes and break the laws ; the same man who has often forged the names of men and women to effect his diabolical plots and intrigues; the same man who has grossly slandered the Superintendent, teachers, and scholars of our schools by lying and saying the schools are supplied with obscene literature ; the same man who, as many men more honorable and truthful than himself are ready to make oath in any court, has committed perjury to swear people into prison ; the same man who has deeply wronged many persons, throwing some unjustly into prison and wringing tens of thousands of dollars from others, besides disgracing them for life. We hav been deeply wronged by him, and Dr. Holland is doing all he can to perpetuate it and intensify it. He is unmistakably a Comstock and Abbot man. Let him be known and appreciated at his true value. He has joined the slanderers and liars, and the world should know it. Let him defend Comstock and laud him to his heart's content. Perhaps if he insists upon praising Comstock, we ought to be content that he speaks ill of us. We wish to be in the opposit extreme from Comstock if possible. If he is a good man, we will be content to be the reverse.

In another place we allow a friend to say good words for St. Nicholas, published by the same house that issues Scribner's Monthly. Thus we return good for evil. While those who choose to be bitter enemies to us are maligning us to their utmost, we will speak words of truth of them and theirs. May they learn to do the same.

The Sabbath.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 27, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir : I hav been a subscriber to your paper but a short time and I must say I am highly pleased with it so far. I think it manifests a spirit of fairness in the treatment of the subjects it discusses that proclaims the paper to be pre-eminently a "truth seeker." Being a workingman of very limited time and means to acquire knowledge, my education of course is very limited. In an argument some time ago with my brother (a Baptist), in speaking of the Christian Sabbath he asserted that the law of Moses as given to the Jews making one day in seven a day of rest was original with and peculiar to the Jews, that no other nation or religion previous to this had ever instituted a regular day of rest. Not being sufficiently posted I could not rebut the assertion although I believed it to be untrue. Being unable to find anything bearing upon the subject in the books that I possess, I hav concluded to appeal to you for information. If therefore you can find time and space to notice the matter in your paper I shall feel very grateful. I hope the discussion as proposed in this week's TRUTH SEEKER will be a success, my only fear is that your opponent may "step down and out," as I think he cannot but see by the perusal of your first letter that he has "caught a Tartar."

Sincerely your friend, WM. H. WHITE.

REPLY.—The division of time into weeks and months, and the appointment of festival days and days for worship and sacrifice. were not first instituted by the descendants of Abraham. They existed in India, Persia, Chaldea, and Egypt before the time of Moses, and before the time of Abraham. It is not known with certainty that in either of these countries there were any obligatory enactments requiring one day in seven to be devoted to any special god, or any particular religious use. Authorities, however, are somewhat divided upon this subject as to when and where a septenary observance originated. Some claim that the seventh day festival had its origin in the country and religion of the Hindoos, and the Aryans, the most primitiv of all people, and some writers insist that the hebdomadal period clearly had an astronomical and not a theological derivation, the same as the new-moon festivals, the birth of the sun on the 25th of December, etc.

Mc Donnell in his "Day of Rest" givs several quotations upon this subject, which may be introduced here. Dion Cassius, an ancient Roman historian, states that in his time the custom of designating every recurring seven days by the name of the planets was practiced everywhere ; and attributes its origin, not to the Jews, but to the Egyptians. At the time he wrote neither the Greeks nor Romans had adopted the week but did so near the end of the fourth century of our era. Professor R. A. Proctor says: "The observance [of a Sabbath] was derived from an Egyptian, and primarily from a Chaldean source ; rest being enjoined by Egyptian priests on the seventh day, simply because they regarded that day as a dies infaustus, when it was unlucky to undertake any work." "We hav also historical evidence as to the non-Jewish origin of the observance of the seventh day as desisiv of the arguments I hav been considering, for Philo Judæus, Josephus, Clement of Alexandria. and others speak plainly of the week as not of Jewish origin, but common to all the oriental nations." Spencer says that "from many evidences the nations of the earth observed the new moon as a sacred festival long before the time of Moses." "It is known that while the month or moon was what may be called a universal measure of time, it was but a natural division of it to make it into four equal parts of seven days each, or weeks. Professor Fiske says: "The ancient Greeks and Romans had no divisions properly answering to our weeks ; although the former had their decade of days and the latter their nundinæ or market days, occurring every ninth day. But the Egyptians and orientals had a week of seven days." Proctor the astronomer further observes: "Beyond all doubt the week is an astronomical period, and that in a two-fold sense ; it is first a rough subdivision of the lunar month, and, in the second place, it is a period derived directly from the number of celestial bodies known to ancient astronomers as moving upon the sphere of the fixed stars." Tacitus suggested that the observance of the seventh day by the Jews was in honor of Saturn, by whose name that day was generally known, as it is at present. Proctor again states, "That the Egyptians dedicated the seventh day of the week to the outermost or highest planet, Saturn, is certain ; and it is presumable that this was a day of rest in Egypt."

From these quotations from ancient historians, sustained by modern scientists, it is pretty evident that the Israelites were not the first nation who had weeks and a Sabbath. This must appear more evident when we accept the reasonable views taken that the Jews themselves had no Sabbath till the time of Isaiah, some seven hundred years before our era. True, the institution of the Sabbath is placed in the Pentateuch, or more definitely in Exodus—the fourth Commandment, Ex. xx, 10—which has been held to be sixteen hundred years older than our era. But it is now pretty well settled by Bible scholars that no part of the Pentateuch is more than from five to seven hundred years older than the Christian era. A great deception has undoubtedly been practiced upon the world as to the time when the Pentateuch was written. Not a word of it was written by Moses, and not a word of it was written until six or eight hundred years after the time when he is is said to hav lived. We will not take the space here to demonstrate this statement, but it is quite susceptible of demonstration. This accounts for the fact that the Sabbath was utterly unknown to Joshua, Jephthah, Gideon, Samson, Samuel, David, and Solomon. There is no proof in the Bible that one of them knew aught of the Sabbath. The Sabbath is net even mentioned between Deuteronomy v, 15 and Kings iv, 23, a period covering six hundred years. Since close investigation establishes the fact that Deuteronomy and the rest of the Pentateuch were not written till after the time of Isaiah, the reason for the ignorance of Samuel, David, and Solomon respecting the Sabbath is well understood.

David knew nothing of the Sabbath when he tramped with Achish, king of Gath, and back again to Ziklag, a march of six days in all, after which he and his troops pursued apparently during three other days a marauding company of Amalekites, again returned to Ziklag with the spoil, another three days, and then after two days' rest he again marched upon Hebron. (See 1 Sam. xxix, xxx, and 2 Sam. i.) During all this time there was no keeping of a Sabbath, and so all through his reign. Solomon appears to hav been equally ignorant of a Sabbath, for he made a feast for all Israel, lasting in all fourteen days—seven days and seven days—which must at least hav included two Sabbaths, which in the account are not even hinted at. Had the law really existed in Solomon's time, as given in Exodus xvi, 29, "Abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day," it would not hav answered for him and all the people of Israel to hav been out two Sundays in succession. It is clear that he and the people knew nothing about keeping a Sabbath, and that all about observing the Sabbath was gotten up and written long after he was dead.

The reasons given in Exodus and Deuteronomy for observing the Sabbath are contradictory, flimsy, and unreasonable. In Exodus xx, 2, the reason is assigned thus, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested upon the seventh day; whereupon the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it," as though the Lord was any more weary on the evening of the sixth day, and needed rest more than at any other time. It is a crude and limited idea of God that he tires and has to take rest. The planets revolve in space all days alike; the earth rotates on its axis on the seventh day the same as on all others, the waves roll, the rivers run, the winds blow, and the entire universe is as ceaseless on the seventh day as the other six. The universe never wearies, never stops to rest, neither does God. Thus the reason there assigned is a ridiculous one. And in Deut. v, 15, a very contradictory reason is given—because God had brought the people out of Egypt with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm. What if he did, what has that to do with keeping the seventh day any more than the sixth or fifth? The connection is not apparent, and the reason is absurd, besides being entirely contradictory to the tired theory. There is not indeed much for the Sabbath business to rest upon except the theory that it was gotten up by certain priests or prophets six or seven hundred years before our era.

It is moreover ridiculous for Christians to attach much importance to the Sabbath, for, in the first place, they hav, without any authority, thrown the Jewish Sabbath aside—the seventh day—and set up the first day, and called that the Lord's day. They can show no authority for that step. Neither can they show that Jesus, the apostles, or any of the early Christian Fathers ever enjoined the keeping of any Sabbath, whether Jewish or Christian. Even down to the time of Luther, the Father of the Reformation, much stress had not been laid upon keeping the Sabbath. Luther and Calvin did not insist upon it. The Christian Sabbath as now observed is really a Puritan institution, gotten up within the last three hundred years, and has no ancient authority whatever to rest upon.

Let Us See.

CENTER BELPRE, O., June 15, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your Remarks to Inquirer, a few thoughts are suggested, which if you please I will notice. You say, first, "Seeing has to be performed with the eye and optic nerves," etc. Then you say, "Wisdom, love, truth, etc., are qualities in human character—we can see them in our fellow-beings." Now what I want explained is, how do we see those qualities of which you speak? Do we see them with the same organic eyes with which we see trees, houses, etc., or is it by some mental vision. Now I like your theory (for I must at present call it such), very well, the only difficulty with me is, is it absolutely true? If so, giv us the demonstrations, that we may know it too; if it is only your opinion please say so, and we will take it for what it is worth. In your next, you say you will tell us about the existence of the soul and a continued life! Please make it plain so it will not admit of a doubt, or ever hav to be told over again, with modifications. To us these are among the main questions; we hope you will dwell on them. We are all attention.

Sincerely yours for the getting of knowledge,

B. F. LEONARD.

REPLY.—This brother seems a little critical as to the use of the verb see. It is one of those words which hav several meanings. Webster defines it thus: "To perceive by the eye; to hav knowledge of the existence and apparent qualities of, by the organs of sight; to behold; to decry; to perceive by mental vision; to form an idea or conception of; to note with the mind; to discern; to distinguish; to comprehend. To regard, or look to; to take care of; to attend to, as to the execution or performance of something; to be aware. To hav an interview with; especially, to make a call upon; to visit. To fall in with; to meet or associate with; to hav intercourse or communication with. To make acquaintance with, or experience; to feel; to experience. To hav the power of sight, or of perceiving by the proper organs; to possess or employ the sense of vision. To hav intellectual apprehension; to penetrate; to understand; to discern, often followed by a preposition, as through or into. To be attentiv; to pay regard; to take note; to giv heed; generally with a to. Let me see, let us see, are used to express consideration or introduce the subject, or some scheme or calculation. See is sometimes used imperativ for look—to see about a thing, to pay attention to it; to consider it."

Thus our friend will observe that see is used for more than one purpose, and that we were not in error in saying that wisdom, love, and truth are qualities in human character which can be seen. Besides the organs called eyes, which do the literal seeing, we may be said to hav mental eyes, with which we also see, observe, comprehend, understand. We do not do all our seeing with the first-mentioned organs. We observe, comprehend, and understand much that we do not use our physical visual organs to see.

We profess to know no more about the intricacies or mysteries of the universe than other people, but are perfectly willing to giv such views as to us are most probable in the light we possess. Many things cannot be absolutely demonstrated. The best we can do is to present the best reasons we hav and to compare our views with others'. That which appears the most reasonable, the most probable, is the most worthy of our confidence and belief. What we had to say about the existence of the spirit or soul was briefly presented in the issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER for June 19th. Of course much more could be said, but our theory—for theory only it is—is there indicated.

The "Physiologist."

We are informed that our esteemed Liberal friend, Mrs. Elmina Drake Slenker, has become assistant editor of the Physiologist. She has felt deeply interested in its welfare, and will now perhaps be able to do more in its favor. We hav had in hand for a number of weeks an article from her in behalf of the Physiologist, and it would hav appeared before this had it not been mislaid. We will try and present it next week.

May the Physiologist and sister Elmina long flourish!

Liberal News Items.

I WISH every Liberal in the United States would send one dollar to the publisher of Truth, 142 Nassau street, New York city, and take that live Liberal daily three months. When a daily paper is brave enough to defend Liberalism, we should show our appreciation by aiding it.

I SINCERELY thank my Liberal friends for the following contributions, made the month ending June 30th: Joseph Barns, $1; David Cosad, $1; Dr. F. Larkin, 50 cents; N. M. Cross, $1; J. Francis Ruggles, $2; Nellie Newkirk, 50 cents; Joseph Frittz, $1; E. Carpenter, $2; John Shumway, 50 cents; D. P. Beevy, $2.25; Utah Liberal League, $4; Everard E. Martin, 50 cents; Thomas Peet, 50 cents; Walla Walla Liberal League, 50 cents; Sophia B. Robinson, 15 cents; in all, $17.30. These acknowledgments will be made at the end of every month, and I am sure that hundreds of my good friends who hav forgotten to do so will forward me a small remittance when I inform them that I am now devoting my whole time to the Liberal cause and depend most entirely on these contributions for the support of myself and family.

DR. S. E. SHATTUCK, of Hornellsville, has caused to be published in the daily Tribune of that town the following request to the Rev. Mr. Winchester, who had been holding up the "Bible as a total abstinence book:"

Editors Tribune: Allow me, through your columns, to respectfully request of the Rev. C. W. Winchester that in setting forth the "Bible as a total abstinence book" he explain the following scriptural passages:

"Giv strong drink to him that is ready to perish and wine to those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more" (Prov. xxxi, 67).

"And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after—for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink" (Deut. xiv, 26).

"Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim v, 23).

"Wine, that maketh glad the heart of man" (Psalms, civ, 15).

"Wine, which cheereth God and man" (Judges ix, 13).

"In the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink offering" (Numbers, xxviii, 7).

And tell why the most select men of that book could not abstain from drunkenness? Why the only man fit to be preserved from the deluge should celebrate his good luck by intoxication? Why the only one worthy to be saved from the conflagration of a destroyed city should get drunk and commit the most repulsiv of crimes? Why God should require to be collected for his own use from the people, by one priest, during one year, eleven barrels of wine? Why Christ, on his social and festiv occasions, furnished his guests with wine? Why he made the drinking of wine a divine requirement? Why he should regard old wine as better than new? Why he should hav acquired the title of wine-bibber, and why he should hav turned water into wine? Why Peter could make no better apology for his noisy associates than that it was too early in the morning to be drunk?

Too much cannot be said or done to promote the cause of temperance and morality. But to set forth the Bible as a total abstinence book has the appearance of burlesque and insincerity."

H. L. GREEN.

To the Voting Liberals.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: When, two weeks ago, I sent you an inquiry concerning the whereabouts of the young Liberal party, I little thought my words would find responsiv echoes, or, rather that simultaneous kindred appeals would be heard. Yet in your last issue I find Mr. Wakeman indorsing, through Mr. Green, the political organization of the Liberal ranks, whilst from the very brink of the great Pacific, a voice under the name of Byron Adonis, but which would better bear that of Cato, comes to tell us the leaven is at work in the far West as on the Eastern shore.

The wise words of Mr. Wakeman, pointing at the same time to the political sins of the Republican party, and the uselessness in putting questions or asking pledges from the Democratic leaders, paints the situation and points to the necessity as well as the opportunity of the hour.

The fears sometimes manifested that the Liberals would not gather around the newly-raised standard in numbers large enough to make the party influential are all ill-timed. They will remain unless action be taken, and will not cease until organization shows us our strength. Until this is effected, and the supporters of Liberalism are mustered, we will mistrust our own power. Other parties will ignore us, and our enemies despise our scattered and bushwhacking forces.

Organization need not mean the effort of supporting a separate ticket, but coalition, discussion of issues, of the necessities of the people and the hour, building of a platform or declaration of principles, choosing of bodies to represent us. Then can we usefully join either the Republican or Democratic ranks, as their attitude may warrant, not as a disorderly flight of homeless birds, but as a representativ organization with votes to be propitiated or feared. This result may not be immediate, but it is inevitable. Look at the history of the Irish party—ignored at first, then felt, but despised, now recognized and holding the balance of power in the British Parliament. Once consolidated, we can feel we liv, grow confident of our increasing power, use it as opportunity serves, and at last reach independence and supremacy.

The entire secularization of the state, the aim of all true Liberals, shared even by Christians, is not to be attained by private gatherings, associations, and protestations. Not until the day when we can wield organized and hostil votes in the field of politics, and demand the rights of the people instead of vainly remonstrating and begging for our due, will the enemies of progress in religion, thought, and free civil action heed us, or cease to point the finger of scorn and social condemnation at us. Then let us wisely catch the propitious breeze in the sails of the ship of Liberalism, and guided by the holy spirit of liberty let us boldly cleave the waves on our path to the haven of safety and power.

EDMOND GASTINEAU.

Christian Courtesy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The questions of H. W. Sanborn in the last TRUTH SEEKER, page 396, remind me of the story a clergyman told me some time ago about Col. Ingersoll. He said he was traveling in the cars, some time about 1871, and happened to overhear two men in conversation. One of them said he was about to start soon on a tour through Europe. The other gentleman advised him when he got there to do as other people did. When in Paris, do as the French do; when in Germany or England, do as they do, etc., even to plunging into all kinds of obscenity. On inquiry, he found this gentleman who was giving such advice was Col. Ingersoll. This was so contrary to anything I ever saw in his lectures that I immediately wrote to Mr. Ingersoll to know if there was any foundation for such a statement. He promptly replied that it was a lie made of whole cloth. But being more charitable than most clergymen, he suggested that the man might hav been imposed upon by his informant. I was glad to hav the opportunity to inform the clergyman of what Mr. Ingersoll had said. But when the Colonel was here, over a year ago, this same clergyman asked me if I would think it at all strange if "Bob" would some day go out lecturing on the other side to make money by it. The day Ingersoll was here to lecture, I was passing by a weak-brained Methodist preacher and a few of his friends, and in a joke, which they all understood, I advised them to lock their stable doors and hide their money that night.

"Why?" asked the preacher.

"Because," said I, "Ingersoll will be here to-night, and of course there is danger of mischief."

"Well," said the preacher, "it is a fact; there is no knowing what such a man might do."

In both cases I felt deeply insulted. They knew that I held to the same views that Mr. Ingersoll did, and yet were ill-bred enough to seriously call in question both his and my honor without knowing anything against either of us except the fact that we were not so superstitious as they. But when Ingersoll lectured in the evening the cowardly preachers agreed to stay away from the lecture. But like small whiffets, they could bark and snap at his heels as soon as he was gone.

Mr. Ingersoll says more in one lecture calculated to improve his listeners and lift them up, intellectually and morally, to higher and nobler ideals than all the preachers in the city do in their sermons in a week. All they can do for their cause is to misrepresent such men, to scare them from listening to reason. But Ingersoll's lecture left an excellent impression, even amongst some of the church members, much to the chagrin of the preachers. How strangely people are afraid of truth!

Rant versus Criticism.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: When a disputant takes to calling his opponent foul names, it is a proof that he is losing his argument, and putting rant in the place of logic—playing the snob instead of the philosopher. Your correspondent E. A. Chapman will, I trust, pardon me if I follow not his bad example, but leave rudeness to the Spiritualists' champion. I would not hav written a reply solely for the sake of Mr. Chapman, but for the sake of others with whom his special pleading might pass for good sense.

My spirit-critic appears annoyed by a misquotation. I hav looked over The Truth Seeker for the 27th of March and I find that my opponent is right. He did not say that "mesmerism is the keystone of spiritualism," but something worse. Here it is in all its beauty: "Mesmerism is the key to Spiritualism." Mesmerism is a delusion, "the key to Spiritualism." It is somewhere about twenty-eight years since my attention was first attracted to mesmerism. I began the study of it as a true believer. I also believed in phreno-mesmerism and clairvoyance. Unfortunately for those so-called sciences, I had more reason than faith—a greater love for truth than the wonderful. I learned more logic than rant. I proved my honesty by opposing all ranting mesmerists that came across me, the same as I now oppose the gentlemanly high-priest of Spiritualism who calls me a fraud, a liar, and a fool. I can not reply to those charges, because you, Mr. Editor, can not allow your columns to be stained by vulgarisms. Let the high-priest of Spiritualism now forget abuse, and take to argument. The facts and arguments I hav put before him he has not answered; those I will allow to pass over if he has the manly courage to grapple with these arguments I am going to advance:

1. A "spirit tempted Mr. Chapman to a glass of beer." The Medium and Daybreak, a Spiritualist organ, asserted that "lying, drunken, murdering spirits come back to earth to gratify their wicked appetites." Mr. Chapman would hav gone on drinking the beer if a good spirit had not stopped him. In this case he is very fortunate, more fortunate than those who are made into "lying, drinking, and murdering" mediums by the wicked spirits. Old mother theology has only one devil. Medium-table-leg theology has thousands of devils.

2. Supposing a seance to be genuine, and a being or sprite, spirit or ghost, to put in an appearance; is that a proof that the being is the spirit of whoever it says it is? If so, how so? Do you not acknowledge that they come back and lie, cheat, steal, drink, and cause murders? How can such a set of rascals be trusted? Look at your own assertions about evil spirits and that evil medium Anthony Comstock. Birds of a feather—genuine high-priests of Spiritualism. Anthony is the evil high-priest, Chapman the good.

The table raps, therefore it is my father. Is that logic, or rant? Lord Byron's spirit has been said to "forget its dignity and condescend to creep under a table to kick at the bidding of an ignorant medium, in two places at once, London and New York." There is an error; there must hav been two mediums, one in London and one in New York; and two spirits.

What can your correspondent mean by two laws, the wrong and the right? There is nothing of the kind as two laws, the wrong and the right. If this high-priest of Spiritualism understood philosophy as well as rant he would know that man never did and never can break one law of nature; it is the law that breaks the man, and not the man the law. Neither is that saying of his correct: "Generally we can take our choice." The choice is decided by motive, not by chance or caprice.

Let me call the attention of my Spiritualistic opponent to another argument, and I ask him, and all the spirits that come to instruct him, to answer it if he or they can.

Do spirits weave and stitch? If so, how so? If not, how came the woven and stitched cloth? When the spirit dematerialized the other part of the muslin, why not dematerialize the part left? What is affirmed of the piece left can be affirmed of all the muslin. The piece left has not been dematerialized, neither has the cloth, in the being called spirit, been dematerialized. By what means has the spirit organized the body it brought out from behind the curtain? If an organized being were dissolved in a close room, with closed doors and closed windows, I giv it as my opinion that the scent would be a little obnoxious. The next spirit is dressed in fine broadcloth; gold watch and diamond ring are both to be seen as the spirit looks to see what is the time. Ask the spirits who come to your seances to leave their clothes and gold watches, with a few of the diamond rings. You then can convince this unbelieving world, and get a store of old cast-off clothes of spirits—coats, pants, hats, boots, and gold watches, accompanied with diamond rings. Start a co-operativ store of Spiritualists; work in harmony one with another; get the spirits to work with you; convert the world, and enrich yourselvs. This is the glorious work left for the American Spiritualists to accomplish. Commence a Spiritualist newspaper with spirits for editors—or mediums to go between. Hav a batch of clairvoyants ready to look into every place and everything. Hav the police taught in mediumship, to enable them to detect all scoundrels. What glorious news will the spirit paper send out to the world every morning! No paper but the spirit paper could liv. Then form a joint stock company of Spiritualists of every shade and grade to conduct a mining operation. The clairvoyants could see where all the rich treasures are and how to procure them. What a world should we hav? Nothing could be hid from the eyes of spirits and clairvoyants. Spirits would come into court to giv evidence—at least they would save the innocent if not prosecute the guilty. Judges will be made from mediums, because the spirits will tell who are who. There will be no need of jurymen. When Spiritualism becomes the ism of this earth it will be paradise.

That is one side of the picture; look at the other: The evil spirits will come to such mediums as Anthony Comstock. The evil clairvoyants will also aid him. He may—and you know a may not is as good in logic as a may—he may cause all the evil spirits to come to him and his companions, and they may set up a co-operativ store before you. The evil spirits are bad enough now; what will they be when organized by Anthony? In this case Spiritualism is a blunder. When evil spirits come to this earth, the good ones ought to organize a detectiv force and fetch their rascals back. Earth is already bad enough, without a host of those evil-disposed gentlemen. If sweet Anthony Comstock should ever come to know that mesmerism is the key to Spiritualism, he will unlock the storehouse of Spiritualism and let all his evil spirits loose upon earth. O Chapman, what a blunder you hav made with your "key to Spiritualism!" My experince of Spiritualism is that it is worse than old mother church. The old mother has a Bible—Spiritualism has a table. The old mother has only one medium, a go-between for God and man—Spiritualism has thousands and tens of thousands of go-betweens, mediums between good and evil spirits and man. Nous avon changé tout cela by putting facts in the place of fancies. Here are the facts: The conditions made at seances encourage deception rather than expose it. The sitters refuse very often to allow one to sit to see the show unless he is a believer. Hands are taken prisoners and lights are put out. The spirit is very often too like the medium. Spirits often refuse proper questions, and take shelter behind the curtain.

> If they will, they will, you may depend on't;
> If they won't, they won't, and there's an end on't.

Very often the spirit lies about the individual who has the courage to face it. What lies the Spiritualist believes to the injury of the individual who showed too much courage for Mr. Spirit! No medium can persuade a spirit to come out of the seance room into the broad daylight. Spirits all are cowards; they always keep behind, both in courage and intelligence. What new truths hav been given to the world through spirits? What new inventions hav spirits brought to light? Why do they not leave off conjuring and betake themselves to something useful? Why are the advocates of Spiritualism abusiv when opposed? The plain truth is that there is nothing to support Spiritualism but belief.

Letter from a New Subscriber.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A few days ago I became a subscriber to your Truth Seeker, in which you are battling to supplant the crude notions obtaining with reference to God, especially that sectarian notion which makes him the most absolute tyrant and cruel monster. And of course you are no doubt anxious that the world shall hav a philosophy, which, while it embraces all the attributes of life, holds a rational inducement to probe the destiny of the race, and ultimately to establish among men a true conception of all their relations. At present your labors seem to be devoted to clearing away the rubbish and preparing the foundation for a religious edifice that shall embrace within its grand propositions a niche for every form of truth as it is found in nature. In doing this, you are not only removing the theological props that hold up the oldest time-worn structures, so as to let them down more rapidly, but you are also hammering away at some of the later edifices, which are yet quite strong in appearance, but which in time are sure to tumble down in a confused mass. Happily, in all this work of transformation, there is an architect behind it all, who is unconsciously—to many of his workers—rearranging the new material into form and beauty by means of a new philosophy or a more correct study of our wants and the necessities of growth.

You assert yourself to be a Materialistic Spiritualist in your answer to a correspondent. I think that a sound position, which, with your permission, I will proceed briefly to establish by the known facts in philosophy.

Philosophy teaches that all matter contains life; that nothing is absolutely dead. To prove this, there is no form of matter that cannot be changed by fusion or otherwise. If it were absolutely dead it could not be affected by any other form of matter and force. Hence all matter, when acted upon, givs out its life and is changed into new relations.

Philosophy teaches also that matter cannot be destroyed. It may change into ten millions of forms by the application of force, but not one atom is ever lost. A ton of coal may be changed into ashes and gas, and still it all exists, but in a new form and in new relations.

Philosophy also teaches that masses of matter cannot move themselvs. A mass of rock cannot move from its bed unless an external force is brought to bear upon it. This is the law of inertia, as it applies to masses of matter; that is, a mass has no power to move itself, and, if put in motion, it has no power to stop that motion. While all matter contains an inherent property of life, yet any mass has no such property as that it can move itself. Our globe and all the grand systems of nature are constantly acted upon with a force equal to their various motions, orbital and otherwise.

We can trace matter in its various stages of life from the lowest and most inert up to a condition so refined that it becomes pure force. And then we can trace matter downward from the self-moving quality to the most inert mass, which requires the greatest possible force to move it. For instance, we can take matter in its lowest grade, such as rock, or the various minerals. These are most inert, and require most force to move them; next earth, which requires less than water, which requires still less; next the atmosphere; then the gases; next the luminiferous ether; and still further on to a condition that admits of no external force, but which has a constant motion and absolute life. This seems to be the universal life, from the fact that all the lower grades of life are supplied from this inexhaustible source. All planetary life is derived from this, as well as the adhesiv qualities of every mass; and hence modern science has arrived at the conclusion that, after all, matter is but a form of force, and that matter and force are co-existent, co-eternal, inseparable, and everlasting.

Now I ask this question: If it is impossible to destroy matter, how in the name of good sense should the life of matter be destroyed? And if by the changing of matter from a lower to a higher condition you increase its life and motion, do you not comprehend that the higher the form of matter the more of life it contains? Therefore man is a higher form of matter than mud, and, by the soundest deductions of philosophy, he is absolutely indestructible and everlastingly attaining more and more of this universal life.

If this is a truth as it pertains to man from a physical point of view, it must also apply to his mental structure and consequent mental growth, for we find in nature already set before us every form of truth. The most gifted mind has discovered no problem, no truth, no intelligence, that did not exist in nature before he got to it. We speak in glowing terms of the mind who has been so organized as to grasp the higher and grander truths of life, but we often forget that he only came upon what always existed; and no matter how grand the achievements of any individual life may be, how much intelligence he may be able to appropriate to himself and the use of mankind, it will still be but the finite growing in the light of the infinit.

No mind can learn any truth but such as always existed. All man's intelligence is but a comprehension of his environments. He has no power to create truth any more than he can create a force or create matter. His intelligence is but the unfolding of his life, and he receives from without what is impressed upon him almost as simply as the morning rays unfold the flower. If men would but study the grand truths of life in its entirety they would not run into the absurdities of the antiquated dogmas of old theology, and would hav a new philosophy too comprehensiv to be crowded into the narrow sectarian edifices that now stud the land. Yet we can be hopeful. These old shells will soon crumble away and giv place to better quarters.

I am a Materialistic Spiritualist also. I hav investigated what philosophy teaches of matter in its various forms, and what may be called mind in its application to humanity. I perceive a mental force in life, a power to will and to do, and wherever I find that will, or force, or intelligence, I find also something connected with animal life. I find that force in connection with what is called spiritual rapping, and also that intelligence which I know must in some way come from mind. And as I can conceive of no force and no intelligence but such as connect in some way with intelligent life, I accept the spiritual philosophy as the only reasonable solution of the question.

When men attribute the intelligence that often comes through spiritual media to electricity and moonshine, I know they are talking nonsense. All the telegraph lines on terra firma would not emit a single line of thought if not controlled by the operator at the other end of the wire. The best telephone is dumb. Mind possesses the only life to impart intelligence over its wires. As matter is naught without its inherent life, so also is the best constructed mechanism of no account unless controlled by mind, and that mind is always connected with a body; a spiritual body it is, but none the less a body. An organization more refined than ours it must be, as the result of one step in advance of this life.

One more proposition and I am done. No phenomena can take place bearing human characteristics unless connected with a human intelligence. And when such intelligence is given as never had an existence in the mind of the medium or known to the sitters until ascertained afterward, it must of necessity come from some other mind. This kind of truth is being manifested daily. So of force. When tables are moved without physical contact, and a force manifesting human intelligence is thereby given, such as playing tunes upon instruments, vocal, intelligent conversation, etc., they cannot be applied to any other than spiritual beings, and, as you say, their theology and philosophy is so far ahead of the old and so beautiful that we cannot help wishing it true.

Yours for progress,

J. R. Perry.

St. Nicholas.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I wish to speak a good word for the best young people's monthly that has ever been published—Scribner's "St. Nicholas." It has been one of my special favorites ever since its birth. Some of the best authors of the day write for it—poems, astronomical and scientific articles, stories, fairy tales, natural history of birds, insects, and animals—travels, and all variety of useful and interesting subjects find a place in the pages of this beautiful and attractiv magazine.

When we got up our Library Association for Snowville "St. Nicholas" was my choice as one of the selections of books. Time after time it was voted down as "too expensiv," people here not being used to spending much money for children's reading. But I said I should always choose that book till I got it, or would lose my privilege of choice! I knew well enough that if I could get one volume in circulation the field would be won. At last I succeeded, and now there are no more popular books in the Library than the beautiful, useful, pleasing, and instructiv volumes of "St. Nicholas!" I wrote to the publishers asking on what terms I could get a copy for the "Young Girls' Reading Club." They said they had "notices" each month in nearly 3,000 papers—"all the important papers in the country, but that if I could get four paying subscribers they would let me hav it free." Now I think our TRUTH SEEKER is an "important paper," and I put "my notice" in it, and hope at least four out of all its readers will want "St. Nicholas" for their children. It is suitable for all children over five and under twenty, and who will send in $3.00 in Elmina's name, in a registered letter to the publishers, addressed Scribner & Co., 745 Broadway, N. Y. I know it will pay any person who loves to do a favor to children, and it will be such a pleasure to me to hav it for Our Girls' Club. I hope some day we can do even better yet, and that is hav a good Infidel children's paper or magazine, but till then I am sure you will find none half as good as "St. Nicholas." Hopefully, ELMINA D. SLENKER.

California Letter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Allow me with others who feel a warm interest in your welfare and the Liberal cause to congratulate you and the friends of Freethought on your release from the clutches of an unjust and cruel law, and may God and good angels speed you in your work of emancipating the people from the bondage of superstition, and above all to protect you against that spirit of envy and jealousy which seems to follow on your track.

I know, friend Bennett, that in this struggle right and truth are on your side, and I want you and the Liberals and Spiritualists everywhere to know that I am with you and for you. So far as my influence goes you may count it for THE TRUTH SEEKER as against all its enemies.

I am sure I can't agree with Bundy, Tuttle, Abbot, Underwood, and others actuated by the same spirit, that you ought to be crushed. In fact, I don't want any one crushed.

That is an orthodox spirit, and it seems fearful coming from professed Liberals, and I do not think any lasting good was ever gained by anybody by pulling another down. Above all I detest that meddlesome snooping into another's private affairs, and then all this talk about morality and purity on their side makes me sick. Are they all like Cæsar's wife—above suspicion? Don't you believe it. I don't believe there is a first-class angel in the whole lot of them who are throwing stones at you.

The majority of Liberals and Spiritualists in the country hav passed upon your case. They hav decided to stand by you. Not that they believe you are perfect, but your frank and manly spirit throughout the whole affair in question has made you a host of friends who are not likely to be affected by anything your enemies can do.

Now, I don't blame any man for defending himself, and I hav no doubt in my mind but that you can find dirt, with affidavits attached, to retaliate upon these men aforesaid. But don't do it. These men hav also been weighed by a Liberal public and found wanting in the essential elements of true Liberalism.

I hav heard the expression of a large number of Liberals in California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, and with one accord they say, Bennett must liv. Now, the people who say so are counted by their neighbors as good people, orderly, and respected, and don't you know it hurts to be called "tag-rag and bobtail" by one of our own pretended Liberals? The people don't forget a friend of the people, and these words attributed to this public man, like a boomerang, will come back to hurt the one that uttered them.

Somebody has taken a contract much too large for their caliber and capital invested. They remind me of a pullet trying to cover a nest full of goose eggs. I don't think there is any objection to Abbot and company joining the church if they want to, and thus ridding themselves of all odium growing out of their contact with the Freelove, "rag-tag and bobtail" crowd.

These high-toned pretenders seem to forget that our church is the great unwashed crowd, without God, Christ, baptism, or devil; and he who would be great among us let him serve the people, and not taunt them with their failings, of which we all partake in a greater or lesser degree.

I make no plea for immorality of any kind, but I hav learned to separate men and women from their possible vices, and love them for the good they possess, or, at least, not seek to do them harm because of their frailty. Let him who is without sin cast the first stone; and if there is any bitter, burning curse amongst Liberals which deserves rebuke, it is evil-speaking which, like a blighting mildew, scatters thorns of dissension among our people. I wish everybody could mind their own business. What a happy world this would be!

To be a fighter for truth is a grand thing, but don't, for God's sake, fight each other. It looks bad, and is a source of strength to our enemies, and weakness and shame to the cause we profess to love.

Now, I want to say a word to somebody, some unknown person who sent that pamphlet—I mean that game cock pamphlet—to my wife. I respect an open enemy, but any man who could send an anonymous thing like that is a sneak of the first water, with a motive as base as hell. No person with sense enough in his head to do credit to a red-headed woodpecker would suppose that he could injure D. M. Bennett in the estimation of his friends. Much less could they expect to advance the cause of morality by disseminating such trash.

What shall the harvest be? For you, nothing but leaves, nothing but contempt.

I hav read THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 12th with much satisfaction, and I believe it to be the best Freethought paper in the world, and I think Spiritualists in general are quite satisfied with your fair, open, and courteous treatment of Spiritualism.

I am pleased with the ability and spirit with which E. A. Chapman, my Michigan friend, defends the doctrin of continued life.

I am not pleased with the flippant, specious reasoning of W. F. Jamieson's treatment of a subject so weighty as modern Spiritualism and Spiritualists. He does not seem to giv them the credit of any knowledge on the subject. Is it quite fair, after helping to delude them for years, to turn about face and deny the fact which the spirit phenomena prove, if they prove anything—a continued life?

He says he was deceived and that they are deceived. Can he explain his mediumship, and prove that the manifestations were not produced by departed human spirits? If not, how does he know that he or they are deluded or hav been deceived? Such a kind of logic places any man in a strange position.

I hav known many mediums to doubt their mediumship and almost everything else; and yet in no case could they explain away the phenomena or solve the problem?

To doubt and deny may be an evidence of an unsettled and distracted state of mind, or even insanity itself, on the part of the doubter; and yet the facts of spirit phenomena are not disproved or explained away by the doubts or denial.

If Bro. Jamieson will show, in any of the well attested cases of genuin phenomena, of which we hav many thousands, that it is something else—and not spirits—he has the question. Until that time our theory and assumption are quite as tenable as his denial, doubts, and fears.

I do not cling to the theory simply because there is comfort in the doctrine of meeting the loved ones passed on out of my sight. No, I want the truth, and I believe in an iron-sided search after truth; and my convictions on this subject are formed in spite of all my doubts and fears or predilections on the subject.

From what I hav seen and experienced I am forced to admit it as truth until Bro. Jamieson or some other person shall roll away the stone from the sepulcher of my mind, and let in the light.

R. G. Ingersoll on "Hell" is grand. I hope he will liv many years yet to giv these Bible-backs more of the same hell-fired medicin we hav been obliged to take from them so long in the past.

Your department of "Letters from Friends" is a bright green spot in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as my travels during the last twelve years hav made me personally acquainted with many who write for those columns. And especially from Michigan, my old home, I find messages from many I know; and it makes me feel glad that the two years of the hardest labor in my life has borne fruit, and that the Liberals and Spiritualists of Michigan stand by you in your trials.

I hav spent one hundred days in the legislature since I wrote you, and hav learned some of the ins and outs and deviltry wrapped up in law-making. My friends are pulling at me to get me on the stump again, but my heart pulls toward the Freethought rostrum; and after the Fourth is over I hope to meet the Liberals again in Astoria, Portland, Forest Grove, Salem, Albany, Eugene, Walla Walla, and at other points in Oregon. And any friend whose eye falls upon this letter desiring to hav his community agitated will please drop a line to my address, Portland, Oregon, as soon after the Fourth of July as possible.

Yours for truth, J. L. YORK.

A Great Mistake.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: What a simple, cheap government ours was designed to be can be seen by the Constitution and the proceedings of the earliest Congresses. But who could not hav forseen its progress toward complexity and extravagance, if he had reflected a little. Here was the condition: Given a Constitution that organized a government of very limited powers, having a law-making and executiv arm, and a judiciary. In fact, there are four arms. 1. A supreme restraining power, fixed, moveless, dumb from the day it was created. It spoke once, clearly, decisivly, commandingly; and then remained still forever, leaving its speech on record. That power is the Constitution. It encroaches on no other branch, and when encroached upon cannot complain, therein differing from all other branches. It has no tribunal to speak for it, to giv it living, moving force. There is the fatal defect in our government. In cases contested the Supreme Court may speak for it, often not until long years after violating statutes hav imposed upon it through enforcement.

The legislativ, judicial, and executiv branches are ever represented. Let one encroach upon the other and at once remonstrance is heard and resistance begins. The mistake was in forgeting that, as organized, this is a government of four branches instead of three, like the British, as was supposed. The British Constitution is subordinate to Parliament and is no proper branch of government. Some of the founders expected to see in the powers reserved to the states, or in the states themselves, a kind of tribunal sufficiently activ and authoritativ to speak and act for the Constitution. Activ enough it may be, but there is no proper way for it to exercise its authority. Its operation is irregular, uncertain, inefficient. A body of fundamental laws, supreme over all, called Constitution, like ours, is as much one of the powers by which goverament is carried on as is the legislativ or judiciary or executiv. The founders might as well hav made a code of statutes and a library of decisions on every imaginable case, and done without a Congress and Supreme Court, as to hav made this supreme Constitution providing no proper tribunal to remonstrate and resist intrusions on that Constitution.

What then very soon was the result? National parties were formed; a promiscuous body of men was chosen from various spots over the vast circumference and placed in a center, there to begin the business of legislating, i. e., governing. Wonderful material prosperity visited a people having a whole continent to settle; the conditions of all business and labor began to change. Ambitious desires, imaginings never dreamed of, came with unheard-of opportunities. Here were busy millions engaged in earning a great surplus. Never had the lust of the eye and the pride of life such incentivs and temptations; never was greed so stimulated. "How to do it?" became the great desideratum. The easiest, surest way is by statute in an age of law; (as in an age of violence the same was done always by (force. So then here was an arm or tribunal of government to act upon and through—to wit, the statute-making arm. Naturally combinations were formed by which the agents of various interests, the attorneys of various corporations and classes, were chosen for Congressmen. While the agricultural people chose their representativs indifferently, other classes chose with an object. As one man with a special object will lead hundreds who hav none, so the Congressmen of the latter really transacted all the business. Then these interested classes stationed their agents at Washington to watch their interests. Congress itself became a kind of close corporation, its modes of doing business so complicated that it had to be done by deputy. New raw members were utterly powerless. Responsibility of individuals was lost in the multitude and in the modes of doing business.

Horace Seaver's Definition of "Freelove."

An inquiring friend in New Hampshire writes: "Our minister (orthodox) has been preaching against Col. Ingersoll in particular and Infidels in general, charging them with being guilty, among other enormities, of Freelove. What is that? It seems to me to be a new offense that orthodoxy has invented against us, and I would like to hav you tell me what it is. Please explain in the paper, and I will show it to our minister, who livs near me."

Great caution must always be exercised in believing what ministers say of Infidels; for ministers, many of them, "walk by faith and not by sight," or knowledge either. They are flighty people—of the air airy, for their doctrines are based on "evidence not seen."

"Freelove," as its teachers define it (if we are not mistaken), means freedom from civil law, just the same as in religion. They argue that lov, being an affection of the mind, depends on attraction and mutual esteem and respect; that this is a far stronger bond of union than law; that it constitutes genuine marriage; that where it never existed, or is lacking, there is no marriage worthy of that honorable name; and, lastly, that as a man and woman form their own marital contract when they agree to liv together as husband and wife, they should hav the right to dissolve it when they can no longer be happily united.

This, as briefly as we can state it, is Freelove, and evidently it involves a correct principle; for we will venture to say, in spite of the church, the clergy, and the state, that no man who sincerely respects his wife does so because the law says he must. But if the New Hampshire minister thinks we are in error in anything we hav said, our columns will be opened to him for any reply that he may wish to make.

The Dawning Day.

"Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven (Malachi iv, 1).

All ages hav their seers—prophets. Vennor is raising hob with the weather.

Since the days of the Infidel Jefferson, the government machine has, with one exception, been run by ecclesiasticism—using officials as stalking-horses.

1880 and 1881 are, by the seers of the ages, fraught with mighty results. 1880 is half used up. What has it accomplished?

It has demonstrated that to not believe as I believe is heresy, and heresy is obscenity, you know.

The suggestion of "Peter" is in order; no time to be lost. Let honest men and virtuous women organize; giv us another Jefferson, a man with a soul, a man who has the moral courage to do right because it is right. Amen.

Pocket Theology.

BY VOLTAIRE.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav just given this little volume of definitions to theological words belonging to the Christian mythology a second reading, and it is just splendid. It is one of the few books that will liv.

Every Liberal should own one. Twenty-five cents' worth of sharp, cutting, satirical meanings to the common literature of the church like these are really worth as many dollars to any individual who makes them his own. When a girl I used to pin up a list of words from the botanical nomenclature or old English Expositor above the sink where I washed dishes so as to hav them to run over while I was at work. And now I shall keep this pocket dictionary of Voltaire's just where I can dip into it at odd moments and absorb its contents. Probably Voltaire was the smartest man the world has ever produced, and it is to be regretted that his works are not more generally read and appreciated. I hope this one will sell like "hot cakes," and it surely will if merit has its due. Thine truly,

A DEACON of a church at West Pawlet, in a fit of anger, one Sunday morning threw a stone and killed one of his cows. He has a balky horse, and has been known to knock the dumb beast down with a club several times in succession. He is chuck full of the love of Christ. D.

Second Reply to G. M. Mair.

MR. G. M. MAIR, Dear Sir: But little need be said about your charges of misrepresentation, blasphemy, and obscenity, since you regret making them and repudiate the idea of personality in the matter. Allow me to say, however, that I cannot think you remarkably successful in your substantiation. First, as regards Col. Ingersoll's misrepresentation, it amounts to very little, in fact, to nothing at all. There is no account that God did pay any attention to educated Greece, and there is not much difference in the antiquity of the Jewish people and the Grecians. If any difference, it would seem that the Grecians have the advantage. I consider there is much stronger proof of the antiquity of the inhabitants of Greece than of the Jews. Homer's time was nearly a thousand years before our era, and the Grecians were old when he sung, while the early history of the Jews is extremely mythical. Many think that at a thousand years before Christ they were wandering tribes of Arabic robbers and shepherds.

As to the obscenity of Mr. Babcock's article on Abraham's bosom, I cannot quite agree with you. It is slightly irreverent, but certainly not obscene. Many of the Bible stories beat it, in that direction, all to pieces. Neither can I think that the notices of the fall of clergymen, which you speak of, are obscene. Most of them are accounts taken from the daily press of the city, as matters of news, and they are usually couched in appropriate language. It can certainly be no more obscene for THE TRUTH SEEKER to notice these cases than for the Sun, Herald, or Times; and as the clergy are particularly anxious to say all they can disparagingly of myself and my cause, I claim it right and proper for me to show up their hypocrisy and sinfulness. I fear you are over-sensitive upon the subject of obscenity, and like some of my Christian persecutors are inclined to call that obscene which is not obscene at all. Obscenity is not clearly defined and is relative. What may be obscene to you may not be so to thousands of others. If you hold that the items alluded to are obscene, you cannot get away from the admission that the Bible is a very obscene book.

I have no objections to your revised form of propositions or theses to be discussed by us. They are more compact and comprehensive than mine. I wrote my propositions in haste, without stopping to trim or revise. We will accept yours as the basis of our argument, as they embrace all the essential points contained in mine. It matters but little how the propositions are worded so long as we have a free discussion upon the main issue.

I am almost sorry to see indications that we are not diametrically opposed in all our views. It is a little difficult for one to get up an argument with a man who thinks as he does himself. When you say, "I have as many objections to Christendom as you have," and "I will not discuss what you call Christianity as taught elsewhere [than in the Bible], neither do I desire to palliate or deny the vileness of many who profess to be followers of Christ," you seem to acknowledge much already, and it is to be feared our discussion may be considerably circumscribed. In debating the merits of Christianity, I deem it much more fair to take it as the world knows it and has experienced it, rather than an ideal article of something Christianity should have been or might have been. It is Christianity as it has been, and is, that I object to, far more than what it ought to be. It is easier for me to detect an evil that has existed for eighteen centuries, and exists still, than to venerate an imaginary good that ought to have an existence.

I think, however, we will be able to find quite a number of points upon which we will not agree; so there may still be a pretty good chance for an animated discussion, and I trust I will be able to show you that I have more "argument," than "mere assertion and ridicule and jest." I will proceed then with the first proposition, or thesis, that Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

The foundation dogma upon which Christianity rests is that God cohabited with a mortal female, by which means she conceived and ultimately brought forth a demigod, or a being half divine and half human, who taught the truths of heaven and of his father to a band of followers, and upon those teachings established a new and true system of religion, necessary to the salvation of the world. I think you will hardly deny that Jesus was not the first demigod which the world believed in, nor that prior to him it was thought that gods had held intercourse with the daughters of earth and produced an offspring at least half god. Nor can I think you will deny that the fable of a virgin bearing a child of divine paternity is many centuries older than the story of the Virgin Mary and her son. But nevertheless, I will adduce some proofs of these facts.

Among the earlier instances of this kind is Christna, Chrishna, or Kreeshna, of India, who is said to have appeared on the earth from six hundred to two thousand years before the time of Jesus; he was believed to be begotten by the god Vishnu of a virgin by the name of Devaci, or Devanaguy as one author has it. The god entered the virgin's apartment and "overshadowed" her, and Christna was the result. He was a remarkable personage, and though the tyrant Kansa sought to destroy him by ordering all the male children born in the province of Madina on the night that Christna was born to be put to death, his purpose was thwarted, and the child escaped and grew up to maturity. He possessed remarkable powers and performed numerous miracles, among which were healing the sick, restoring the lame, blind, and deaf, and even raising the dead. A band of disciples became attached to him, the chief of whom was Arjuna. These he taught humility, purity, self-denial, and all the cognate virtues. Enemies, however, laid in wait for him and finally succeeded in destroying him. He was executed on the banks of the Ganges and his body was nailed or fastened to a tree, or crucified on a tree, as some state it. His memory was held very dear by his numerous followers and for thousands of years he has been worshiped as the son of God. Sir William Jones in his "Asiatic Researches" gives a full account of the traditions with reference to Christna, as many others do also, including Haug, Sir Cockburn Thompson, Godfrey Higgins, Max Muller, Wilson, and Jacolliot, Lydia Maria Child, and others who have written on oriental religions. Jones, Thompson, Jacolliot, have made elaborate translations from one of the ancient sacred volumes of the Hindoos called the Mahabharata, in a division of which, called the Bhagavat-gita, this story of Christna is told at length and with not a little beauty.

Among the numerous temples in India, excavated with immense labor and cost, from the solid rock, some of which Bishop Heber describes in graphic language, and which possess great antiquity, known to have been constructed long before the Christian era, many are dedicated to Vishnu, and especially to Christna, who for thousands of years has been one of the favorite gods among Hindoo worshipers.

The second person in the Hindoo trinity, Vishnu, the father of Christna, is one of the greatest gods among all the Asiatics. He is believed to have had nine different avatars, incarnations, or sons. The first was a fish; the second a turtle; the third a boar; the fourth a man-lion; the fifth a dwarf who deceived Bali and became very powerful by austerities; the sixth, a hero named Parasu-Roma; the seventh, Rama-Chandra, a powerful divinity; the eighth, Christna, the son of God just noticed; the ninth, Buddha. Thus it seems the god Vishnu alone had nine sons, or avatars, or incarnations, and all of them many hundred years before Jesus was heard of in the world.

Buddha as a demigod is widely known throughout the most populous parts of Asia. While he has by some Hindoos been accounted the ninth avatar of Vishnu, he has by others been considered the son of another divinity. In Cashmere his birth is placed back five thousand years ago. According to the Mongul records, it is four thousand years, while the Chinese claim but three thousand years. It is claimed in Ceylon that the religion of Buddha was introduced into that country six hundred and thirty years before our era. Sir William Jones placed the birth of Buddha at 1000 B. C. Buddha is held to have been the son of a virgin named Maia, who conceived by a ray from heaven, his conception and birth being free from taint of human contact or the slightest impurity. It is claimed that through infancy, childhood, and youth Buddha, or Gautama, was protected by divine influence and possessed divine powers which distinguished him from all other persons of his time. When he reached the age of manhood, he deemed it his duty to separate himself from his mother, his reputed father, and all his friends, and take himself into a wilderness, and to subject himself to the greatest deprivation and self-abnegation for a term of several years. Here he was sorely tempted by the devil and various adverse influences; but heavenly wisdom was imparted to him, and people flocked to him from all parts of the country. He ultimately gathered a band of disciples around him, who from him learned heavenly truths, and many of whom were sent out to teach his gospel. The moral teachings of Buddha have scarcely been surpassed by any who have succeeded him. He taught the strictest self-denial, humility, virtue, purity, temperance, holiness, and all the virtues that are acknowledged by men. He performed many astonishing miracles, and until he was eighty years of age passed his time in constantly doing good. His maxims, precepts, and pious instructions were written on palm leaves, which filled three baskets and were ultimately made into a volume or volumes, called Tripitaka from the three baskets, and for more than two thousand years these have been the sacred writings of the followers of Buddha—their Bible, or word of God. Many quotations from the writings of Buddha will be given if you desire.

I think you will hardly ask me to furnish the proofs that such a personage as Buddha once lived, or was believed in twenty-five hundred years ago. His statues in numerous rock temples in India, the fact that his religion spread with great rapidity more than two thousand years ago over the most populous countries of Asia; that he has had a more extensive following than any other person who ever started a religious system; that he has to-day 400,000,000 of followers who believe him to have been the son of God and to have taught the true system of salvation, incontestibly prove him to have been one of the distinguished characters of the world. If, however, you call for authorities, you can be accommodated.

It can hardly be expected that I will dwell at much length on all the demigods which the ancient nations believed in, though considerable might be said of the most of them. I will simply now give a list of those who long before the Christian era were looked to by the ancient inhabitants of oriental countries as sons of gods, demigods, saviors, redeemers, or inspired teachers. Some of them were doubtless mythical characters, some were real personages, but all were believed in in some part of the long ago. The following list is from Graves' "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," gathered from various works on the religions of the ancients, and largely from Godfrey Higgins' "Anacalypsis:"

1. Christna, or Chrishna, of Hindostan.
2. Buddha Sakia, of India.
3. Zoroaster, of Persia.
4. Crite, of Chaldea.
5. Baal and Taut, of Phœnica.
6. Thammuz, of Syria.
7. Fohi and Tien, of China.
8. Thulis, of Egypt.
9. Indra, of Thibet.
10. Devatat, of Siam.
11. Adad, of Assyria.
12. Prometheus, of Caucassus.
13. Æsculapius, of Egypt and Greece.
14. Wittoba, of Telingonese.
15. Xamolxis, of Thrace.
16. Zoor, of the Bonzes.
17. Atys, of Phrygia.
18. Bali, of Afghanistan.
19. Iao, of Nepaul.
20. Mikado, of the Sintoos.
21. Beddru, of Japan.
22. Cadmus, of Greece.
23. Hil and Feta, of the Mandaites.
24. Universal Monarch, of the Sibyls.
25. Ischy, of Formosa.
26. Pythagoras, of Samos.
27. The Holy One, of Xaca.
28. Divine Teacher, of Plato.
29. Adonis, of Greece.
30. Alcestos, of Euripides.
31. Hercules, son of God and Alcmena.
32. Apollo, son of Isis.
33. Hesus and Bremrillah, of the Druids.
34. Odin, of Scandinavia.
35. Alcides, of Thebes.
36. Thor and Balder, sons of Odin of the Norsemen.
37. Salivahand, of Bermuda.
38. Gentant and Quexalcote, of Mexico.
39. Ixion, of Rome.
40. Quirinius, of Rome.

Among the sons of gods or saviors that have been believed were crucified, the following are named in Graves' work and were principally taken from Higgins' "Anacalypsis:"

| | B C. | | B C. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Christna, of India, | 1200 | 9. Prometheus, of Caucassus, | 547 |
| 2 Sakia, of the Hindoos, | 600 | 10. Thulis, of Egypt, | 1700 |
| 3. Thammuz, of Syria, | 1160 | 11. Indra, of Tnlbet, | 725 |
| 4. Wittoba, of Telingonese. | 552 | 12. Alcestos, of Euripides, | 600 |
| 5. Iao, of Nepaul, | 622 | 13. Atys, of Phrygia, | 1170 |
| 6. Hesus, of the Celtic Druids, | 834 | 14. Crite, of Chaldea, | 1200 |
| 7. Quexalcote, of Mexico, | 587 | 15. Bali, of Orissa, | 725 |
| 8. Quirinius, of Rome, | 506 | 16. Mithra, of Persia, | 557 |

It is not to be presumed that these were all real characters, or that they were all really crucified, but that men believed they lived, and that they were crucified not far from the dates given, cannot be successfully disputed. That is about as much as can be said of Jesus. We have the story of his life and crucifixion, but there are thousands who do not believe such a person was ever crucified or that he ever existed.

It is hardly needful for me to go into a detailed account of all the mythical demigods which men have believed in, or give the names of the principal authors who have written upon the subject. I think you will not deny that nearly all the ancient nations had their gods whom they worshiped, much as the Jews worshiped theirs, that it was believed that these gods begot sons and daughters. Some nations had more gods in their pantheons than others, but one or more of the gods of each nation were believed to engage in the business of rearing children, sometimes choosing a goddess for the mother, but quite as often some favored young female of the human race. You are aware that the ancient Persians had not as many gods as the Hindoos or Egyptians, but their great god Ormuzd was believed to have had a son by the name of Mithra, who was born on the twenty-fifth day of December, and to whom the titles of "Redeemer," "Son of Righteousness," etc., were given.

The gods of Egypt were somewhat numerous, and several of them had wives and children. Among them were Neph, Ammon, Pthah, Khem, Ra, etc. The latter had a son by the name of Seb. But Osiris is more familiar to us of modern times. He was the great god of the Nile and the people of Egypt. He was the husband of Isis, who bore him the son Horus. He had a brother named Typhon, who was the very devil for all Egypt, the same as Ahriman, the brother of Ormuzd, was the Evil One in the Persian country. These were undoubtedly the prototypes for Satan, or the devil for the Jewish and Christian systems. The gods seemed unable to get along without a devil, so in nearly every system of mythology, and in nearly every pantheon, we find one or more devils. Our own system of religion would indeed fare badly were it not for the hoof-footed devil with horns and a barbed tail, so continually held up to frighten children of all ages.

When we step from Egypt over into Greece we find that the principal god of that delightful country, old Jove—the Thunderer, Zeus, or Jupiter—had a most astonishing penchant for females of both the heavenly and earthly latitudes. Besides his queenly Hera, or Juno, who, it would seem, ought to be sufficient to satisfy a reasonable god, he was so roguish and amorous as to be almost constantly looking after some other charming females of the celestial or terrestrial spheres. In this way he often made his poor Juno extremely unhappy, though he temporarily imparted happiness to others.

It may not be amiss to recall some of his amatory experiences. His first wife was Metis, but the monster becoming jealous of the child she was about to bear him, he absolutely swallowed her, child and all. This extraordinary meal, however, seems to have been the cause of his bringing forth Minerva, full formed, from his head. Next he married Themis (Justice), and by her become the father of Astræa and the Horœ. Juno was his third choice, and to her he remained more steadfast than to any of his wives or loves. Juno was the mother of Hebe, Mars, and Vulcan. By other goddesses he had children as follows: Ceres bore him Proserpine; Leto, or Latona, bore him Apollo and Diana; Dione, according to some authorities, bore him Aphrodite or Venus; Mnemosyne bore him the nine muses; Eurynome the three graces; Semele bore him the wine-loving Bacchus; Maia was the mother of Mercury, while Alcmene bore him the powerful Hercules.

Among his many love-ventures may be mentioned his intercourse with Leda, Antiope, Ægina, Clytoris, a virgin, Calisto, Asteria, another virgin, Europa, and several others. Many of these were goddesses, and hardly belonged to earth, but fully half of them were the daughters of men. He "saw that they were fair, and he took of them wives of all which he chose."

All this was taught and believed more than a thousand years before the New Testament story of the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary, holding their celebrated interview, was told. Homer sung of what the gods had done many years before he lived, and his time was nearly a thousand years before our era.

The fable or conception of the mother and child, or virgin and child, is far more than a thousand years older than the story of Mary and Jesus. It comes from so far back in antiquity that the date is difficult to fix with certainty. The idea seems to have been common in Chaldea, Assyria, India, Egypt, and other countries. The virgin was conspicuous in the mythology of Chaldea and Babylonia, and was often associated with the principal male deity in forming the trinity. This virgin was called by various names; sometimes Ishtar, Multa, Mulita, or Mylitta, Enuta, Bilta, Ri, Alittla, Elissa, Beltis, Ashtoreth, Astarte, Saruha, Nana, Asurah, etc. Among the titles given to the celestial virgins of those days were, "Mother of the Incarnated God," "Mother of Perpetual Fecundity," "Eternal Virginity," "Virgin most Chaste," "Mirror of Supreme Conscience," "Mother of Gods," "Mother-Soul of the Universe," "Mother of all Virtues," "The Queen of Heaven," etc., etc.

Among the traditions of virgin and child in the various oriental nations may be mentioned:

1. Devanaguy, virgin mother of Christna.
2. Ceres, virgin mother of Osiris, of whom it was claimed that he was begotten by the father of all the gods.
3. Isis, the virgin mother of Horus, the Redeemer.
4. Maia, virgin mother of the Redeemer, Sakia Muni.
5. Alcmene, virgin mother of the Redeemer, Alcides.
6. Ishtar, the god-impregnated virgin mother of Babylon.
7. Celestine, virgin mother of Zulis.
8. Mayence, virgin mother of Hesus.
9. Semele, virgin mother of Bacchus.
10. Shing-Mong, virgin mother of the savior, Yu.
11. Myrrha, virgin mother of Adonis.
12. Coronis, virgin mother of Æsculapius.
13. Ri, the virgin mother of the Assyrian demigod.
14. Io, virgin mother of a demigod.
15. Latona, virgin mother of Apollo.
16. Maia, virgin mother of Mercury.
17. Prudence, the mother of Hercules.
18. Somnus, the mother of Momus.
19. Alimede, mother of Jason.
20. Hecate, mother of Janus, besides many, many more.

Dr. Thomas Inman in his "Ancient Faiths" informs us about the figure of virgin and child being found sculptured in stone, in the ruins of Babylon and Nineveh; about similar sculptures being found in India, also the same in Egypt. It is well-known to Egyptologists that the image of Isis and child was often to be found on the temples and monuments of ancient Egypt; that the same was often placed upon the canvas by ancient artists, and that after the dawn of Christianity these Egyptian paintings of Isis and Horus were taken to Rome and sold for the most artistic representation of the Virgin Mary and Jesus.

I have, however, made this article long enough for this occasion. In my next I will endeavor to show you that the dogmas of Christianity had their origin in the more ancient pagan systems.

I am sincerely yours, D. M. Bennett.

What is Material?

Oak Ridge, Mo., June 18, 1880

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Your remarks upon "Inquirer's problem" in your issue of the 12th inst., is very interesting. However, it doesn't all accord with our "limited thinker." I agree with you touching the grades of mind; but take issue when it comes to mind or thought being "material." You say, "That mind is material because it requires matter to produce it." Such is sheer speculation; cannot be demonstrated. You had just as well say that music is material, and that every sound of the organ or violin is material.

The musical instrument is material; the sound cannot be. The sound acted upon by the intelligence produces music, not matter, "concrete." We agree with you that the brain is material and the seat of intelligence, of thought; that its food is bacon and beans. Thought is not language any more than sound is music; either must be learned.

We agree with you that matter changes its form. When unorganized, it cannot produce a thought. Without thought there is no intelligence, no design. Certainly there is design in the universe. However, I do not believe the forces in nature that you claim to be the Most High, All in All, was the work of anthropomorphism or a God. I don't believe that cosmos was ever created by such God, yet I do believe there is intelligence in its organization and workings. We speak of the spirit of man; sometimes we say soul, yet no one has denied either. The wild Indian is as near the mark as the most learned. He speaks of and looks to a Great Spirit, "himself the lesser."

Again you say of matter, "The universe is the supreme power, possessing omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience so far as the latter quality has an existence. I cannot conceive of such facts, or how such can be claimed for matter. (Webster defines "omniscience" as having universal knowledge, knowledge of all things) At the same time you say there cannot be intelligence without an organized brain. Does "cosmos possess a brain?" So far as I know it may be all brain. Man, sir, is a speculative genius; he forgets, however, that he is finite, and often proposes to wrestle with infinit. At least he attempts to pluck jewels from the infinit crown. With all his assumed wisdom he cannot solve the smallest minutia in nature. He cannot tell how the grass grows, or what or how it is that directs each germ to its kind.

Withal, it is well that we controvert. It enables us many times to conclude, arrive at grand ideas. A child may teach a philosopher, and state problems that he cannot solve. Very respectfully, M. J. Hines.

Reply.—Mr. Hines says the statement that mind is material because it takes matter to produce it, "is sheer speculation." Then everything may as well be called "sheer speculation." If anything is demonstrated in the world, it is that the brain and nervous system in connection with material organizations produce thoughts or mind, and there is not the slightest proof that thoughts or mind hav ever been produced by any other means. As brain, the nervous system, and all existing organisms which alone can produce thoughts, are composed of matter, it does not seem to be "sheer speculation" to say that both the producer and the result produced are material. All that matter is or does is material; thus eyesight, hearing, smelling, tasting, feeling, and thinking are material. Until it can be shown that these processes or functions can be performed or produced without organs, and that organs are not material, it is hardly worth while to denounce the opposit as sheer speculation.

Of course music is material. It certainly is not spiritual. Every sound of the organ or violin is material. Is not the organ material? Is not the violin material? Did Mr. Hines ever see one not formed of matter? If he has, could he succeed in producing audible sounds from them? If for one moment we grant him that an immaterial organ or violin may exist, would it be possible for them to so act on the atmosphere as to cause it to vibrate and convey the sound thus produced to the tympanum of the ear, a really material organization? To say that such a thing is possible is not only sheer speculation, but sheer absurdity. A note of music was never caused by nothing; the slightest sound ever made was material. Nothing cannot produce sound. Nothing cannot do anything. All that is not nothing is material.

We did not say that "thought is language," but there never was language without thought, never thought without a material organization and material food to produce thought, so language is also material. Mr. Hines seems to think matter is crude or "concrete." Not necessarily so. The atmosphere, oxygen, the luminiferous ether, light, heat, electricity, are really as material as a block of granite, a bank of clay, or the earth itself. More than half the matter in existence is in an aeriform, ethereal, invisible condition. Matter is capable of entering into endless and interminable forms and conditions. The assertion that matter can only be something crude, heavy, concrete, is "sheer speculation."

Mr. Hines evidently thinks matter cannot produce thought. If he will tell us what else does or can produce thought, we will be obliged to him. We are thinking animals, so are elephants, horses, dogs, bees, and ants. All animal organizations think more or less perfectly. Mr. Hines will hardly say there is anything about an elephant that is not material. It is the same with all animated organized life. All organisms hav sensation; where sensation is there is thought, crude or elaborate. To repeat, organisms are material, sensation is material, thought is material. To say they are not is sheer speculation. Will Mr. Hines, please say what they are if not material?

Mr. Hines admits that the Cosmos was never created by anthropomorphic God. Has he the slightest proof that it was ever created by any other sort of god? Will he please giv a description of his kind of god that did create the Cosmos from nothing? If one grain of something can be created from nothing by a million gods, whether anthropomorphic or otherwise, will he please describe the process? We hold every grain of matter composing our globe and all the suns and globes that roll in boundless space to be just as eternal, just as self-existent, just as uncreatable, just as indestructible as the entire cosmos is itself, including all the gods that Mr. Hines and our Christian friends are capable of conceiving. The idea that it is possible to produce or create something from nothing or that it ever was so created is worse than "sheer speculation," it is a monstrous absurdity.

We know nothing about design in the universe save where it is produced by organism, and there is an infinitude of organisms. Design is a product, not an original factor. Design did not create the Cosmos from nothing, did not bring the universe from nihility. Design has created nothing. Design did not make two halves equal a whole. This fact always existed. All facts, all truths always existed. The universe always existed. Not one fact, not one truth, not one world, not one universe, was ever brought into existence by design or anything else. They are eternal.

There is adaptation, in the universe of course, but it was not invented nor designed. It is its very nature to be just as it is, the same as it is to exist. It was not designed to be as it is, any more than it was designed to come from nothing. It is just as it is, because under existing circumstances or laws it cannot be otherwise. Twice two make four because they cannot make anything else. The principle of the survival of the fittest explains why adaptation is seen. That which is not adapted cannot exist. Adaptation is not design.

We still insist that the universe contains all existences all matter, all force, and that it possesses omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience, so far as the latter has an existence. If Mr. Hines can produce any of these, disconnected from the universe or outside of it, let him proceed at once to do so.

He asks, "Does Cosmos possess a brain?" Yes, millions of them, as it does millions of bodies or organisms. It contains all there is to be contained or can hav existence. If he can show anything that Cosmos does not possess, let him not be bashful about doing so. What he says about plucking jewels from the infinit crown is very poetical, and that only. The universe is the only infinit and man is part of it. He can solve many things once regarded as mysteries and is daily learning to solve more. He can tell how the grass grows, and thousands of the other phenomena of the universe. He is fast learning that there is no matter, existence, power, force, mentality or anything else outside of the universe, for it contains all, and is all.

A Correction.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In the conversation between Mr. Savage and Mr Verity, as reported in a recent number of The Truth Seeker, the former says, "Underwood knows these men [Mendum and Seaver] are "crooked.'" In this statement Mr. Savage went too far. He has a right to speak for himself—not for me. If Messrs. Mendum and Seaver are "crooked," I do not know it. The reference to them is probably in connection with Paine Hall. I hav always thought "these men," as well as Mr. Savage, did what they thought right and proper under the circumstances in the erection of Paine Hall, notwithstanding mistakes, misunderstandings, and the bitter controversy that resulted.

Every Liberal who reads this item is requested to write a notice of the Hornellsville Convention and get it published in his or her local paper. Place, Hornellsville, N. Y.; date, September 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th. Everybody invited.

There appears to be a variety of opinions among the friends of the Liberal League movement as to what candidate for President the League should support. Some favor Gen. Hancock, some Gen. Garfield, some Gen. Weaver, and some favor the nomination of an independent ticket. I hope the whole subject may be canvassed in a friendly spirit through the Liberal papers and at the Liberal League Congress when it meets, and that all will comply with the decision of the majority when made at the Congress and vote together for the man the Congress may nominate. That is the only way to make our influence felt. H. L. G.

Mr. Putnam's Lectures.

Samuel P. Putnam will be present and speak at the Freethought convention to be held at Hornellsville in September, and will lecture in the vicinity before and after the meeting. Those desiring to secure his services will please address care of THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Mr. Putnam has been for several years a Unitarian minister, but now proposes to devote himself entirely to Liberalism outside of all churches and creeds..

The following are some of the press notices of his lectures :

"A brilliant and forcible speaker."—Boston Post.

"One of the most fascinating lecturers in the field."—Lincoln Star.

"Rising to eloquence that carries his audience with him."—Fremont Herald.

Mr. Putnam has been everywhere applauded for his fine conceptions and the eloquent manner of their presentation."—Western Nebraskian.

"Shows much study and holds the deepest attention of his audience."—Davenport Gazette.

"His lecture was one of the finest entertainments of the season."—Omaha Republican.

These are a few of the notices which Mr. Putnam has received both East and West. He is cordially recommended to the Liberal public as one of the foremost speakers and thinkers of the day.

The Manhattan Liberal Club.

The lecture on Friday evening, June 18th, was by Mr. A. L. Rawson, on "Egyptian Antiquities," and besides a notice of the Alexandrian obelisk that is now on the way here, and to be erected in Central Park, the chief points offered were on the contrast of the Homeric Achilles with the more ancient hero Ramses II., as sung by the Egyptian poet Pentaur, and a critical notice of the late Brugsch Bey's new theory of the route of the exodus. The lecturer said that in a few days J. W. Bouton would publish a book on the obelisk by Dr. John A. Weisse, illustrated by the lecturer, in which the story would be told better than could be done in the few minutes he could spare for it. The obelisk, when here, will be a witness of human energy dating from forty-three centuries ago. The Vatican obelisk in front of St. Peter's, Rome, is the largest out of Egypt, but it is not so interesting as ours, which has three rows of sacred characters, the records of different Pharaohs, on each of its sides. Its top was once covered with gilded copper or bronze for many feet, but that has entirely rusted away, leaving only a few stains on the polished red granite.

Brugsch Bey says: "The temple-scribe, Penta-ur, a jovial companion, who, to the special disgust of his old teacher, had a decided inclination for wine, women, and song, had the honor, in the seventh year of Ramses II., to win the prize as the composer of a heroic song, a copy of which we hav on a roll of papyrus, and its words also cover the whole surface of a part of the walls in the temples of Abydus, Luxor, Karnak, and the Ramesseum at Ibsambul." He says also, "Throughout the poem the peculiar cast of thought of the Egyptian poet fourteen centuries before Christ, continually shines out in all its fulness, and confirms our opinion that the Mosaic language exhibits to us an exact counterpart of the Egyptian mode of speech. The song of triumph attributed to Moses in the book of Exodus came a generation later."

He read extracts from the poem of Pentaur (which now stands for Penta the Great, a title given the poet for his able literary services to his Pharaoh), some of which were as given here, reading very much like Hebrew heroic poetry:

"Beginning of the victory of Pharaoh Ramses Miamuu—may he liv forever—which he won over the people of Khita (Hittites)," and a long list of other peoples.

"The youthful Pharaoh with the bold hand hath not his equal. His arms are powerful, his heart firm, his courage is like that of the god of war, Monthu, in the midst of the fight."

Among the places named as having sent contingents of troops to aid the Hittites, Aradus, Carchemist, Naharaim, Aleppo, and others are well known in Greek and Hebrew writings of a later date.

"Their number was endless; nothing like it had ever been seen before. They covered mountains and valleys like grasshoppers for their numbers."

"Then Pharaoh arose like his father Monthu; he grasped his weapons and put on his armor, just like Baal in his time . . . he rushed into the midst of the hostile Hittites, all alone, no other was with him, . . . and found himself surrounded by 2,500 pairs of horses, and his retreat was cut off by the bravest heroes of the king of the miserable Hittites," and he was alone.

Then Ramses makes a long prayer to Amon, his father, and rehearses the services he has done the god in building temples "to last many thousands of years," decorated and furnished them, built propylæa, exacted tribute from the whole country, raised obelisks, sent fleets to foreign shores to bring their productions, etc., which petition found "an echo in Heomonthis, and Amon heard it," and came and helped him to gain the victory, saying, after other things, "I am the Lord of victory, the friend of valor. I hav found in thee a right spirit, and my heart rejoices thereat." Then Ramses did wonders, hurling his dart with his right hand and fighting with his left hand, while the enemy "tumbled down on their faces one after another." He found time to scold his own warriors and charioteers for their lack of courage in not following his lead. Only his charioteer was with him, and he begged to be rescued. Ramses hurried onward for the sixth time, and having gained the victory, lectures his army again: "A bad service altogether has been given me. None of you stood by me to stretch out his hand to me when I fought;" and he said, "by the name of my father Amon," he would see to it that they be rewarded as they deserved. However, the army joined in a chorus of praise of the heroic deeds of Ramses, ending, "Thou has broken the neck of the Hittites for everlasting time."

Lenormant, in his "Primitiv Civilizations" (i, 289), says this account is "singularly in sympathy and accordance with the spirit of the Homeric picture (of Achilles), and with its preterhuman element."

It is also like some Hebrew ideals. Ramses in a long life had 166 children, 59 of whom were sons. Homer's Priam had 50 sons and 12 married daughters; Jair, the Hebrew judge, had 30 sons, all suggested in Ramses II.

Greece was the subject of Egypt about 1300 B. C., and must hav been acquainted with the records on the monuments, which were older than the date of the Trojan war.

Prof. Lanth, of Munich, and Premier Gladstone, of England, hav ably treated this question of Homer and Egypt, tracing philologically many points of connection between the Iliad and Odyssey and Egypt.

The lecturer then took up the story of the exodus as presented by Brugsch Bey, who found on the monuments a record of a scribe or officer who followed some runaway servants, and who mentions a series of towns in the same order as they occur in the Bible account of the exodus, and from this it is concluded that the Bible story is confirmed. The lecturer said he would as soon admit that, the names of towns mentioned in Munchausen being correctly given, his stories must also be confirmed, and said it only showed that the Hebrew writer was acquainted with the geography of the region in which the mythical story was located.

The Bedouins of Edom and Arabia are distinctly mentioned on the Egyptian monuments, and with the same character as at the present.

Thotmes III. carried on fourteen campaigns during twenty years against foreign nations, the reports being recorded on the inner walls of the galleries and vestibules which on the northwest and south surrounded the holy of holies of the Temple of Amon at Karnak. The lists of towns cover the whole of Canaan, length and breadth, from the sea to Jordan. The list of persons and things taken in battle includes prisoners, men's hands, men-servants, maid-servants, children of kings, kings and their women, negroes, boys and girls, mares, foals, bulls, oxen, cows, goats, kids, chariots, kings' chests, armor, etc.; 1,784 pounds of gold rings, 966 pounds of silver rings, and other things, including luxuries of every kind, amounting to nearly a million objects, among which there is not one which is peculiar to the Hebrews.

He concluded that the author of the Hebrew books knew these records and made use of them, and also adopted the local names of Canaan. There is not on any of the monuments of Egypt—of stone, wood, papyrus, or pottery any Hebrew name. There are many indications that the Hebrew writers adopted ideas from the Egyptians. For instance, the calendar of the festivals of Egypt goes through the year as completely as did that of the Hebrews. The calendar of Thebes, 1300 B. C., was largely a nature, or season, system of festivals.

The Professor said that in his opinion Judaism had its rise as a system in Egypt, its center being at On, Heliopolis, where the first Jewish temple was built; and the Old Testament, or part of it, was first written in Greek, the Hebrew version having been made at a later date, probably not long before Herod built the temple at Jerusalem and in the interest of the Maccabees. The different locations given to the mythical patriarch Abraham, first in the north of Shechem and next in the south at Hebron, indicate different writers serving different kings, and driving Abraham from Chaldea to please one, while to gratify another, probably Herod the Idumean, the Egyptian story was invented. There is a captivity story in each case also, and both are equally mythical. The Babylonian, if true, must hav been extant as a historical fact at the time Herodotus was in Babylon, but he did not hear of it. The exodus from Egypt must hav been known in Egypt long before Herodotus, Diodorus, or Strabo wrote, or the scribes engraved on the monuments or wrote on papyrus the events of Egypt's history down to the Ptolemys' time; and there is not a word recorded of any such event or of any Hebrews in Egypt nor in Canaan at all before the age of the Maccabees, and that their real origin was from the Bedouins of the region east of the Jordan, and their language was evidently a poor dialect of Arabic which was enriched from the vocabularies of the neighboring nations.

The debate which followed touched on several interesting points. Mr. Shook sustained the exodus story on the geographical basis. Mr. Andrews spoke of the childhood of Greek literature, the stratification of literature in various nations and ages, and named India's as the oldest known literature. A lady objected that the lecturer called Miriam a murderess, and cited Deborah as a better instance, although deserving of honor for bravery, patriotism, and poetic talent. She said Jehovah was the God of the laborer, having begun by working six days.

Mr. Bliss said we ought not to believe that any poem or record had a genuine date of 3,000 or 2,000 years B C., and that there were no ascertainable dates prior to 1,000 B.C. He holds to the geographical origin of the twelve sons of Jacob, and agreed with the lecturer that the Canaanite names Judea and Ephron were the nuclei for the northern kingdom of Israel and the southern of Judea, and that the rest of the twelve sons of Jacob were invented to account for the growth of the nation, at some time during the century just before our era. He believes in the captivity of Babylon but not in the exodus story.

The lecturer in closing referred to the masonic symbols on the foundation stones of the obelisk, and to the picture of an imitation in Belzoni's Atlas (plate 19), drawn from the walls of the Mystery Chamber, which is in the valley of the Kings, and has thirteen rooms which were used in the initiation of a candidate for the ancient mysteries, or as some claim, the Freemasonry of those days. He said that the records on the monuments could never grow old, but were forever new, like the fabled Mohammedan in his paradise. They were read in Homer's age, we read them, and others will see them after us for countless ages, and the story they tell is always the same. They are not so easily changed as a printed book—although some names hav been erased and others engraved in their places, yet the hard granite is less pliable than paper for interpolations. Their record against the proud inventions of the Hebrews as to their extreme antiquity as a people is conclusiv and cannot be answered. The story of the exodus with its miracles being thus disproved, all other similar props to the church disappear, while religion remains as the outgrowth of human aspiration, and establishes morality on the natural basis of society regulated by science instead of being dominated by theology.

He Begins to be Seen as He Is.

The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will undoubtedly bear us out that we hav on at least half a dozen different occasions mentioned the name of Anthony Comstock in our columns. One great motiv that impelled us to do this was that the man might be understood as he is. He pretends to work in the interest of morality, religion, and purity, but for a long time we hav been fully convinced that he is thoroughly a hypocrit, essentially false and corrupt; that at least he cares no more for purity, morality, or religion than a hyena cares for one of Mendelssohn's oratorios. But he had shrewdness enough to see that to make him strong in the work of persecution and prosecution which he wished to engage in, he needed the strength of the church to back him and rich churchmen to pay his salary of $4,000 per year, and that it would be a stroke of policy in him to be an ardent member of the church and also to belong to the Young Men's Christian Association, or the society of Protestant Jesuits. Hence he passes himself off as a religious man, and hence his friends of the pious circles look upon him as a most excellent man, and hence also the city and country papers hav been very chary of saying anything uncomplimentary of him, even when they knew he was deserving of the severest censure. But within the past few days his falsehoods hav become so potent and black, and his slanders reflect so injuriously upon many most worthy people in this community, that his villainy can be no longer hid, and honest and independent sheets can no longer keep silent with regard to him. He is being seen in his nativ moral deformity, and our leading journals are speaking their sentiments with regard to him.

The following is from the Daily Herald:

MR. COMSTOCK CONTRADICTED.—HIS ALLEGED DISCOVERY OF OBSCENE LITERATURE AMONG SCHOOL CHILDREN CHARACTERIZED AS "THE CREATION OF HIS OWN DISORDERED FANCY."

In an interview published yesterday Mr. Anthony Comstock, agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, is thus quoted:

"Why, sir, in one school up town I found in the possession of fifteen boys pictures and books that I would blush to show you. In another school I found a number of girls, from ten to fifteen years old, whose minds had been debauched by these obscene books and pictures. And when I find such things I go to their fathers and tell them about it, but even they refuse to believe it until I show them the very books and pictures I hav taken out of their children's hands. And when I make charges against these men I cannot take the young boys and girls out of the schools and put them on the witness stand. No; I take their place and appear as the complainant."

These statements are of such an extraordinary nature that a reporter was instructed to show them to Mr. Jasper, city Superintendent of Schools, and obtain his answer to them. Mr. Jasper said: "Let me see, Mr. Comstock says he found these in the schools. Now, no person has any authority to visit a school and search the children, and he could not hav found these books unless he had made such search, and I don't think that any principal would permit such search. I know of no authority for any one to grant such permission. He says he showed the books to the fathers of the boys. If his statements are true why did not Mr. Comstock make a verbal or written complaint to me, giving the number of the school? Why did he not complain to the principals of the schools if he found such a state of things existing? I don't believe a word of it."

"Would there be any impropriety in your officially calling upon Mr. Comstock to supply you with the number of the schools?" asked the reporter.

"I do not see that there would be, and I guess that is what I shall do. He ought to show authority for his statements. If he made a search of any school it is without authority, and if he has not made such a search he states what is untrue, and I do not think any such state of affairs exists in any school If any principal allowed Mr. Comstock to make a search it was an insult to the children and their parents as well."

Commissioner Manierre was very indignant at the statements of Mr. Comstock. "You may state," said he, "that there is no truth in them, for neither Mr. Comstock nor any other person is permitted to go into a classroom unless in the company of a principal, a teacher, or a school officer, and when the children are in the playground at recess they are always accompanied by a sufficient number of teachers to preserve order and see that nothing improper is done. You can say further for me that the principals and teachers are always on the watch to see that nothing improper is introduced into the schools; that no books, pictures, or papers of an obscene character could by any possibility be in the hands of the children without it being discovered, and that the statements made by Mr. Comstock are simply the creation of his own disordered fancy. I will say more, there is no authority or right for any search of the children in our schools. If any principal or teacher permitted it I would at once vote for his or her dismissal. That is sufficiently explicit, is it not?"

The evening Telegram in referring to the same matter had the following editorial:

MR. COMSTOCK AND THE SCHOOL CHILDREN.

When we find Mr. Jasper, Superintendent of the Public Schools, declaring that the charges brought by Mr. Comstock against a number of schoolgirls and schoolboys are false in every particular, and produced simply by his disordered imagination, it is quite time for sensible and decent people to giv the matter attention. Mr. Comstock's charges are that he has recently found in the hands of school children from ten to fifteen years old books and pictures of the most hideous immoral description. According to Mr. Comstock's statements, as published in one of the morning papers, he has taken such books and pictures out of the children's hands, and shown them to those children's fathers, in order to induce belief in his declarations. On the other hand, if Mr. Comstock has become possessed of such publication he must hav taken them from the children either while they were in or out of school. If they were in school the teachers and superintendents are responsible for permitting Mr. Comstock to transcend his authority; if the children were out of school a personal and unjustifiable assault must hav been made by Mr. Comstock and his agents in order to take possession of the publications above mentioned. Commissioner Manierre joins with Superintendent Jasper in laughing at Comstock's statements. In the pursuit of his trade Mr. Comstock has made so many mistakes that he had better be more than ordinarily careful here.

Upon the heels of this the daily Truth follows up with these remarks:

TONY'S LAST WHOPPER.—THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE SCHOOL BOARD CHALLENGES HIS STATEMENTS AND PROPOSES TO MAKE HIM EAT THEM.

A few days ago Anthony Comstock stated, in conversation with a Truth reporter, that he had found in the hands of many school children books of the most obscene nature. He even went as far as to say that he had taken some of these books away, and had shown them to the children's parents. These statements, appearing in Truth, aroused a veritable sensation, and since the commencement of the week the matter has been vehemently discussed by the daily papers.

In case of Comstock's charges being true, they would naturally reflect more on the management of the schools by the Board of Education than on the children themselvs. A Truth reporter then called on Mr. John Jasper, Jr., the city Superintendent of the Board.

Mr. Jasper was found in his office reading a copy of Truth, containing charges against the special agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, made by the Rev. Stewart Walsh.

"I should very much like to hear your opinion concerning Mr. Comstock's allegations about obscenity among the school children," the reporter remarked after introducing himself.

"I shall be most happy to giv you any information in my power," replied the superintendent, politely tendering the visitor a seat, "and the more so because I admire the bold and independent manner in which Truth has exposed and denounced the very questionable methods Mr. Comstock indulges in. To giv you my opinion of his manner of proceeding in this particular case, I think it looks rather queer that when aware of the fact of school children possessing obscene books he should hav informed Truth's reporter about it first. The right way to proceed, it seems, would hav been to write me a letter of warning—a letter entering into details and pointing out the particular school in which the children were obscene. By first stating the fact—if fact it may well be called—to your reporter, he allows the inference that he intended calumniating the Board and the teachers."

"Do you think that a possibility exists of his statements being correct?"

"No, sir, I do not. How in all the world are the children to find time for reading obscene literature while in school? The classes commence at nine in the morning and finish at three in the afternoon. At 12 o'clock the scholars hav one hour's recess for their dinner, during which time by far the greater portion return home. In their absence they are naturally out of our control, but should they return to the school premises before the recess is over at 1, they remain constantly under the eye of the teachers, and hav positivly no chance of reading anything obscene. During class time, on the other hand, they hav even less opportunities for this sort of thing. About thirty pupils are taught together in a room measuring twenty feet by fifteen, the teacher being placed in a prominent position from whence he can control all their movements. Under these circumstances it would be impossible for them to use any but their school books."

"Has Anthony Comstock been allowed to enter schoolrooms and search the pupils?"

"No, sir; that is a privilege nobody has, not even I myself. Anthony Comstock may hav hinted that he made such a search, but I declare it to be not the case. Why, sir, it would be a direct insult to the parents of the children were they thus searched in public, and I do not believe any teacher would be guilty of allowing an outsider like Anthony Comstock to encroach upon the rights and lower the dignity of the scholars. If a teacher acted in this manner, and it came to my ears, he would be severely reprimanded, if not discharged.

"What would you do in case you suspected a scholar of carrying obscene literature about his person?"

"I should call him to my private room, and with closed doors would question him on the subject, but never would I institute a general search and insult the feelings of my wards."

"Do you think that when Anthony Comstock declared having taken away books from school children that he did so in the open street?"

"I do not know, but if he acted thus he made himself liable to be arrested for unwarranted and unjustifiable assault, a fact he must know better than anybody else, considering he is always dabbling in the law courts.

"However, I do not mean to say that no school child ever read or perused obscene books, but I assert that there are no means for such books being read at school under the present system, and if Mr. Comstock has really come across one or two school children with such books about their persons, he is anything but justified in casting reflections on the scholars in general.

"You must remember that, excluding the evening schools, there are 274 educational establishments under the supervision of the Board, and it is a very serious thing to throw mud on such a large body as this without more base to work on than has Mr. Comstock."

"Do you intend taking any steps in the way of refuting Comstock's arguments?"

"Well, sir, that gentleman has attacked us at a very busy time. To-morrow, as you know, the vacation begins, and should I call upon him to prove his statements and point out the schools where those abuses exist, there would be no means of investigating the matter. After the vacation in September, however, I shall certainly challenge Mr. Comstock to express himself thoroughly."

The Superintendent concluded by stating that many reporters had visited him to see whether Truth's first statements were founded on fact. "They seem rather vexed at having been beaten on this point by your little one-cent sheet," he smilingly remarked.

The reporter thanked the Superintendent for his affability and took his leave.

From the foregoing articles it may be easily seen what a false, lying individual Comstock is, and how culpable he is in slandering worthy superintendents of schools, worthy teachers, to say nothing of young scholars and their parents at home. But this is just what this man has been doing for years. All his statements about finding obscene literature in the hands of school boys and girls, about tons of it passing through the mails to that young portion of the community, are simply base lies; not a word of it is true. There also are of the same character other monstrous falsities from the same man, which he retails to the meetings he addresses and publishes in his annual reports of the doings of himself and his society. He states that he has driven from the market one hundred and sixty-five obscene books, destroyed the plates of one hundred and sixty-three; that he seized and confiscated twenty-four tons of obscene printed matter: arrested four hundred and twenty-five persons for dealing in obscene literature; seized and destroyed seventeen hundred photographic negatives of obscene pictures, five hundred and thirty woodcuts, and three hundred and fifty steel and copper-plate engravings. All these statements are just as false as that he has found obscene books and literature in our schools in the city. The man has shown himself capable of uttering the most barefaced falsehoods for the purpose of making his pious supporters and defenders think he is earning the money he receives, and to cause them to think him a very efficient worker in the field of morality.

He arrested a Dr. Soule in Rochester, N. Y., and seized some six dray-loads of what he claimed to be obscene literature, and which were Hop Bitters advertisements. This arrest Comstock published extensivly, and counted the six dray-loads of Hop Bitters advertisements in his oft-repeated reports of the tons of obscene literature seized, but he has never brought the Doctor to trial. One of two things must be true—he has arrested Dr. Soule on insufficient grounds, or he has been derelict in not prosecuting the case. Another thing is most clear—the man is an unmitigated liar and his statements wholly unworthy of credit.

Patriotic Words.

The following is the famous "Order 40" of General Hancock on taking command of the Louisiana and Texas Department in 1866. In it he raises the shield of the Constitution against arbitrary authority and maintains the rights of the people as against a despotic government. Our readers will not fail to note the similarity between this order and the masterly argument of T. B. Wakeman on our constitutional rights:

The General commanding is gratified to learn that peace and quiet reign in this department. It will be his purpose to preserve this condition of things. As a means to this great end, he regards the maintenance of the civil authorities in the faithful execution of the laws as the most efficient under existing circumstances.

In war it is indispensable to repel force by force, and overthrow and destroy opposition to lawful authority. But when insurrectionary force has been overthrown and peace established, and the civil authorities are ready and willing to perform their duties, the military power should cease to lead, and the civil administration resume its natural and rightful dominion. Solemnly impressed with these views, the General announces that the great principles of American liberty are still the lawful inheritance of this people, and ever should be. The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, the natural rights of persons, and the rights of property must be preserved.

Free institutions, while they are essential to the prosperity and happiness of the people, always furnish the strongest inducements to peace and order. . . While the General thus indicates his purpose to respect the liberties of the people, he wishes all to understand that armed incursions or forcible resistance to the law will be instantly suppressed by arms.

We also append an extract from Gen. Hancock's reply to Gov. Pease, which shows where he stands on the vital question of free speech for a free people. How different are these ringing words from the cowardly conduct of our present President:

Woe be to us whenever it shall come to pass that the power of the magistrate—civil or military—is permitted to deal with the mere opinions or feelings of the people.

I hav been accustomed to believe that sentiments of respect or disrespect, and feelings of affection, love, or hatred, so long as not developed into acts in violation of law, were matters wholly beyond the punitory power of human tribunals.

I will maintain that the entire freedom of thought and speech, however acrimoniously indulged, is consistent with the noblest aspirations of man, and the happiest conditions of his race. . .

If you deem them constitutional laws, and beneficial to the country, you not only hav the right to publish your opinions, but it might be your bounden duty as a citizen to do so. Not less is it the privilege and duty of any and every citizen, wherever residing, to publish his opinions freely and fearlessly on this and every question which he thinks concerns his interest. This is merely in accordance with the principles of our free government; and neither you nor I would wish to liv under any other. It is time now, at the end of almost two years from the close of the war, we should begin to recollect what manner of people we are; to tolerate again free, popular discussion, and extend some forbearance and consideration to opposing views. The maxims that in intellectual contests truth is mighty and must prevail, and that error is harmless when reason is left free to combat it, are not only sound but salutary. It is a poor compliment to the merits of such a case that its advocates would silence opposition by force; and generally those only who are in the wrong will resort to this ungenerous means. I am confident you will not commit your serious judgment to the proposition that any amount of discussion, or any sort of opinions, however unwise in your judgment, or any assertion of feeling, however resentful or bitter, not resulting in a breach of law, can furnish justification for your denial that profound peace exists in Texas.

Mr. Jacobson and the Knights of Pythias.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A remarkable case was tried in Detroit a short time ago, which attracted some attention from the local papers, but has never yet been published outside of the city where the event took place. It seems that Herman Jacobson, a citizen of Detroit, was solicited to become a member of Damon Lodge No. 3, Knights of Pythias. He informed the members who approached him that he was an Infidel, but they replied that that wouldn't make any difference; his religious views were known and would not be interfered with. After receiving several promises of this kind Mr. Jacobson finally consented to join the lodge; but when the hour of initiation came, he was disgusted to find that he was required to take the oath, or obligation, upon the Bible. He reminded the members who solicited him of their agreement, and finding that he was steadfast in his refusal, they at length "waved the point," and allowed him to become a member in the first degree without taking the usual oath.

Having thus secured admission to the lodge, Mr. Jacobson paid in the money for his second degree. The lodge received the money, and then refused to giv him the degree unless he would take the oath.

Mr. Jacobson declared in the most emphatic manner that he would not bow before the shrine of their dogma, or words to that effect, and demanded his money back again; but the lodge declined to pay it over. He then consulted what he considered the highest living authority—Col. Robert G. Ingersoll—who advised him under the circumstances to sever his connection with the lodge. In his letter dated January 28, 1880, the Colonel said:

Any order composed of gentlemen so superstitious as to require an oath upon the Bible as necessary for advancement should not be joined by any intelligent man; and I would also make them giv back the money paid for the two degrees. If they refuse, bring suit against them in court.

Acting on this advice, Mr. Jacobson instituted proceedings against forty-two individual members of the lodge, at a heavy expense, and the case was brought before Justice Felix A. Lunkie. The lodge attempted to settle by tendering the amount of Jacobson's claim, not in government currency, but in the shape of an order on the treasurer. Jacobson positivly refused to accept the order, and so it was decided to test the matter in due form at law. The society engaged counsel, and attempted to overthrow Jacobson's position on certain technical grounds; but it seems in this case that the "Lord" of the society was not with them.

In the mean time Mr. Jacobson received a letter from the Supreme Mogul of the Knights of Pythias, sympathizing with him in the "misunderstanding" which had taken place, offering to confer both degrees upon Jacobson if he would swear upon the Koran (the Supreme Mogul had learned that Jacobson was born in the Mohammedan faith), and threatening that if Jacobson refused, he would draw upon him the animosity of the order. He also took occasion to warn Jacobson that the case would be tried before a jury of Christians, who would not be apt to sympathize with his peculiar views upon religion and the Bible.

Jacobson stuck to his original determination, and the case was duly argued on the 30th of March, 1880. Jacobson presented his own side to the jury in such an eloquent and forcible manner that the suit resulted in a disagreement. Some of the jurymen thought that they would be doing their God an injury if they allowed the Infidel to win his case, and therefore voted against him from prejudice.

The Knights of Pythias evidently feared that a second jury might decide the case in Jacobson's favor, and with Jacobson's consent the case was submitted on its merits to Justice Lunkie, who held that the lodge by accepting Jacobson's money had bound itself to giv him a second degree; and having refused to do so for any reason, Jacobson was entitled to receive his money back again on the ground that the lodge had given him no equivalent for it. The Judge also held that the tender made to Jacobson of an order drawn by the secretary upon the treasurer of the lodge was not a legal tender, and Jacobson was not bound to accept it.

Next day a committee from the lodge settled the case by paying Jacobson the money he had advanced and the costs of the court.

The case excited a great deal of comment among the secret organizations of the city and state, and was regarded as a test of their authority in matters like the one above described. Mr. Jacobson has been highly complimented upon the able manner in which he presented his case, and the fact that his being an Infidel did not prevent him from obtaining justice at the hands of a "Christian" court.

Immortality.

Although we are often told that we are spirits working with gloves on, the humiliating thought will intrude that we are in the hands and at the mercy of the principle of retrogression as well as that of evolution. It matters not how far we may advance in the spirit world, we are liable at any moment to become the victim of a materialization which will degrade us from our high estate, when we would be forced again to become a resident of a planet like this, so that the problem of our immortality is, at the best, so perplexed and irregular that it is painful to think of, its solution being immensely, if not infinitely, distant.

Respectfully, ALHAZA.

Letters from Friends.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 28, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I inclose $1 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for the next four months, and $1 to help defray your expenses to Europe. If I were a rich man I would gladly contribute more for this purpose; I would even pay all your expenses from my own pocket. I consider it the opinion of every lover of truth in America that Mr. Bennett must be our representativ to the Congress which is to be held at Brussels, not only because he is Bennett, the truth seeker, but especially because that will be the sharpest chastisement to all hypocrits and prosecutors of truth in America.

Doubtless the most wise, the most learned, and the best men of the world will be at this Congress. We can imagin what a sensation it will make in the innermost souls of the hypocritical mob, and how they will be shamed, if they hav any spark of shame left, knowing the victim for truth is the representativ for hundreds of thousands of American truth seekers. JACOB SOBLE.

RICHFORD, VT, June 20, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since it was a fifty cent monthly. I hav been highly entertained with its general character, because of my peculiar taste. I had honest, serious doubts of the validity of the Jewish and Christian scriptures. My doubts were always increased by critically reading them. I was a Methodist class-leader. Having these increasing doubts, I set myself to read first, approved polemical orthodox works, and they made me worse. Paley said, "If the apostles did not know positivly, that they were divinely inspired, then did they most grossly impose upon the people." The validity of our Bible then stands or falls with an if or if not. I concluded to read anything that promised truthful information. I hav done so, and think nine-tenths of our Liberals are astride the fence. They oppose priestcraft and statecraft by little, part at once, for they wish to be some most high rabbi, Jahveh Elohim.

The Christian Bible to me is overwhelming evidence itself of its own unreliability. It is the most obscure, absurd, contradictory, impossible-to-be-understood book that ever was printed. All priests admit it is not to be understood literally as it reads, which is admitting it to be a book of lies. God in the Constitution of the United States government! Why, that would make our Constitution another priest-forged heaven, which is proof positiv that the Jewish Yahveh Elohim is the Christian God, which never had any real personal existence in the universe, only a lying priest's forgery.

It seems to me that Abbot, Bundy, Comstock, Benedict & Co. are resolved to sustain falsehood as the greatest civilizer and moralizer on earth, and that all writers of scripture in all ages hav stated what was not literally true, but must be sustained, so that the morality and civility of man generally is complimentary—fishers of men. The Jew, they tell us, came into the world to save sinners, and he made a corporation, set one man pope to fish the rest, and went up to heaven and sat down.

Bundy sent me your love letters to Hannah, but some Liberals seem to hav left the business for which they organized and are swamped in obscenity and vituperation. I hav lived eighty years, and neither of these were my favorits; but I hav found by observation that it is exceedingly difficult to liv and not be guilty of both. I think the publication of Bennett's Solomon Song letters was infinitely more criminal than writing them. I think if we would hav less obscenity and vulgarity we should cultivate more good sense among Christians generally. I think we shall hav obscenity, vulgarity, and immorality as long as man is male and female. Now, which is the greater crime, falsehood or obscenity? I venture to say, it is my opinion there is more wrong done in one state in a year by lying in the pulpit and outside than all the obscenity and vulgarity in Christendom for a year. We never shall hav a pleasant world until we worship an honest God. No system of "fear the devil" ever had an honest God. Say Jew and Christian, God created the universe in six days. Says Josephus, God made himself (Antiq., book viii, 11).

As I am necessitated to think that all scripture is false, in fact human fabrication, and every dogma of all idolatry is religion, and all religion is, "I fear the unknowable," a man can pay divine honors to his imagination only at the expense of prostituting his reason; and as we no not half know how to liv here as we ought, therefore we better hav real things here for our idols, and enjoy them understandingly till we are obliged to part, for we hav no good evidence that we shall individually see another world. I think Christianity is the falsest of all falsities, and therefore the greatest curse to man ever on earth. Interested men hav chained our minds in infancy for a salary, and damned us to support rabbis. We had better care for ourselvs, and die when we must, and let the universal force do the rest.

My confidence in your principle to do right and impart truth is unmoved, though nearly alone. I hav enjoyed many pleasant hours with your books. I hope Mr. G. M. Mair will giv you an opportunity.

I am, with much respect, your friend, JOS. NOYES.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, June 13, 1880.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: You will find inclosed five dollars. Please send me your new book of the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," the first volume now and the second when it is ready. Please continue THE TRUTH SEEKER—the very best paper I ever got hold of. I hav been a Liberal but a short time. After that miserable cuss Comstock, backed by the church and an orthodox god, swore you into prison I began to investigate, and I found by investigating that I had been deluded, and through your imprisonment I, and a good many others, hav been brought to our senses. Yours for truth and justice,

H. B. CARPENTER.

VINELAND, N. J., June 29, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT, Dear Sir: When it was decided that you must go to Albany Penitentiary I was mad to the marrow in my bones, but you had not been there long before I began to feel glad. And now I am more glad than was mad. Circumstances change conditions. The world is better for your going, and to make the world better I think is what you liv for. And now I want you to go to the Brussels Congress, and represent the Liberals of these United States. You are the man for said mission. Please find money order, one dollar, to help you to go.

Now to the American Liberals. We can't afford to keep D. M. Bennett from that Congress, the loving Christians would rejoice too much over such a failure.

Now, one and all that can, don't fail to send in cash enough to enable him to go like a man. Don't giv him occasion to beg for that which should be our privilege to freely giv. A. BENNETT HOUGH.

HUDSON, MICH., June 29, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: It appears to me very important that the Liberals of this country should be represented at the European Congress. Inclosed find one dollar for that purpose, but if not used for that apply it to the benefit of THE TRUTH SEEKER or any other place (as Oakes Ames says) where it will do the most good.

I am an old man and not overburdened with this world's goods or I would send more. O, if I only had a little of W. H. Vanderbilt's or Jay Gould's wealth, how I would send these Liberal papers and other matters kiting.

Yours truly, GEO. WILLIAMS.

DALLAS, TEX., June 22, 1880.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: It was a glad day to me when your prison doors were unlocked and you were permitted once more to enjoy your own light and air. I hav often thought as though, were it possible, I could take your place and suffer in your stead, as the world could not afford to lose you for such a long time. I cannot now forget you in your persecutions. I had hoped that when your prison days were over your persecutors would hav humanity enough remaining to let you enjoy the rest of your days in peace. I would like to plead with your enemies, in the name of humanity, in remembrance of your gray hairs and the untiring energy with which you hav labored for the cause of Freethought, and lastly the good accomplished by that energy and no less what you hav suffered to gain—even for them—your rights.

I was pleased with your proposition to B. F. Underwood. I am pained to hav such great advocates of Liberalism at war with each other, I hope that each will do the other justice. Of course I am not capable of advising.

Your dear old paper reaches me every Monday morn. "I love it, I love it, and who shall dare to chide me" from using my paper with care.

I am a member of the Dallas Liberal League. We get on slowly. How much we need somegood lecturers here! It is sad to relate the awful condition of the South.

Yours for truth, SALLIE GIBBON.

BOSTON, MASS., May 8, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As a new-fledged Liberal I hav written to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and my letters hav been published, crude as they are. To put it into one phrase, I indorse every word spoken at the reception.

The immortal Jefferson said, "I tremble when I think that God is just." Hayes, like the being of old, will tremble when he sees the writing on the wall. He trembles now before such a vile thing as Comstock, before the priesthood, before the Methodist church, before the pious Mrs. Hayes. Why ask for God in the Constitution when we hav such a submissiv demigod in the presidential chair? What sneaking duplicity! What disregard for the Constitution, for his oath of office! Freemen, Americans, beware of Christians for your administrators of law and the Constitution! They profess to follow him who came to break every yoke and let the oppressed go free and forgiv their enemies (after they hav killed them) The church will draw their willing tools through falsehoods of mire and filth till they don't know what color they are. Go for Infidels; they don't believe in human sacrifices to keep their God good-natured.

JOSEPH L. SPINNER.

DOYLESTOWN, PA., July 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Your article on the political situation and the duty of Liberals is good. We should make wise choice this fall. The independent voters will decide who the next president shall be. In Winfield S. Hancock we hav a superb soldier, a gentleman, and I believe an honest man. I hav never yet voted a Democratic ticket; for the fourteen years of my voting it has been every time with the Republican party. But where are we drifting to under its leadership? Can Liberals any longer vote that ticket, or at least for president with the ticket headed by two orthodox Christians? We hav had a pretty good dose of Christianity at the White House for three years and more, and outside of Hayes' song-singing, he has been pretty nearly a nonentity. I think our safety lies with the Democratic party. This fall they hav made a good choice, and we need a change. The Republican party has not only become corrupt but rotten to the core. The last two or three times I voted I was compelled to hold my nose while casting my vote. This fall I intend to vote for the best man without regard to party. A. J. R.

DID JESUS CHRIST EXIST?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Two gospels tell of his birth and early life, whilst the other two never mention it. Matthew and Luke tell very different stories. Matthew tells of the angel appearing to Joe in dreams four or five times, that certain old prophecies might be fulfilled. One says wise men came from the East; the other shepherds. One says they took the child to Egypt; the other to Jerusalem, and thence to Nazareth. One tells of Herod's massacre of babes, which no one else mentions. And each one tells wonders which the other knows nothing of, and the genealogy is altogether different. It seems to be a history of two different persons, yet people must swallow both or be damned. I will believe neither story.

A. JOHNSON.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 26, 1880.

CHIEF: This morning I received a file of THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 19th and rapidly glancing over a number my eye caught "Hurrah for Europe and the Brussels Congress." I devoured the article as I would a dish of delicious strawberries or a sensuous kiss, and, with pleasure read the list of contributions to aid in sending representativs of the National Liberal League to the International Congress of Freethinkers to meet at Brussels next August. I saw that said representativs had to depart early in July, or not at all, and that my subscription for the cause must be forwarded immediately. Then I said, "Auxiliary League 190 must do its duty or die." So I immediately called on a few chiefs whom I knew to be true to the core, and between us we subscribed $3 00, which please find inclosed for the purpose stated. I think it will reach you in time to be added to the general fund, and simply credit it to Auxiliary Liberal League 190. I could hav done better, but I happen to be very busy to-day, so I did the best I could. Every little helps you know. The Freethinkers with whom I conversed are of the belief that it would be a criminal omission on the part of the National Liberal League, as representing the great Liberal element, not of the United States, but of all the Americas, not to be represented at Brussels. The scope and purposes of the coming International Congress of Freethinkers are so broad, comprehensiv, and free that we Liberals of the Pacific enthusiastically indorse them. We believe the Congress will not be a failure, but a glorious and triumphant success in the interest of justice and liberty for humanity's sake.

We would in our hearts that Elizur Wright, President of the National Liberal League, was with us, but in dissenting, that is his privilege, his right, and we think none the less of him. If the day ever comes when a Freethinker is ostracized or even slighted because he does not believe with the majority, on that day I bury the National Liberal League out of sight and out of mind. I am for every human being having perfect liberty of thought and of action so long as neither is destructiv of what we call common decency.

Finally, the Freethinkers here believe that whoever goes to Brussels should go there like a man and a gentleman; that he should travel in first-class berths, lodge at first-class hotels, and hav plenty of money for this purpose. If he has to worry and think how he has to make ends meet there will be nothing of himself or his mission. He will be disheartened; to be disheartened is to look on the winding sheet at one side and the coffin at the other, with the undertaker looking on, wreathed in smiles, as is the devil every time he has a confab with Anthony Comstock. We hope that the brave, tried, and trusted D. M. Bennett and Secretary Rawson may be able to go as representativs of our national organization, and if not both, then you without fail. I know enough will be contributed to see you off with flying colors and a happy soul, if you hav one, you handsome old sinner.

With heart and hand in the cause, and with an unctious benediction freely bestowed on our great and growing Liberal family, I remain, Fraternally yours,

BYRON ADONIS.

BALTIMORE, MD, July 2, 1880.

FRIEND BENNETT: I feel a desire for you to go to Brussels, and herewith contribute my mite ($1 00) toward that object. I believe that we, readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, will receive our money back in the shape of spicy, interesting letters from our editor abroad. I think it will be the channel by which we shall receive much useful information about the congress and many other things not connected with your "special mission" that we otherwise would not get. I want you to go, and not only to go, but for the time being to forget, if you can, your enemies in this country, and do not stain your "letters from Europe" with their names. We hav heard very freely of them lately. You hav hammered them well, now bury the club and off to Europe. We shall go with you in spirit as we went in spirit with you to prison, only we feel joy now, then depression.

Hoping that you will hav a delightful trip and a good time generally, and that subscriptions will cover expenses, I remain your warm friend, C. GARWOOD.

SUMMIT STATION, N. Y., July 5, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Friend: I hav been thinking I might sleep better to send you a dollar to help you go to the Brussels Congress. Please find $1 inclosed. I want to liv to get hold of your hand and look you in the eye before I die. Yours forever, SMITH MILES.

PRATT, June 29, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I wish to make a few shot-gun remarks through your paper. Why I say shot-gun remarks is because they will scatter. First, I wish to say I agree with, and believe every word of this portion which I will quote of what Edgar G. Beall says of R. G. Ingersoll, viz., "Robert G. Ingersoll's character is a grand one, and whatever defects he may hav, he is certainly moved by the highest sense of duty, and by the most sincere defects of mankind." But he has defects, as I believe, which I will state. One is his sticking to the Republican party, and the reason is, as I believe, he thinks to make the necessary reform in the party, and this is one of his defects, as I do not believe this can ever be accomplished, as it has been going backward for the last ten years. One reason, as I believe, why Ingersoll does not belong to what is known as the Greenback party is because he is in a good condition, financially, and in consequence has not given it due attention. I believe his finances would make no difference with him if he should investigate. Ingersoll says that the government cannot make money. If he will say that it cannot create money, I will agree with him. Neither can any one create any wealth without labor. Our laws are so fixed that those who create wealth scarcely get a decent living, while those who do the least, and pay the least for the support of the government, accumulate the most wealth. Now, Mr. Ingersoll, I wish to ask you how it is, if money can only be created by labor, the non-producing, non-tax-paying people are heaping together the most wealth? But some say bonds should not be taxed because they are issued by the government. Then I say that land should not be taxed, because our title comes from the government. Yes, but after you purchase the land it becomes your individual property, and should be taxed. Then when you hav purchased your bond does it not also become your individual property, and should be taxed? My motto is, Tax all property, whether corporate, individual, or church property alike, and let the government make or issue paper money to be used as exchange, good for all debts, sufficient for the necessary exchanges of the people. But, says one, you must hav gold behind it. Not so. Hav you gold behind the bonds. As long as the government has the power to levy and collect of the producer's and property owner's taxes, they can redeem all their paper by receiving it for taxes, and as they cannot create money, as Mr. Ingersoll says, why should it be necessary to collect taxes in gold of the people to redeem greenbacks when the tax that gets the gold would redeem the greenback as effectually as the gold would.

Respectfully, JAMES A. PRATT.

IS GARFIELD A "GOD-IN-THE-CONSTITUTION" MAN?

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., June 27, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: There are undoubtedly a great many Liberals who would like to know the relativ standing of Garfield and Hancock in this respect before casting their vote next fall. I hav always voted the Republican ticket, but in the future will withhold it rather than cast a vote for a man whose life is influenced by the Christian religion. We do not want another President who will allow a citizen to lie in the Albany penitentiary for a year for sending through the U. S. mails a pamphlet containing an argument in favor of reforming the marriage system, couched in well chosen words, which argument any citizen should hav the perfect right to make.

I do not like the position of the Democratic party now, nor at any time during or since the war. I do not like the scheming Catholic priests and their army of blind followers, who are instructed to vote the Democratic ticket under any and all circumstances. But I stand ready to sacrifice all else to secure a Liberal government and an entire separation of church and state. Will some one who knows furnish the desired information?

Yours truly, H. B. Shears.

Colon, Mich., June 28, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: At this date I am at the Healing Institute of Dr. A. J. Kinnie and Madam Sanford Kinnie. This institution is very pleasantly situated upon the banks of Sturgeon Lake and St. Joseph river. It is one of the very best resorts for persons who are afflicted with any form of disease. Dr. Kinnie and wife are both earnest and activ defenders of the general principles of freedom. They are patrons of The Truth Seeker, and are in deep and positiv sympathy with its determined purposes in behalf of all that is true and manly or womanly in human life and its relations.

Fraternally, C. S. Rowley.

Douglas, Iowa, June 25, 1880

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed postal order for five dollars, for which send me your prison book, "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times."

I want to tell you how I came to get what some of my neighbors call the devil's religion. I was not on my way to Damascus, nor was there any lightning about it. I was on the streets of Moulton when Dr J. S Smyth asked me to sign the petition to President Hayes on behalf of D. M. Bennett, editor of The Truth Seeker, who had committed no crime. He handed me a copy of The Truth Seeker, wherein I read your mock trial and sentence. That petition, although signed by two hundred thousand persons, could not soften the hard and obdurate Christian soul to use the stolen power to right the iniquity of his fellow-men. I wonder if Mrs. Hayes had on the Christian breeches when he got the petition?

It was not a divine afflatus by which I got religion, but the cruel persecution of D. M. Bennett by the Christian bigots that cut the strap that bound me in the orthodox stables for all but eighty years. The doctor and I are working to get up a Freethinkers' club. We hav got about seventeen members. I hav furnished all our reading matter so far. There are many works on The Truth Seeker catalogue I want to get.

May you liv long, in health and happiness, to be a blessing to the world, and may the truths of The Truth Seeker cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, is the earnest wish from the inmost soul of J. W. Murphy.

Modesto, Cal., April 20, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I regard The Truth Seeker as one of the most gigantic props to liberty and free thought of any paper on the continent.

We hav organized a Liberal League in Modesto with about thirty charter members. The clergy are considerably alarmed, as they know that our League is composed of the best men and women of the country. But you can judge of their consternation when they discovered the following notice in the public press of the county:

"DISCUSSION INVITED.

"All persons, and especially ministers of the gospel, are cordially invited to meet with us in Eastin's Hall, April 18, 1880, and discuss the subject, 'There is no Such God as the Christian Sects Worship.'

"By order of the Local Auxiliary Liberal League of Modesto, No. 165. C. C. Luther, Pres.

"G. T. Hanscom, Sec'y."

Well, as the time approached for the meeting, all sorts of rumors were afloat to the effect that the Christian fraternity were importing heavy guns from San Francisco. But when the fatal day arrived several local clergymen were present, but only one came to time, and Colonel Kelso, occupying a position about the center of our skirmish line, met the enemy in fine order, and, without a waver in the ranks, vanquished them so completely that you could hardly tell there had been an engagement.

We still hold out the invitation upon the same issue, and hope they will import a sufficient force to make the fight interesting. I expect to take a hand in the next battle, and hope to meet with as great success as Bro. Kelso.

Damnation is rife against us, but I entertain an idea that we will change this tone before a year. I hav tried to impress upon the minds of our Christian fellow-citizens that Infidel men and women are just as honest and earnest in their faith as it is possible for Christians to be.

I shall rejoice when the time arrives for Bro. Bennett to cast the shackles from the limbs of innocent men and place them where they belong—on the limbs of the vile wretch, Anthony Comstock. Yours truly, C. C. Luther.

Lookingglass, Or., June 4, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I received your card some time ago, and would hav answered before now, but I hav been working to get a few trial subscribers to your valuable paper. I hav succeeded in getting nine names, and could accomplish more but for the want of time, as I am building this season.

This community is largely Liberal in sentiment, but not being organized, it can accomplish but little. I think if some good Liberal lecturer would take the field he would hav no treuble in organizing a League. Christianity is at a standstill here. I suppose we are getting too far West, or perhaps the great influx of our Chinese neighbors has something to do with it. As a sample of double-lying, indulged in from the pulpit, I will giv you the following: Our Methodist minister, in a discourse some time since on Infidelity, stated, among other falsehoods, that Paine was not an Infidel, that he did not write against the Bible, but to overthrow papal authority. Since then we hav been told by another reverend gentleman of the United Brethren persuasion that Paine was a monster and Infidel, but that he retracted all on a death-bed, and so the work goes on. I imagin that if all the falsehoods told of this great and good man could be collected and published in book form they would make a larger volume than the Bible.

Inclosed find $8, for which send The Truth Seeker as per list. Frazier Ward.

Cawker City, Kan., June 29, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Inclosed find $1, for which send me tracts as per numbers. I tell you, faithful brother, we are rapidly gaining ground out here. Defend yourself in the future as you hav done in the past and we Liberals of Kansas will stand by you. We are poor here, but a better lot of souls never clustered together. Many more are with us in heart, but are so situated that they dare not come out boldly. Your paper is only six years old. See what it has accomplished! Take courage, you will liv to see a greater and more wonderful change in the six years to come. Ten thousand are reading Paine's "Age of Reason" now where fifty years ago one person dared read it. Truth is our foundation and only hope. We hav a small League here. G. B. Chapman is President. Respectfully,

T. F. Hersey.

Green Island, N. Y., May 8, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I would like to say something through the medium of The Truth Seeker to arouse the Liberals of this country to a sense of the necessity of contributing enough to support such men as H. L Green in the rough and laborious work he is doing for us and not drive him to forsake our cause through our neglect to furnish him with sufficient means to work with.

I see by my last Investigator that some tender-hearted friend has hinted to us Liberals that if we wished Mr. Green to do our heavy work much longer it would be well to send him something to work with. A good hint.

Now, Mr. Editor, hints are proper, and often hav the effect designed; but don't some of us deserve to be kicked a little once in a while as well? Why, just think of a man working as he has for years to accomplish that which interests us all as much as it does himself, and we sit quietly at our ease reading from week to week of the good work being done by such men, and often talking with friends in praise of those noble men, and calculating the probable time in the near future when we shall be relieved from Christian rule and be able to lift the iron heel of the church from off our necks, and yet too stingy to send them enough to purchase their writing material. I know, Mr. Editor, most of us are very poor; but are any so poor that they cannot raise one dollar to help on the noble cause we are all engaged in? Now there are many thousands of Liberals in this country, and thousands more that wish to be such as soon as the power of the church is broken, but hav not the backbone to come out and help until they see we hav the monster crippled.

And now, Mr. Bennett, I want each one of the Liberals of this country to do what I am about doing—send one dollar (even if it is your bottom dollar) to H. L. Green, of Salamanca, N. Y. And if all will do it—and I hope they will—I believe they will experience more joy from that dollar than any other dollar they ever disposed of in all their lives. If we do not exert ourselvs now, while victory is so easily obtained, we may be obliged to leave the work for our children in the next generation.

Yours hopefully, Hiram Wilbur.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 1, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I hav on several occasions seen and read in the Investigator an appeal to the Liberal public by B. F. Underwood asking aid concerning his case at Irwin Station, Pa. In this week's Investigator friend Underwood well says, "Of course a suit like this is expensiv, but a principle is at stake, and it is worth fighting for." Now, that is expressing my sentiments to a dot.

Something over a year ago Professor Underwood lectured before the Liberal League of Pittsburgh on "If not Christianity, What?" His honor, Mayor Lidell, answered, "Twenty-five dollars and costs." And the Professor came within a lamb's tail of being arrested, had it not been for our good old Secretary, Robert Peet, offering himself as a sacrifice in the place of the Professor. The members of the League paid the fine and costs, and appealed the case to the county court, the case being decided against us. The judge decided that he supposed that the mayor knew his business. Since that time the members hav appealed the case to the Supreme Court. As previously remarked, the suit is annoying and expensiv, but there is a principle at stake, and is worth fighting for.

The status of the case is this: The mayor, under city ordinance, has a right to refuse or grant a license for exhibitors on Sunday, but makes a proviso not to include scientific lectures. But his honor decided as much that the Professor's lecture came within the meaning of immoral exhibitions, while we, as well as the Professor, contended that it was a scientific lecture. Since that time Col. Ingersoll lectured one Sunday evening in our city, and the mayor fined the lessee of the Opera House in which the lecture was given fifty dollars and costs. Col. Ingersoll paid the fine. Not long ago I was shown a check from Col. Ingersoll in favor of our League for twenty-five dollars to help us to defray the expenses of our suit. Col. Ingersoll was in no way connected with our case, but Professor Underwood was, and would hav been arrested and fined had it not been for our pleading with the mayor to let him go and take one of our members instead. But it is strange we hav never heard from Mr. Benjamin Franklin Underwood, neither privately nor through the press, asking for aid in our behalf. The only conclusion that I can arrive at is this: If we had allowed the Professor to be arrested here I think that there would be a principle in it worth fighting for.

In conclusion I would say if any of our Liberal public feel inclined to giv us a helping hand in this matter it will be thankfully received and acknowledged through The Truth Seeker. S. F. De Jones.

Brighton, N. Y., June 24, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I am glad to hear of your joyful release and happy celebration of your liberty, and hope that you will get to Europe and hav a good and prosperous visit there. If you go I shall send two dollars for that purpose. Yours truly, E. E. Curtis.

Corvallis, Or., June 16, 1880.

Friend Bennett: One year ago to-day I sent my first subscription money for The Truth Seeker. I was then much excited with fear that you would be sent to prison and the paper stamped out and your life stamped out, but the paper stood the racket, though you and Christ had a dreadful tussle, much longer and stronger than old Jacob had with his Father; and your ladder with 200 000 rounds was insufficient to help you any, yet you hav come out victorious, yes, most gloriously.

And now you must go to Europe, that you may spread before us the light and knowledge of the whole world. The aim and object of the congress is to gain knowledge, and we must be represented. Giv us knowledge and we will think free, but ignorance has no use for free thoughts. Knowledge cannot be enslaved, but ignorance is a slave by nature.

I see by your list that Oregon is not known among the Liberal Leagues. It would be the happiest day of my life could a League be established at Corvallis. The material is all here; all we need is some one with knowledge enough to win precious souls and pluck them as brands from the burning.

I am glad I was not at your reception, as I fear the fate of the Congress doorkeeper at the news of the surrender of Cornwallis would hav been mine, as I nearly went wild with joy at its complete success in spite of all opposition. You must see Brussels say John Grimsley ($3), John Newhouse ($1), B. F. Hyland ($1). Please find postal order for the same, and believe me ever ready to do all in my power for the advancement of knowledge and freedom.

I am, sincerely, B. F. Hyland.

120 Lexington Ave., New York, June 26, 1880.

Friend Bennett: I intended ere this to say to you that you can count on me for $5.00 for the funds being raised for you and Prof. Rawson to attend the International Congress at Brussels. Would say $10, but I hav already pledged $5 to the fund being raised for sending Augusta Cooper Bristol. I trust the contributions may come in sufficiently to enable both you and Prof. Rawson to go. It will do you both good to meet with Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant. I understand that these brave and able champions of Liberalism will attend the Congress. You are doubtless interested as much as I am in the struggle at present going on between Mr. Bradlaugh and the British Parliament. I feel confident that Bradlaugh will yet secure his seat.

I want, by and bye, to send you a political article touching our coming Presidential campaign. It is rather important that the Liberals of this country should giv earnest attention to this matter, although we ought to be pretty safe in the hands of either Garfield or Hancock, the former having stood bravely against further Comstockian tinkering of the postal laws, and the latter being backed by a party avowedly in favor of state rights. Will try and drop in and see you some day. Yours truly, E. B. Foote, Sr., M.D.

Piedro, Col., May 8, 1880.

To D. M. Bennett and my Liberal Friends: Lest some of you should think I had been scalped by the Utes or buried in an avalanche, I hav embraced this, the first opportunity that has presented itself for many waeks, to address you through the welcome organ of the Liberal public. I presume it would be first in order to congratulate the old soldier who has endured the rigors of prison life that we and future generations might enjoy greater freedom of speech on his release from a loathsome prison. He has doubtless received a greater ovation at the hands of the Liberals than General Grant did from his admirers at Philadelphia. I don't think I should hav joined in a Grant demonstration, at least not as a footman in the procession; but if I had been in New York on Mr. Bennett's arrival I would hav made one of the number to welcome him to light and freedom. As yet I've heard nothing of what was done by the Liberals of New York and surrounding country to celebrate his return to his home, business, and family, as the last Truth Seeker received by me was dated April 19th. I don't know whether you hav thrown me overboard with other useless rubbish or whether my failure of late to get The Truth Seeker is attributed to that species of builder called a mail contractor in this country. I am rather inclined to attribute it to the latter cause, from the fact that The Truth Seeker is not the only friend who has neglected or failed to reach me recently. For some time I was inclined to the belief that some mysterious influence of the elements in nature had conspired to alienate or rob me of my friends. My letters to my friends received no response, until I was about ready to exclaim that friendship was, after all, "nothing but a name;" but as two or three of them hav been heard from recently, I am willing to withdraw the allegation.

I began to wonder why my friends had abandoned me so unceremoniously. I could think of no crimes I had committed or neglect on my part toward them. Taking these facts into consideration, in connection with other disappointments, I was about to conclude that life with me was going to prove a barren failure: but I hav recently received letters from friends in the East stating their intention of coming to this section to join me in an effort to establish a Co-operativ Association, or Communal Home, for the mutual benefit and advancement of its members. This has been one of the fondest dreams of my life, and its realization will come as near rendering me contented and happy as I could expect to be under other existing circumstances. I hope that other good Liberals will join us; none, however, who are not thoroughly imbued with the socialistic or communistic idea need apply for membership. If you do not fully appreciate the advantages of such a plan of life, 'tis better that you paddle your own canoe, as we want no passengers aboard our craft who think the vessel unseaworthy or who hav'nt full confidence in the crew. The winter snows hav disappeared from the hillside and genial spring is again with us. Many of my plans, thought out during the winter months whilst snowbound in my cabin among the mountains, hav come to naught, thus verifying the adage that "the best laid plans of mice and men oft gang aglee," in consequence of which I hav settled down and determined to remain, at least for the season, at my old quarters near the Rio Piedro. Whilst my partner, who is in no sense a companion to me, turns up the rich soil with his plow, I sow the seed and harrow it in the earth, or with shovel strengthen and open up the ditches and watch the sparkling water trickle over the grass and grain. My predictions concerning the mining boom in this country this season is being verified; a constant stream of emigration is pouring into the mines every day. I hav never seen half as much travel over the highway leading past my ranche since I am in the country. Lots in Rico that could be bought two months since for $25 are now worth $500. I saw, and still see, fortunes in this country for those who are fortunate enough to possess a small capital; but I had not the means to do anything single-handed, but if I could hav induced a number of persons similarly situated to club their means together and concentrate their efforts, we could hav accomplished on a small scale what other and richer combinations hav done—doubled, yea, tripled or quadrupled our means. Wealthy corporations denounce the poor communists because they merely seek to protect themselves against monopolies and to secure the legitimate profits of their labor. The money king, the ore magnate, and the land pirate furnish the precedent, and the sooner the laboring class take in the situation and follow their example the better for them, at least so far as to protect their mutual interests by combination of effort and concentration of means.

Yours for co-operation, J. Allen Evans.

The Love Watch.

BY CHARLES BRADLEY.

Crossing lake Nicaragua "in the spiced Indian air by night," August 6, 1863.

Oh, ever dearest, loveliest, best,
I nothing was; I seemed,
Before you called my listening heart,
It never woke; it dreamed.

The love-inspiring star and shade
Whispering along your window sill,
You breathed enchantment through the glade,
So softly breathing "Bill."

The cricket dreamt, the owl slept there,
So hush that word was given,
But never bugle's battle blare
Beneath the bending heaven

Woke errant knight, in Palestine,
Burning for love and fame,
As burned my soul when o'er that green,
You breathed my happy name.

Silence, oh bird, thy dying trill,
Be dark, oh star on high;
Love's loveliest voice hath summoned Bill,
He's passed beyond the sky.

Ambition's Dream.

BY JENNIE BUTLER BROWNE.

Wide is the gate o'er which some bold hand
Hath written "Fame;" but to that green hill
Where deathless laurels grow there winds
A narrow way, a path not often trod.

The little pilgrim needs no staff
Wherewith to climb the easy slope
That bounds the vales of infancy;
The eager spirit well sustains
The buoyant form, while youthful dreams
Enchant the mind with truer seeming
Than material fact affords.
The happy little dreamer loves the song
Of soaring bird, whose thrilling note,
Falling earthward, lures him skyward,
The raindrops charm his raptured soul,
Because in realms of mystery
Their own eternal birthplace is.
The rushing winds speak mighty things,
To which his earnest heart responds
Awed by their grand revealings.

Borne on transparent sea of air
The changeful cloud that lightly floats
Edged with sunlit, golden fringe—
The rosy blush on downy lining
Deepening 'neath the careless touch
And languid kiss of summer breeze,
Draws him with a tender yearning
Toward that something undefined
Which, for want of better name, we call Infinitude.

The viewless pathways of the air
Seem more substantial than the rock;
Are safer deemed than solid earth,
Whose highways are for sluggish feet,
And prosy mind, unfit to cope
With higher, nobler modes of thought,
And deeds of grandeur so supreme
The very gods turn pale with rage,
Because of failure to perform.

O, easy task to climb the rugged steep
Of fame immortal, with such strides
As shall astound the admiring world of plodding men.
Ah! there are grander hights to reach;
Greater things than hav been learned,
And youthful pulses wildly beat
Impatient to begin the task
Of sundering that veil of mystery,
Which hides from mortal eye
Those hidden truths, whereof knowledge
Shall make men wise.
From silent earth and murmuring sea,
Ambition's wand brings vast treasures forth,
And from out the boundlessness of space
Materializ s wond rous things.
Men boast the greatness of the works of man,
And some new scheme stamps its result
On every age.
Then let the legions of progressiv men
Close up their ranks and onward march.
O, fill the world with light and power;
Make free the slavish human mind;
Let allied science and discovery
Boldly spread their pinions wing and wing,
'Till unyielding truth exalt and dignify,
From least to greatest, the race called man.
With music let the atmosphere resound;
Adorn with art, with beauty clothe;
Imbue with peace and harmony divine,
Life, and health, and lasting joy impart—
Establish those fraternal bonds
Which contending nations shall unite,
Till universal brotherhood become
A thing of fact as well as name.

The task begins,
O, toiling youth beware! The crags
You plant your feet upon are full
Of treachery, and of the many who wrought
Before your time, some hav paid with life
The price of finding the alluring path
You seek to tread, o'er grown with thorns,
And full of pitfalls deep and dark,
Which wisdom infinit could scarce avoid;
While from the scanty store of knowledge gained,
The seeming fact, best theorized
On which a meager fame depends,
Burning fitfully and pale, hangs,
At best, but a generation brief
Upon the masthead of decay;
And the heart-sick toiler yields
The struggle, and grasps insensate
Nothingness at last.

But prophetic phantoms, delusive, bright,
Still the impulsiv mind of youth mislead;
Some great event must be achieved,
Or else failure. The record of many
A struggling life that little word
Is said to be, and how many leave
A fair success behind in their mad
Efforts to escape such unhappy doom,
And by this very striving fail, no man can tell.

Daunted not, our youthful dreamer,
By fiery ardor still enthused, pursues his way,
His eager spirit and early purpose changeless still,
Though weary brain sometimes ask respite,
And strength of limb, consulted not
Hint a suggestion of reprieve.

But where is the treasure he hath won?
Where the knowledge he hath garnered up
With which to bless a sad and suffering world?
What secret hath he wrested from the gods,
Which, as remedial force applied,
Shall waken to a higher and nobler life
The heavy-hearted, groveling children of the earth?
Behold! he hath not reached that altitude
Where mountain top is lost in cloud,
Or the true visage of aspiring men,
Invisible to the naked eye become;
Nor hath he yet reward in hand,
Save such knowledge as contented men
Already hav in store, and profit by.
But now from his barren eyrie, looking
Down into the quiet val that lies below,
He sees his kinsmen, seeming happy, all
Enjoying fruits, and herbs, and healthful things,
Well accustomed to such luxury profuse, as he Must never for a moment leave his trust to share.
He hath learned that song-birds keep
Much nearer to the shadowy earth
Than seemed unto his childish eye;
That raindrops condense from mists that earth
Itself exhales, and naught mysterious is
Save what we sum in asking whence
The force that causes action and reaction comes;
E'en measured are the ever-changing winds;
Their strength and power and course foretold;
But with what intent they wierdly shriek,
As though beyond their own control enraged,
Or giv utterance to mutterings
Of discontent, like fretful child
'Gainst its will by stronger force subdued;
Or why with subtlest of soft whisperings
It often doth beguile, he wonders still.

Mysterious force!
By undiscovered motor baffled still
He cannot yet say "Peace," and hope to see
The angry winds or smitten waves obey.
Deep in the heart of faithful Nature dwells
A countless store of wonders still untold,
And in the huge book of Universal Law,
Of language, our puny years are but the alphabet,
And centuries a single sentence incomplete.
The delving student, true, may point the subject,
But he knows not yet its predicate,
Nor can he, with surety of correctness,
Conjugate a million years of future time
Though on the task his very life depend.
What presumptiv folly, then, for any man
To undertake the mad and useless task
Of bringing forth at one gigantic birth
That vast multitude of unborn truths
Which lie in the eternal future hid,
As far removed from this dark age
As our world from incandescent sun
Ceaselessly revolves.
But heroic patience must endure
The scoffs of heartless incredulity,
And waste no time in senseless bickerings.
The ambitious dreams of early youth
Must not be suffered to fade from sight
Until some activ form of potent good
From their shadowy outlines shall evolve.
Almost a lifetime hath been spent in wading
Through the records of what the minds of other men
Hav wrested from the ages that are past;
And now the shortening days of life's winter
Alone are left in which to write a brief
Appendix to the rare volume he hath read.
The aged pilgrim leans upon his staff
In profoundest meditation lost,
Waiting still the grander inspiration
Of a coming day, when, less antagonized,
His mental range shall take a clearer view
Of those majestic hights that rise
Above him in sublimer grandeur now
Than when, in boastful days of youth,
He measured them with untrained eye,
Knowing not the grave import of the task
To which he rashly pledged his after life.

But what to-day hath failed in giving,
The unpropitious morrow still withholds.
His eye is growing dim, o'erwearv his brain;
Faltering and slow his step already is;
Uncertain and tremulous his hand.
Carefully now, and with slow patience,
He pens a few brief lines, all he deems worthy
The lifelong effort he hath made to secure
Unto his kind a more extended field
Of knowledge for their mental range.
And of individual action, a higher plane
To base improv d conditions on.
From the philosophic teachings of the past
He nothing takes; and culling from his thoughts,
He only dares thereto the little supplement to add:
"Strive evermore to know the highest uses
And the best of those things that lie nearest thy hand.
For on them the present weal or woe of man depends."

His task is done, and gazing calmly at the stars,
He vaguely wonders if the time may come
When, 'mongst the human parasites that cling
Unto the surface of our little world,
Some aspirant for an immortal name
May not succeed in fixing the orbit
Of HIS little star, some certain faction
Of a quintillion miles nearer to the earth
Than his own bearings had seemed to make sure beyond a doubt.
Musing thus the aged pilgrim yields at last
To the sweet unconsciousness of everlasting sleep;
And with awe-touched pity, younger men
Bear him down into the pleasant valley,
Where song-birds dwell and raindrops fall;
Where tempests wildly rave, and soft winds sigh;
Where light-winged clouds serenely float;
Where nature's flowers unchallenged bloom,
And where, nevermore to dream or toil,
Dead men are laid, to rest and be—forgot!

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.), $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

Gems of Thought.

THE mower loses no time in sharpening his scythe.

YET I doubt not through the ages
Our increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened
With the process of the suns.
—Tennyson.

SOCRATIC DIALOG.

Phaedrus: I wish that you would tell me whether you believe the tale of Boreas carrying off Orithya from the banks of the Ilissus.

Socrates: The wise are doubtful; and if, like them, I also doubt, there would be nothing very strange in that.—Jewett.

DOUBT is everywhere. Skeptical suggestions are wrapped in narrativ; they bristle in short, shallow, self-asserting essays, in which men who really show their ignorance think they show their depth; they color our physical philosophy; they mingle themselvs with our commonplace theology itself.—Bishop Wilberforce.

IT should be considered that it is better not to interfere with the faith of the ignorant but let them remain in an exoteric condition until they are properly developed by sufficient education and consequent intelligence. It is just as much the duty of advanced thinkers not to tamper with the beliefs of men who are at an early stage of progress as it is not to put a flaming torch in the possession of a lunatic or a razor in the hand of a child.—Sotheran.

THE ladies were regretting the loss of a friend to whom they were under obligations. "You hav, however," said Reynolds, "the comfort of being relieved from a burden of gratitude." The saying is too much like Rochefoucauld, and too true, to be pleasant; but it was one of those keen remarks which Johnson appreciated because they prick a bubble of commonplace moralizing without demanding too liberal an acceptation.—Leslie Stephen.

ALONG the whole line the defending forces of orthodoxy are falling back, not knowing where to make a stand; and Materialism all over Europe [and still more, perhaps, on this side of the Atlantic] stands frankly out and is respectfully listened to when it affirms that the war is over, that the claims of revelation cannot be maintained, and that the existence of God and of a future state, the origin of man, the nature of conscience, and the meaning of the distinction between good and evil are all open questions.—Froude.

LET the dead bury their dead, and let the Old Catholics decide whether the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the son or from the Father alone. Gentlemen indeed who still read the Athanasian Creed, and pr.fess to attach some meaning to its statements, hav no right to sneer at their brethren who persist in taking things seriously. But for men who long for fact instead of phrases, the only possible course is to allow such vagaries to take their own course to the limbo to which they are naturally destined.—Stephen.

THE book plainly says "God created the heaven and the earth," and this was once the commonly accepted conclusion of all who read it. But when Infidels and scientists showed by common-sense reasoning how impossible it was for even a god to make something out of nothing, to speak into existence myriads of worlds, then the priests and interpreters set to work and made a new meaning for the old words; and once more all goes on in the old routine; and once more the demand is, "Believe or be damned."—Elmina D. Slenker.

I HAV no compassion for sloth, but youth has more need of intellectual rest than age; and the cheerfulness, the tenacity of purpose, the power of work, which make many a successful man what he is, must often be placed to the credit, not of his hours of industry, but to that of his hours of idleness, in boyhood. Even the hardest worker of all, if he has to deal with anything above mere details, will do well, now and again, to let his brain lie fallow for a time. The next crop of thought will certainly be all the fuller in the ear, and the weeds fewer.—Huxley.

I OPEN a harmless little treatis by a divine who need not be named. He knows intuitivly, so he says, that there is a God who is benevolent and wise and endowed with personality; conceived anthropomorphically enough to be capable of acting upon the universe and yet so different from man as to be able to throw a ecent veil of mystery over his more questionable actions. Well, I reply, my intuition tells me of no such being. Then, says the divine, I can't prove my statements, but you would recognize their truth if your heart or your intellect were not corrupted; that is, you must be a knave or a fool. This is the kind of argument to which we are perfectly accustomed in theology: I am right, you are wrong; and I am right because I am good and wise.—Leslie Stephen.

THE habit of thought, no matter how well intentioned, which execrates the representativs of progressiv thought, the moment they invade, in their legitimate investigations, certain creeds which hav slumbered undisturbed for ages, is necessarily a barrier to our progress and an enemy to our interests. It is of no avail to urge the unfitness of the world for the reception of advanced views. Were there not some deeply-rooted and imperativ necessity in the age which demands these views, they would never hav existed. They come to us not as exotic plants imported from another world, but as the natural outgrowth of certain conditions inhering in man's progressiv nature, and, at the same time, inseparably connected with that law of change which is no less a law of life in the intellectual than in the material world.—Pedder.

Odds and Ends.

A STUTTERING PRACTICAL JOKER.—Some time ago there resided in Westchester county an individual who was a noted wag, and who had an irreclaimable habit of stuttering; in fact, he was generally known throughout the country as "Stuttering Sam." This genius, who had a greater penchant for jokes, and, withal, a hankering after good old whisky, seldom passed a day without playing some of his tricks. On one occasion he was assisting a drover, who had charge of a large flock of sheep. It was on a Sunday afternoon, in summer, when they had occasion to pass by a country meetinghouse, whose doors were thrown open on account of the heat, that one of the sheep (as sheep will sometimes do) ran into the church. The drover, not wishing to enter in the then dilapidated state of his apparel, made up his mind to send Sam; so calling to him, he said:

"Sam, will you go in there and get out that sheep?"

"W-w-what'll you g-g-iv me if-f I d-do?" said Sam.

"A quart of prime old rye," said the drover.

"I-I'll d-do it," said Sam, and he entered the meetinghouse. The sheep, seeing him following, ran up one of the aisles till he reached the pulpit, where he was soon caught by Sam, who, seizing him by the horns, began to try to get him out.

"What are you doing there?" cried the minister, roused at length by the noise.

Sam looked over his shoulder, with a comical expression in his grey eyes, and he answered:

"Oh, n-nothing. I'm o-only s-sep-p-par-ating the s-sheep f-from the g-goats.

Notwithstanding the time and place, but few persons could refrain from indulging in a "snicker," and Sam proceeded in triumph with his sheep to the drover, who, it is needless to add, "forked over" the necessary beverage.

On another occasion Sam (who, by the way, was a sort of "Jack-of-all-trades") became in some way the possessor of an old horse, which, as regards service, was pretty well "used up," but still presented a tolerably good appearance. He was resolved to turn jockey, and try to make "an honest penny" by that means; so proceeding to a farmer's close by, he immediately proposed a trade. The farmer, who "reckoned he was some at a bargain," and had always an eye to the main chance, thought the "critter looked tolerable well," and having examined him, he asked Sam how old he was.

"S-s-seven, s-seven, seven y-years old," he managed to stammer out.

This was satisfactory, and the "swap" was made, much to the satisfaction of both parties. It was not long, however, before the farmer discovered that he was sold, and happening to speak of the horse to one who knew him, he received the intelligence that he was twenty-one years old. This put him (the farmer) into a great rage, and hastening away after Sam, he at length found that worthy, who calmly awaited his approach,

"You rascally scoundrel," exclaimed the farmer, nearly out of breath, "you hav cheated me—yes, cheated me, sir; that horse is twenty-one years old."

"I-I knew it," said Sam, never for a moment losing his self-possession. "I-I s-said h-he w-was s-s-seven, s-seven, seven y-years old, and I-I s-should l-liket-to knowif-f three times s-seven i-isn't t-twenty-one?"

The farmer, finding that nothing was to be made out of Sam, "sloped," amidst the laughter of bystanders who had collected about the place.

"OLD SI" AND THE CENSUS.

Old Si came in rather late yesterday, looking somewhat fatigued. After a minute he said:

"Dis am er moughty kurus persedin' dese men kerryin' on round hyar wid dese fortfolyos."

"Do you mean the census takers?"

"I bleeve dat ar de name dey goes by."

"What hav they been doing now?"

"W'y, dey's been down dar in my naborhood jess stirrin' up mo' rath dan all de parsons inside de kerprashun kin put down in er month."

"That is unfortunate. Hav they visited you yet?"

"Dat's what makes me so behin' time ter-day. One ob dem cum down ter my house dis mo'nin an' tap on de gate; I axed him what's de matter, and hesay ne dun come ter take mysensus; an' he haint no mo'n got hit out dan I sed to jes go 'way from dar, kase dar wan't no bizness in dat shanty fur any drummers from de loonytick 'sylums!"

"What did he say?"

"He say dat if I fools wid de sensus he done gwine to put der law ter me; an' den he 'splained de law. Den I seed it wus all right an' axed him in."

"How did you get along then?"

"We got 'long purty well ontell he cum ter de colyum whar the chillun are sot down; den he say ter me what am de cullah ob my chillun? I say, 'lookie hea, you jess figger on what de law 'lows, an' don't cum 'round hyar axing' 'suttin questions like dat!' He say he got ter put down whether dey is black or melatter—and den ole harrycane broke loose!"

"How was that?"

"De ole 'oman lissened, an' when she heah dat she opset de table whar de fortfolyo war lyin,' emptied de starch bowl all ober de returns an' 'gin ter holler: 'Heah Tiger,' jess like de forty thieves done broke in de house! De census man he grabbed up his dockyments and made for de fence, an' twixt holdin' de ole 'oman wid one han' an' Tige wid de odder I got mos' tucker'd out."

"Where did the census man go?"

"De las' I seed ob him he was up on top ob er box kyar by de Ar' Line shop dryin' out de returns ob de district on de tin roof."

"And how did you get the old lady quieted?"

"She haint quiet yit. I jess had ter make my 'scape, too, kase she was gwine for me for lettin' de man in, an' she say dat ef de United States wants ter kno' de cullah ob her chillun she are bound ter rite hit on de eye ob ebery munerashuner de sends prowlin' 'round her camp groun'! She's er vigorous 'oman, too, fer er bo'n fack!"

And the old man got up to go to the supervisor and explain matters.

Notes and Clippings.

THE canton of Geneva in a popular election decided by a majority of 5,306 votes against the separation of the church from the state.

THE lower jaw of an antediluvial mammoth was recently fished out of the river Dnieper by Russian fishermen; it is as black as a coal and weighs seventy-five pounds.

THE manufacture of sporting implements has assumed large proportions in this country. It is estimated that from 50,000 to 60,000 sets of croquet, 200,000 base ball bats, and 250,000 base balls will be made for this season's trade by a single firm in Chicago.

Truth made the following announcement a few days ago, but with how much correctness we know not. We hope it will prove true: "Col. Bob Ingersoll and Judge I. J. Noah, of Washington, are about to form a law partnership and practice in this city."

THE Mother Superior of a Roman Catholic foundling asylum at Cincinnati refused to giv the names of the women inmates, on the ground that it was her duty to shield them from publicity. She was arrested and fined, but the information was not obtained.

PASTOR Levi Johnson has no horse. This is why he walks 240 miles a month in filling his appointments with the churches at Indian Village and Shady Grove, in the state of Louisiana. His love for Jesus must be far stronger than those who cannot walk half a dozen squares in our cities and who spend two months of the warm weather in Europe or among the mountains.

FISHERMEN engaged in the Greenland fishery say they never experienced anything like the terrific ice blockade which now extends down to the fifty-second parallel of latitude. The field ice lying to the eastward of Newfoundland, the southern extremity of which now lies 120 miles distant from St. John's, is of the heaviest floe description. Thousands of icebergs are to be seen.

A DOCTRINAL unpleasantness has occurred in Wooster University, Ohio. The trustees of that institution request the resignation of the Rev. Walter Q. Scott, who has for two years been Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy. The trouble arises from the alleged holding of heretical opinions by Prof. Scott. The university is under control of the Presbyterian church, and accepts the Westminster confession of faith.

THE Baptist denomination is in a great fight over its hymn books. A number of eminent gentlemen hav made rival books of praise, and the competition between the publishers of these is so great that tons of circulars are sent out in advocacy of the various books. The ministers and church officials who are beset by the publishers of the rival books and besought to get rid of their old ones and introduce the new are becoming weary and irritable.

Now that Henry Ward Beecher has avowed his rejection of the doctrin of the Atonement, it is worth noting that the spread of Infidelity has begun to alarm the churches. Another freethinking light has recently appeared in the Presbyterian church, and is on trial before the authorities of his church for heresy. The best way for men who find themselvs in the Presbyterian church and not in sympathy with its doctrins, is the way out. Certainly the position of a man who finds himself obliged to preach with fervor a doctrin his soul rejects, is utterly unenviable, and the sooner such a one takes the manly course and quits being a hypocrit, the better for him and for all hands.—Sun.

OF our four American citizens of African descent who were hanged on Friday, Alexander Howard of North Carolina listened attentivly to the exhortations of his spiritual advisers, as was to be expected of a member of the Baptist church of twenty years' standing; Daniel Washington of South Carolina expressed a hope that he might meet his keepers and executioners in glory, and Henry Ryan of Georgia, standing under the noose, said: "When I close my eyes on this world Jesus will come for my soul." The behavior of George Allen Price of Ohio was not so edifying. He wouldn't see a preacher of any denomination, and his speech from the scaffold was a model of brevity, rather than of piety. "I've tried to liv well," he told the crowd, "and I die the best I can."

COMSTOCK has not given up falsifying yet. He recently authorized the statement to be published in the daily papers that an attempt had been made upon his life by means of poison contained in a parcel sent to him by mail or express, but instead of his, or his worthy assistant Joseph A. Britton, being affected by the poison, his phonographic reporter, Ducreet, was the unfortunate sufferer, who became very sick from the effects of the poison imbibed. It turns out that this is another of Comstock's false statements, gotten up to awaken sympathy in his behalf, and that the physicians in attendance upon the young man do not consider his sickness has any connection with any parcel designed for Comstock or anybody else. Perhaps the man of obscenity knows he is worthy of death, and is daily looking for it. It is to be hoped if any one undertakes to end the bad man's days he will not make a mistake and kill the wrong man.

TALMAGE favors vacations for ministers, because, as he says, "The minister needs rest." There is little to wonder at in this observation as applied to Talmage. It is only reasonable that his legs and arms should hav rest three months in the year. But what is it that tires Hall and Taylor and other gentlemen like them of religious leisure? We don't begrudge any of them their vacation. Far from it. We think the world would be immensely benefited were they extended indefinitly, so far as what is considered the principal duty of their office—preaching—is concerned. There are hundreds of ministers—Catholic, Protestant, and Jew—whose lives are given up to the service of others, and with whom preaching is only an indifferent incident in their occupation, whose devotion we would regret to lose. But those preachers who while away the moments of the thoughtless with vapid sermons and gratify the spleen of the over-righteous with descriptions of hell and pictures of heaven and eulogies of credulity which they call "faith," living for themselvs and careless of the temporal sufferings of others, are about as useless a band of brothers as one can easily find.—Truth.

THE MATTER IS EXPLAINED.—Previous to the Fourth of July it was extremely dry for many weeks; the hay crop was largely cut off, and the early potatoes promised a very small return. Everybody wanted rain and earnestly desired that its coming might not be delayed. When the Fourth was ushered in, bright, hot, and burning, the outlook for rain was not good; but about the middle of the afternoon a fine shower came up suddenly when 100,000 people were pleasure-seeking and trying to get cool at Coney Island, Rockaway, and other resorts. It was a mystery to many how that fine shower chanced to come. The mystery, however, is happily explained by a Brooklyn friend as follows: "During the late drouth all the churches hav united in petitioning the Throne of Grace for rain. On Sunday, July 4th, despairing of their want of success, the Methodists, attributing it to the want of faith and united effort, determined to make an extraordinary effort, and required all of the faithful to unite with the clergy in prayer to bring about the desired result. They went at it with a vim and overdid the thing, and brought on the storm in the middle of Monday afternoon, when everybody was out in their Sunday clothes, doing more damage than the drouth had done. If it were not for the pesky Methodists interfering, undoubtedly sufficient time would hav elapsed before the storm broke to hav enabled the pleasure-seekers and Sunday-school picnics to hav finished their day's festivities and return, and millions of dollars' worth of clothing would hav been saved."

THE Rev. Mr. White, of New Hampshire, has founded a religious sect called Angelic Believers. They believe in the disposition of angels to visit earth's people if they were only properly encouraged. His object is to restore the old sociability between human and angelic beings. In a sermon lately White said that it would not surprise him to hav angels call upon him at any time, and he held himself in readiness to giv them a welcome. Three boys resolved that White's faith should be rewarded. One of them borrowed three of his sister's nightgowns and got three pairs of chicken wings, which were fastened on the shoulders of the white garments. With some other fixings, by way of disguise, the boys went at night to the cottage of White. They knocked and said they were angels. He examined their wings and raiment and was satisfied. They were hungry and asked for kid. White had no kid. A fatted calf would do. White had no calf, and offered them pork, at which they turned up their noses. Some cold chicken was set before them, and hard cider, and they were enjoying the repast when Mrs. White came in. She was suspicious, and examined the flowing garments, on which she saw the name "Blodgett" marked. "Ole man," she remarked, "I've washed all three o' them nightgowns afore." The Whites locked the door, took off the angelic robes, and used up two broomsticks on the boys, and turned them out to go home like common mortals.

W. H. B. of Washington, D. C., writes to the editor of the Sun on the world's formation thus: The description of the mountains in the moon in a late article in the Sun was graphic; but I take issue with the current hypothesis that the moon or any other planet or satellite was ever any larger or hotter than it is now. It is an undisputed fact that our solar system swarms with innumerable meteorites, which are continually falling upon the planets, and thus slowly adding to their bulk. And by the law of nature that pressure produces heat, how can any one avoid the deduction that by the pressure of gravitation the core of every planet must inevitably be melted? This, and this alone, I conceive, accounts for the internal heat of planets. And, a priori, the effect produced by this internal heat would be precisely what we see on the surface of all planets. An expansion of the comparativly small melted core of the moon, caused by ages of accretion from meteorites, would create on the surface of that thick-crusted satellite deep fissures and sharp mountain peaks. Expansion of the earth's greater core and smaller proportionate crust would make its surface far less rugged than that of the moon. Jupiter, with a diameter nearly twelve times that of the earth, would doubtless hav a very thin crust, which would be red hot, and this is now believed to be the fact from telescopic observation. Our sun, with a diameter a hundred times that of the earth would become just what it is—a vast ball of liquid and gaseous fire. And may we not conceive of suns so vast in size as to throw off into space in the form of fiery gases all they receive by accretion, or perhaps even more?

THAT the world moves in thought as well as action is evidenced by the fact that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is bowling down one after another the dogmas of the church. If in his callow years of priesthood he had preached such doctrin as enunciated last Sunday he would hav been ostracised from the church and relegated to the companionship of such men as Voltaire and Tom Paine. Said Mr. Beecher on that occasion: "I don't hold the theory of the Atonement. I reject the Mosaic economy. I hold a grander theory. If the records of God's work in the infantile period of the world are applied to us, all will go over. It is a gigantic lie that men were created and then fell; that in Adam and Eve the human race fell. The system of the Old Testament is not the system for to-day." There is nothing very wonderful in Mr. Beecher's holding such sentiments, or even in his preaching them. He is nothing if not sensational, and besides, his worldly conduct has given assurance of broader ideas than recognized in the narrow pale of the orthodox church. But it is notable, and strangely so, that the immense congregation of Christians over which he presides should calmly receive and indorse such unorthodox views. Time was, and not so very long ago, when Mr. Beecher's clerical ancestors would hav willingly stretched a rope for any heathen who whispered them in private, much less than giving them tongue in Plymouth pulpit. Surely if old Lyman's corpse could hear them he would shudder in his grave. Can it be that the gospel of Bob Ingersoll is to become the new dispensation of the age in which we liv? When pulpits capitulate there is surely cause for alarm. Are Darwin and Huxley to usurp the niches of the saints? Verily, as far as Mr. Beecher's congregation is concerned, it is not at all unlikely.—Truth.

Prof. J. H. W. Toohey on Our New Work.

THE GODS AND RELIGIONS OF ANCIENT AND MODERN TIMES. By D. M. Bennett. In two volumes. Volume I. New York Liberal and Scientific Publishing House. 1880.

Custom may still be the drill-sergeant of society, as Bacon said it was in his day, and the usages of custom may still keep watch over the conventional regulations of church and state, nevertheless the activities of the intellect and the evolutions of thought will make those very regulations minister to the growth of intelligence and the practicalities of reform. The penitentiary may confine the body, but it does not control the mind; on the contrary, from a law of mentality, it becomes the nursery of thought and the home of most heroic resolves.

This has "many a time and oft" been said in story and sung in song, but the presence of 835 pages of thoughtfully prepared and carefully constructed argument is most convincing proof. At any time within the history of printing the presence of such a work, with much less letter-press accuracy and book-making finish, would be an event of significant import as honorable to art and enterprise as the contents are worthy of the thinker and the occasion. The work has an additional claim, however, on the student looking for 'the last analysis,' and that should not be lost sight of. It belongs to the authorship rather than the printing of the book, and is thus stated in the preface: "The work has been written under some disadvantages—in prison and in the hospital belonging thereto, surrounded by sick and dying men of various nationalities, colors, and crimes; sometimes twenty of us in a single room, and a portion of the time when my own health was so much impaired as to unfit me for writing."

Such conditions, it may be acknowledged without offense to the unfortunate inmates of the prison, were poor preparativs, if not bad qualities, for so large and laborious an undertaking, particularly when the writer is constrained to add, "I hav not had by me many works I would gladly hav consulted." Naturally enough, the author expects the "reader will make due allowance for such imperfection as he may observe."

This, under the commonest considerations of authorship, would only be the exercise of a courtesy by the reader due to a well-known author; but the circumstances attending the composition of this volume are so marked and peculiar as to call for the exercise of more than common civility, since the sufferings of Mr. Bennett in prison, as well as his persecutions for editing an anti-ecclesiastical paper and selling a critical pamphlet on marriage, hav been of such a character as to appeal to the kindlier sympathies of all who know them. To restate them here is unnecessary, as they are well known and appreciated by the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but the following descriptiv analysis of the stages of those persecutions may be worth remembering, particularly in the light of more recent attacks on his character, for what Byron wrote of his suffering is here and now as fully appropriate. He says:

"Hear me, my mother earth! Behold it heaven!
Hav I not suffered things to be forgiven?
Hav I not had my brain seared, my heart riven,
Hopes sapped, name blighted, life's life lied away?
And only not to desperation driven
Because not altogether of such clay
As . . ?"

But the closing reflection can be dispensed with, as it is not worthy of the reformer.

Personal considerations apart, the very presence of this volume recalls the memories of very many men whose writings hav enriched the literature of the world, while the authors were the victims of persecution or the inmates of government prisons. Individuals, like Hamlet's father, hav occasionally failed to write much while in their prison homes, but Mr. Bennett has been more fortunate. Few persons hav written more, under the circumstances, though each and all hav contributed to the literature of the times. Even religionists hav improved the occasion to gain advantage by their publications, and "the visions of the revelator," as well as the fancies of the allegorist, hav been pressed into the service of forming and reforming the thought of the age and the ages. From the times of St. John and St. Bunyan to those of Thomas Paine and D. M. Bennett, the necessities of the reformer hav been the same. In a more secular sense, the ever-returning criticisms of the patriot, the enlightened statesman, the heroic poet, and the social revolutionist hav all aided in exposing the barbarities of custom and the cruelties of law while in many cases the authors were confined in the common jail or the more aristocratic bastile. Representativ men and noble women they were, but, nevertheless, men and women marked by their limitations as well as their aspirations and attainments. Their characteristics are known, and appreciated accordingly, for the wrongs they suffered, as well as the labors for which they toiled, went hand in hand with their integrity to delegated trusts, building up the most sacred confidence of mankind. A truly catholic union of heroic men and noble women! Toilers whose living and dying pleas for humanity hav made the literature of the world emotional, its philosophy fraternal, and its rallying cries for all coming time progressiv!

Thanks to the wealth of nature, their presence has been recognized and the beneficence of their ministrations acknowledged in all times and climes. Their prominence in history, like the mountains in space, enables them to catch the first glimpse of the incoming day and reflect its glories when gathering darkness obscures the visions of smaller men. Even Christians, with an "Almighty God," a "special providence," and "a peculiar people," are deeply indebted to this vitalizing impulse of reforming thought for new life with an improving moralism and a triumphant science. No doubt extremes of character hav met and mingled in this fraternity of effort, and men far removed from the likings of each other by nationality, education, and personal policies, like Voltaire and Cobbett, hav united in criticising the governments of their day—condemning a civilization that knew no better way of rewarding the friends of the people and the reformers of old abuses than to confine them in filthy prisons or hang them upon "the felon's tree."

The significant truth underlying these general statements is in condemnation of the common policy of relying upon the prison punishments of time and the prominent tortures of eternity for the suppression of original thought and the support of commonplace. Experience many times repeated has demonstrated this folly to be as short-sighted in the light of history as it is "heartless" and vindictiv in the hour of trial, the condemnation of which is always intensified in proportion as the sufferings of the prisoner are unmerited and the punishment severe. If this intensified criticism does not appear in the present writings of Mr. Bennett, that fact does not lessen the righteousness of the judgment nor destroy the logic of the argument, for exceptional circumstances brought the author within the circle where "two noble women" were permitted to minister to his needs and help him as they had helped others to make the most and the best of hospital life. All honor to them! May they liv long to do likewise, and more abundantly should it be necessary! But even that, and all that, will only prove the benefits of a more humane and a less rigorous system of prison disciplin, ignoring the short-sighted policy of mere sectarian legislation. The lovers of prison disciplin will be slow, no doubt, in drawing that conclusion, but they may improve their senses, if they do not alter their practice, by reflecting that if D. M. Bennett could and did so utilize his talents in the Albany Penitentiary as to write a two-volume work of more than average merit and ability in such a place, amid such surroundings and associations, the larger part of the so-called "dangerous classes" might be improved if helped in the right direction before or after conventional law made them criminal. But that, in all probability, would look too much like reforming the system, and that will not be thought of so long as public and ecclesiastical opinion agree in supporting "the insolvence of office" and "the laws of delay," nevertheless the protests of the reformer

". . . sways the future.
Behind the dread unknown
Live the ever-present Nemesis.
Keeping watch above her own;"

and Christian governments no more than private individuals, will escape the consequences of wrongdoing, though the presiding divinity is supposed to be feminin and of "heathen" origin.

A new class of thinkers, however, hav come to the front, and they may, all in good time, improve upon the experiences of "the priesthood." Old things are fast passing away, making room for new measures and better men. The difference between the two—and the distance separating the old from the new—will depend upon the amount, as well as the kind, of education "given to the people," and the willingness of the so-called "wealthy classes" to comply with the requirements of justice and conform to some standard essential to individual and national honor. The new thinkers are now known as astronomers, ethnologists, geologists, chemists, anatomists, physiologists, phrenologists, anthropologists, and other qualified naturalists. They are the servants of the intellect and the interpreters of nature, all of whom rely upon the ministrations of time and the reforming power of observation and thought for the successful separation of the modern from the ancient worshiper.

These qualifiers of the mind level all false distinctions, and logically "lay the shepherd's crook beside the scepter." They demand obedience, and compel even ministers of the gospel to publish the truth. That is doing much, considering their "kingdom is not of this world" and their logic the logic of "a peculiar people." Nevertheless they hav changed, are changing, and will continue to change until they learn that truth is a unit and logic no respecter of persons; until they publish and teach the truth about "the heathen gods" and the ancient religions. But here, and on this point, it is best to let the clergy speak for the truth-loving spirit of "the order." Here is the opening sentence of the Rev. J. B. Gross, in introducing his view of "the heathen religion." He writes, "Perhaps on no subject within the ample range of human knowledge hav so many fallacious ideas been propagated as upon that of the gods and the worship of heathen antiquity;" and he accounts for this barbarism in theology by adding that "nothing but a shameful ignorance and pitiable prejudice, or the most contemptible pride . . . could thus hav misrepresented the theology of heathenism and distorted—nay, caricatured—its forms of religious worship."

This is forcible, and, if it stood alone, the reader might question its truthfulness, notwithstanding its ministerial origin, so the following is added. It is the testimony of Max Müller, a witness so kindly disposed to the truth that even Mr. Bennett quotes him. He says: "No judge, if he had before him the worst of criminals, would treat him as most historians and theologians hav treated the religions of the world. . . . And this is not done by accident, but with a set purpose; nay, with something of that artificial sense of duty which stimulates the council on the other side to see nothing but an angel in the plaintiff. The result has been, and it could not be otherwise, a complete miscarriage of justice and an utter misapprehension of the real character and purpose of the ancient religions of mankind" (Science of Religion, Fourth Lecture).

Before and since 1856 and 1870, when these acknowledgments were given to the public, the secular scholarship of Europe and America had been activ in correcting the misrepresentations of the clergy, and the equally misleading, but more honest, blunders of their religious sympathizers. The fundamental principles of such writers as the Jesuit Kircher, Dupuis, Godfrey Higgins, Benjamin Constant, O'Brien, Jonathan Duncan, W. R. Mackay, and S. F. Dunlap had been generalized into the more popular literature of the day by the essayist and the reviewer, while religious and anti-religious authors like the Rev. Henry Christmas and the ex-Rev. Robert Taylor gave the pros and cons of their polemical picture. Later, the naturalistic and scientific school of Dr. S. G. Morton, Nott, Gliddon, Agassiz, Lyell, Lubbock, Buckle, and Draper came to the front to continue the correction of the clergy and the religious press, and point out for nearly the first time to an English-reading public the eminent importance of pre-historic studies. The essential outlook of these authors is revolutionary, and is well stated by Carl Vogt when he says: "The opening of a single grave containing a well-preserved skeleton, arms, and ornaments affords more information as regards the physical and mental condition of the people to whom the exhumed belonged than ten authors of antiquity who may hav described that people. It is only by degrees that we hav been led to search for a proper basis on which to found the science of men" (Lectures, etc., London, 1864, pp. 5, 6).

This brief statement about the growth and application of secular scholarship to the religions of the world will enable the reader to understand the reason why the clergy were complained of by Max Müller and other qualified critics, so late as 1870, and prepare the way for a better appreciation of Mr. Bennett's "Introduction," as he therein recognizes the services of this class of industrious students and distinguished thinkers, by reproducing their fundamental conclusions regarding the beginning of life and the conditions attending the development of mind, when man first became a worshiper and the maker of gods. The fundamental position is forcibly stated by Professor Steffens, when he says, "Man is wholly a product from the hands of nature. Only in his being this wholly, not partly, but wholly, do we confess that in him nature centers all her mysteries. And so it became plain to me that natural science is bringing a new element into history, which is to become the basis of all knowledge of our race. History and nature must be in perfect concord, for they are really one. Nature's highest and completest manifestations are in the deeds of history" (The Story of my Career: Boston edition, 1863, p. 100).

Scholarly analysis, biblical research, and Buddhistic erudition hav thus far united to correct the ignorance and chastise the insolence of Christendom, in making known the rich trains of thought, subtle reasoning, far reaching fancies, and singular analogies that enter into the "learning," scholarship, traditions, and superstitions of the East, all of which reflect the conceits of its spiritualism, the refinements of its metaphysics, and the poetic delicacy of its mysticism. Out of this storehouse of mental wealth and perplexing assumption the student of today has drawn those humanizing conclusions which help Mr. Bennett in his effort to popularize the nature, habits, and characteristics of the gods. And this, it should be understood, is not done for the exclusiv benefit of the Christian, though the contrast and resemblance of the religious usages of Christian and non-christian nations hav been made prominent

No! There is a far more general purpose and a much higher motiv, both of which will enable the reader to find in it the generous and liberal spirit of the educator, rather than the mere personal conceits of the skeptic and the fault-finder.

This last consideration is wholly in the favor of Mr. Bennett's conception of the work to be done, whatever of imperfection may appear in the execution. The outlook of the book is comprehensiv, full of desirable information and circumstantial knowledge; a discriminativ rather than a mere critical spirit guiding the pen and humanizing its pictures and conclusions. The theory of the book—if it has one—is made to conform to the logic of events and the larger scholarship of thoughtful and serious-minded men and women who hav written upon the same points. The composition is therefore essentially historic and descriptiv and the language easy and flowing. Realistic rather than romantic, Mr. Bennett appears as ready as willing to correct the disfigurements which sectarianism and missionary zeal hav added to the peculiarities of the Eastern worshiper; and in dealing with their gods he is earnest without being irreverent, and shows an appreciativ spirit for the more human and ennobling characteristics of the lesser as well as the larger celestials.

That long and argumentativ extracts of a bolder and a more radical character enter into the make-up of the work is its merit rather than its fault, considering the authority for the same is generally supported by a well-earned reputation for scholarship and a large familiarity with the mythologies of the East or the biblical mystifications of the West. It is therefore a credit to the work and a modesty in the man that it is so; and what makes the merit all the more noticeable is the fact that the author rarely forgets to giv credit where credit is due—two good points in the interest of fair-dealing not always appreciated by men and women in love with themselvs and notoriety. Had the name of the book and the page or pages from which the extracts had been taken also been given, the readers would hav been helped and the authors fully satisfied.

The dedication of the work to "two noble women," shows the promptness with which the author returns kindness for kindness and the superiority of the writer to the enforced humiliations of the hour. True, he had many and illustrious examples in paying this deference to woman, and may be charged with following the lead of such men as Henry Thomas Buckle, who dedicated "History of Civilization" to his mother; of John Stuart Mill, who so feelingly gave the credit of his work "On Liberty," to his wife; of Earnest Renan, who so tenderly dedicated his "Life of Jesus" "to the pure spirit of his sister;" of Theodore Parker, who so reverently associates the name and ministrations of his wife with his book of "Prayers," and many others, who in one form or another hav so honored woman; but the noticeable feature in Mr. Bennett's case is that he subordinates consanguinity to humanity, and makes the memory of his sufferings minister to the worth of "two noble women," who in the hour of sickness and sorrow sympathized with him as a human being. His dedication is, therefore, as manly as it is just in principle and generous in sentiment, and teaches a lesson which all true Liberals will delight to own and imitate.

The "Introduction" is one of the most instructiv parts of the work. Its detail of the phenomena that enter into the formation of the earth, the growth of vegetation, the formation of coal, and the beginnings of life is not the detail of the chemist, the geologist, or the biologist, but it is such as enables him to generalize on the ministrations of time, and demonstrate the slow growth and vast antiquity of the planet. The circumstantial and methodical proof submitted, and extracted from the writings of Professor Draper, must prove instructiv to those not already familiar with the richness of his diction and the comprehensivness of his reasoning; but even these will find new significance in reading them again, as the argument is both novel and convincing in the interest of the American continent and people. The full development of the necessary argument to demonstrate that America is the old world did not come within the limits of the "Introduction," and the subject-matter does not fellowship with the after parts of the volume; nevertheless, enough is given to the reader to satisfy the logical demands of the issue so far as it relates to the age of the earth and the early beginnings of human life on this continent. The wonder will be with most readers, that Mr. Bennett could make any further use of the common theory of man's first appearing in central Asia when he has so far convinced himself and his readers that the geological formations and developments of America are older and possibly much more ancient than the kindred phenomena of Europe. The logic of these events, and such other evolutionary necessities as are known to belong to the beginning of life on this planet, enforce the conclusion that the family of man commenced where and when the conditions for that existence are found to hav existed. In fact, the conclusion has been suggested more than once, and only waits the further and larger geological evidence to make it theoretically true, that "it is quite as likely that the Asiatic man may be derived from America as the reverse, or that both may hav had a common origin in places now covered by the sea."*

To the same reformatory conclusion tends the brief but graphic picture of Madame Michelet on pages 32 and 33, and the representation might hav been enlarged without marring the rich variety of the scene, or exhausting the scientific suggestivness of the locality. Brief, however, as is her description of these "Mauvaises Terres" (or bad lands), as they are commonly named, the significance of the fact and the wonderfulness of the accompanying phenomena are obvious, as soon as the essential detail is known and appreciated. Their presence is acknowledged, and western Nebraska is known to be the locale of this enchanted ground; and yet the non-professional reader may smile at the scientific importance attached to them, so little is known of the sources and resources of geological and biological wealth in the country. Madame Michelet will be pardoned, however, if she taxes the credulity of the reader, when it is once known that these so-called "bad lands," hav become more than a land of promis to the scientific explorer, as they hav already furnished the necessary evidence that givs to America pre-eminence in biologic discovery, changing the doctrin of evolution from a theory to a science. This was the acknowledgment of Prof. Huxley when lecturing in this country, and it is fast becoming the conviction of all who find the time to learn that "this region has furnished twelve distinct species of the horse, ranging from the size of a Newfoundland dog to that of the largest horse," proving North America to be the true home of the charger, notwithstanding a previous discovery in South America by Darwin.

The scientific value of these and kindred facts hav been before the American public since 1872, but their full importance has not been sufficiently insisted upon. "The conspiracy of silence" that keeps back the growth and influence of geologic and prehistoric truth, that ecclesiasticism may continue to liv, is still powerful; but a more rigorous survey and a better classification of the phenomena of "the bad lands" must sooner or later explain the prehistoric conditions of the far West, and giv the same† kind of convincing evidence for the origin and development of the man family on this continent that has already appeared for the beginnings and perfection of the horse.

A full consideration of the closing part of the "Introduction" will more appropriately come up for examination in connection with the contents of the second volume. For scientific purposes it would hav been more in keeping with the order of developed life, the growth of history and the improvements of scholarship, had the analysis commenced with the religions of mankind, since it is now acknowledged that human and non-human nature hav been the authors and finishers of the gods, though an honest god is still considered the noblest work of man. This change in logical relationship would help the student of comparativ religion to account for the make, shape, sex, and other peculiarities of the god or gods, and make mythology and theology branches of anthropology. The outlook would then be into geologic, climatic, and other localizing considerations—nature and history, not metaphysics and "revelation," being the father and mother of the gods. The information and scholarship with which the "Introduction" closes is none the less valuable however, and should be studied attentivly by all who care to know how naturally men and women taught as a child, spoke as children, and understood as "babes in Christ," before they learned to "put away childish things."

Nearly two-thirds of the volume, or 557 pages, is occupied with descriptions of the characteristics and occupations of the gods and goddesses. They form an assemblage of singular names and queer histories, the family being large and its numbers peculiarly individualistic. In their day and way they were important, if not powerful, but now they are remembered more for what they were than what they are. This is considered a mystery by some, and a part of "the plan of salvation" by others, but it is none the less a cause of regret to large and "respectable" circles of priestly men and women. Sympathy for "fallen greatness" may account for this professional lamentation, as "the fall of one" is supposed to hav brought chaos back again, notwithstanding the "almighty wisdom and power" of one of "the mightiest" of the gods. Here, as elsewhere, like causes produce the same effects, and a fall from "reputation," and a loss in character is injurious even to a god. It may be wise or it may be otherwise, but Time is notorious for working such wonders and taking such liberties, and bodies celestial, who will do things "of the earth earthly," must conform to the consequences. Doubtless there are good and sufficient reasons for the change, as few among the moderns any longer see gods in clouds or hear them in the wind. They even doubt the propriety of saying, "the voice of the people is the voice of God," whatever politicians may insinuate in its support after their election. Enough of the worshipful, however, remains to support the pretensions of the credulous and convince the reformers anew that time is still an essential factor in the destruction of the old as in the growth of the new, since here and now, in Christendom and the nineteenth century as in all past ages, the ignorant worshiper will persist in making his god as wilful, impulsiv, passionate, inconsistent, and selfish as himself.

The family of the gods, as presented by Mr. Bennett, is not as large as it might be, but large enough for a fair and logical comparison of the characteristics of the superior and inferior deities of the Hindoos, the Brahmans, the Persians, and Chaldeans. Those of Egypt, China, Greece, and Rome follow, family relations and supposed ethnological resemblances supporting the association, the gods of the Norsemen and the savages closing the first division. The second part of the first branch of the celestials commences and ends with a description of "the gods of the Semitic races." A little less than one hundred pages is occupied with this survey, and is by far the fullest and most interesting part of the general discussion. The reason assigned by Mr. Bennett for making this distinction among the gods is thus stated, and is worthy of a moment's consideration. He says, "It was deemed better to first treat the gods of polytheism before taking up the Semitic races, some of whom ultimately became believers in monotheism" (p. 503), that is, the same ends will be accomplished more directly by departing a little from "the chronological order of the gods" than by strictly following the line of historic development. Besides, a more critical consideration will "be given to the gods who hav attracted a large share of attention in our own country" (Ib).

For the purposes specified this is a good division enough, and may be the means of concentrating a large amount of biblical criticism; but monotheism, "pure and simple," is so much the offspring of modern thought, and was so little known to the ancients that any and all attempts to fix upon historic theism outside of Christianity has failed, and what that amounts to is now under discussion. The assumption of Christendom that a "revelation" was given to a "peculiar people," and the worship of "the one, only true, and ever present God," established for all time, has defeated itself by its conflict of creeds and the antagonism of its churches. Besides, recent archæological discoveries justify the conclusion that "the time has passed in which we can pretend to account for the religious and philosophic systems of divers peoples by successiv and universal borrowings. This was little other than a facil means of ascending to a pretended primitiv

* As a critical justification of text would require more space than a review article on another subject will permit of, the statements must pass for the present as merely suggestiv; at the same time the following report from the Boston Herald may interest the "curious" as well as the critical:

"THE AMERICAN ABORIGINES.

"In his lectures on the comparativ anatomy of man, Prof. Fowler shows that until recently two views were held as to the peopling of this continent. First, that the people of America were indigenous, created in the country in which they lived and, therefore, not related to those of any other land. This view is not generally, if at all, held by scientific men of the present day. Second, that the inhabitants of America were descended from an Asiatic race, and had in comparativly recent time, passed into America by way of Behring strait, and thence spread gradually over the whole continent as far as Cape Horn. The discovery of the great antiquity of the human race in America, as well as in the old world, has led to an important modification of these theories. The proof of the very high antiquity of the race in America rests upon the high and independent state of civilization attained by the Mexicans and Peruvians at the time of the Spanish conquest, and the evidence that that civilization had been preceded by other stages of culture, following in succession through a great stretch of time; but the antiquity of the quasi-historical period thus brought out is entirely thrown into the shade by the evidence now accumulating from various parts of the United States, Central America, and the Pampas that man existed in those countries under the same conditions of life, using precisely the same weapons and tools as in Europe during the pleistocene period, and perhaps even further back in time. If the inductions commonly made from these discoveries be accepted, and the fact admitted that man lived both in Europe and America before the earth had assumed its present geographical conformation, the data from which the problem of the peopling of America is to be solved are altogether changed. It is quite as likely that Asiatic man may be derived from America as the reverse, or both may hav had a common origin in places now covered by the sea."

† The following extract from a late lecture of Judge E P. West, as reported in the Mirror of Progress, June 5, 1880, will illustrate the amount and kind of evidence the great far West will giv at no distant day in support of the statement that America is the birth-place of "the primitiv man," and the trial-ground for his first efforts at civilization. The Judge says: "In the environment of the confluence of Clear Creek, Mud Creek, and Cottonwood, in the vicinity of Marion Centre, there is evidence of three distinct races, which preceded our present civilization. Evidence of the most recent (kind?) is to be found in the burial places of our modern Indians; next, a hundred or more of low mounds, or burrows containing human remains, such as fragments of pottery, stone, and bone implements, ashes, charcoal, burnt clay, stone pipes, and human bones, testify to a great antiquity; and evidence of the remaining and most ancient race is to be found in human remains without anything whatever on the surface to indicate their presence."

revelation." This is the testimony of Jules Loury, whose argument culminates in acknowledging that "a contrary doctrin has gained the day in science," and that "there are three distinct gods in the Bible . . . El Baal, Molech, and Jehovah being frequently confounded one with another." Illustrations are given to show that "no phenomena is more common in the history of religions than the appearance of new gods which dethrone the old. Thus among the Hindoos and the Greeks Varuna fades gradually before Indra, Ouranos before Zeus. But if the old divinities no longer govern, they always reign. The god El, whose name we find everywhere in the Bible, especially in the poetic books, did not disappear before Jah, nor before the other gods or Elohim of the Semitic pantheon, but he is no longer the national god, the tutelar divinity of the confederate tribes of Israel." The same international polytheism has been found in all the branches of the Semitic family, and "the veneration for El-Il, Elohim, Baal, Azer, Meloch, Adon, Jah, Jehu, Jaho, and Jahve which was shown by the Hebrews, was not perceptivly discordant with that entertained by other Shemitic races." This is the conclusion of Dr. Thomas Inman, of London, after a protracted and scholarly study of the "ancient faiths," and the excessiv veneration he found bestowed upon the superior representativs of the polytheistic temples, groves, and altar places continued to characterize the emotional worshiper and devout Jew so late as the New Testament times. Even Jesus is reported to hav called upon "Eli, Eli" in his dying agonies, and "some" of the people not understanding his language or his thought, supposed him calling for Elias (Matt. xxvii, 46, 47).

Phrenology.

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY. by F. E Aspinwall, M.D. Published by D. M. Bennett, New York.

This is a neat and modest volume of 105 pages, and makes a comprehensiv outline of that part of mental philosophy known as phrenology. It is just the handy book needed by all who desire to learn something of the elements of that very interesting and instructiv science, and who hav not the time to giv to more extensiv works on the subject; and it is especially adapted to the use of the practical phrenologist, or those intending to become such.

From the preface to the last "thought about marriage" in the appendix may be found many words of wisdom, and its perusal cannot fail to benefit all who wish to know themselvs—as well as their neighbors—and what faculties require restraint or cultivation, what their abilities or adaptation to pursuits of business, according to the laws of phrenology.

Concerning the Brussels Congress.

Without needlessly intruding my private affairs, it seems fit to say a word on my connection with the delegation to the Brussels Congress of Freethinkers. I was addressed by the Committee at Brussels and requested to act, and feeling it to be a good work, hav done all that was possible in the case. I offered to go in the event of no one else attending who could and would do the work of a delegate in ably representing the condition and prospects of Freethinkers in the United States. As yet no one capable of doing that work has consented to go, although I hav written to each so-called leader, from Ingersoll through a long list. The answers are similar to those in the famous wedding reported in the gospels, where every invited guest had an excuse. I had no power to force any one to go, but I hav made up the number to ten by persistent effort, even if Mr. Frothingham declines to serve, for there are several Liberals who hav lately gone to Europe who will count one at least if wanted. The literary element has been appealed to, and, so far, with few results that are practically useful. So few know what to write for such an occasion. I receive MS. enough to edit a daily paper, but containing scarcely one per cent of materials for a paper on any one of the topics set down in the Brussels program. "The great leaders" again in this matter tendered their excuses. Some had quarrels to take care of, others had—well, I hav no time to repeat such items, but the friends of the cause may demand them some day. It is not rational to expect that a "Liberal leader," no matter what role he leads in, as writer, speaker, or what else, can keep the respect and confidence of the Liberal public without some sacrifice in the cause that is free from a personal color. Perhaps the cause is too new for much heroism of this kind.

And now my position. My offer to go was conditional. The offer has been indorsed by over 150 Leagues and 198 other Liberal societies, and been snubbed by one woodennutmegy leaving a respectable majority in my favor. Mr. Bennett has as many, or more, some preferring his name to mine. President Wright and some others think the time and money could be better used on this side the ocean. Their words may prove true, but just now the Brussels Congress seems to me a good thing for the general cause of Liberalism.

That my friends may judge of my personal interest in the case, I offer a few words of advice, as the business men say. I am busy with the illustrations for three important books (including the one on the Egyptian obelisk), am editing and illustrating a new Bible dictionary for the largest Catholic publishing house in the country, furnishing text and pictures, and hav many other engagements, besides the correspondence for the National Liberal League, and am working from 6 A.M. to 11 P M. daily. If I go to Brussels the dictionary will stand still until my return, at the publisher's, the printer's, and at my loss. Much work will be lost to me altogether by my absence, for some publishers cannot wait, wishing to hav books ready for the fall season. The money sent in so far is not half enough to pay expenses for one, and that one, I think, ought to be Mr. Bennett; so, if I go, I must pay my own expenses. Now, if any one sees any particular seeking for the honors of a delegate in me, a strong case of vision is made apparent. The Leagues are to-day 199, but they hav not as yet learned the luxury of sacrifice for the general good of the cause. Only a few see that source of present happiness, and their offers, though free and generous according to their means, are so far very moderate. The wealthy, the well to-do, and those who liv by the Liberal public, hav not responded.

Asking too Much.—Another Camp-Meeting Promised.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I think the good Liberals of the Northwest are asking a little too much of me when, after getting up the best Liberal camp-meeting that has ever been held in Illinois, devoting three consecutiv weeks to the undertaking, taking all of the chances of making the meeting a success or failure, and establishing the practicability of running Liberal camp-meetings on the principle of a broad Liberal platform, open to all phases of Liberal thought, and getting together six good speakers, some of whom were as able and eloquent as any we hav in our whole country, they expect me to devote another week to writing up a full report of the meeting and the many excellent speeches enunciated, for the various Liberal papers in the country, for those who did not take interest enough in the meeting to attend, thinking that they would hav the privilege of reading at home the more than twenty addresses delivered during the Belvidere Camp-meeting, both on the Fair Grounds and in Adelphi Hall in the town. I cannot help thinking that this is expecting a little too much of one person. Again, it would savor a little too much of egotism for me to do so. But this I will say, The Belvidere meeting, in all its distinctiv features, was an entire success, and those who attended it expressed themselvs well repaid for the time, trouble, and expense of attending, though some came hundreds of miles. All of the different phases of Liberal thought were freely discussed, pro and con, and that, too, in an earnest but most friendly manner, without the least jar, discord, or unfriendly feeling. The attendance was not so large as I could hav wished it to be, but during a portion of the time there was about a thousand persons in attendance, but there were plenty of accommodations for several thousands more on the beautiful and capacious Fair Grounds. I humbly ask THE TRUTH SEEKER to publish this in order to save me the trouble of attempting to answer the numerous letters sent me inquiring in regard to the meeting, for I hav my hands too ful of other business to do so, as I am now planning work for myself and others who are interested in augmenting the number of auxiliary Liberal Leagues in the state of Illinois—a matter which hitherto has been most lamentably neglected. In the mean time, if conditions prove favorable, I hope to be able to get up another camp-meeting sometime between the 15th of August and the 15th of September, somewhere in the vicinity of Geneva Lake, Wis., and if I do I hope everybody will come and that none will stay through a fear of discord on account of the diversity of sentiment entertained by the various speakers engaged for the occasion. And, the weather proving favorable, I promis all who come an enjoyable time long to be remembered.

These camp-meetings are calculated to do an untold amount of good to our Liberal cause, and all who attend them go away vastly better prepared to do battle for the cause of universal mental, political, and religious liberty.

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 3.

BY ELMINA D. SLENKER.

One of the greatest causes of sexual intemperance is the want of some more engrossing occupation for the mind. So many people get tired of the monotony of every-day life and need something to lift them up out of themselvs. If the thoughts and intellectual faculties could be interested in some pleasing and useful study or thought, such as botany, painting, music, natural philosophy, floriculture, horticulture, or fancy gardening, and one or several of these occupations or pursuits be taken up as work or recreation, life would be so full of something to do that no time would be left to be spent in excesses of mere sensual gratification and mere passional feeling. Keep busy and you will rarely feel a need for unhealthful and pernicious stimulants. Keep brain, as well as hands, at work, and all your feelings will harmonize into a full, complete, and perfectly rounded life.

To create a new era of sexual purity, the young and would-be mother must begin with her first thought of maternity and resolutely repress, control, and govern herself by not giving way to or cultivating mere sexual feeling, but she must strive for a pure, true friendship toward her husband instead of a sensual, passionate amativness that seeks in momentary gratification a mere bodily pleasure that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred injures both the mental and physical health. Cultivate a love that animates, cheers, brightens, and refines; one that stimulates to all good and noble deeds; that seeks the highest good and present happiness of the beloved. Be pure, that your children may not inherit lustful desires. No parent has any more right to fasten a passionate sexual nature upon his child's organization than he has that of a craving for intoxicating drink or any other brutalizing, degrading appetite. Remember, then, O fathers and mothers, and be temperate, lest your sins be visited upon your children, even to the tenth generation.

The first, best, and highest right of a child is that it shall be born well—born pure and clean, mentally and physically. If bad seed is sown, good fruit cannot be the increase. And when you hav given your child its true and legitimate inheritance of a sound mind in a healthy body, the next step is to teach by precept and example the little ones, as early as practicable, to be pure in thought and deed. Teach them physiology as the most important of all sciences; sexual physiology, as well as that of other organs and their functions. Make the study of their bodies so plain and simple to their understanding that they shall know themselvs. Be as explicit in your teachings concerning their organs as you are about those of the plants and flowers you show them how to analyze in their botanical researches. Why should there be any more obscenity connected with the idea of male and female organs in ourselvs than in those of the plants we dissect and explain to our children? We show them the stamens, the pistil, the anthers, the stigma, the pollen, and the ovary, and tell them the nature and uses of each part, and never connect an impure idea or thought with the important sexual lesson. We teach tham all about hybridizing plants and animals, of pure stock, etc., but when we reach stirpiculture, the most important study of all, there is a sudden blank, a dread wall of oblivion, that veils and hides the great and mysterious science of sciences. Few dare lift the veil and look at what is hidden behind; and if now and then one does take a furtiv, sly peep, he is careful never to let it be known; he does not tell a starving, ignorant, and diseased world of the glories that might be won by boldly entering into and explaining this ungleaned field of hidden facts. Not till we tear down this wall and throw aside the veil of false prudery and affected modesty and let in the clear light of day upon every corner and hidden recess will real purity find an abiding place in our homes.

Darkness and secrecy belong to the ignorant and benighted past. Open lives, open words, open doors, and open windows are the demands of civilization, culture, and refinement.

More light, more light, and still more, is the cry of this age. Not the rushlight of the past, nor the tallow dip, nor oil lamps, nor gas lights will now answer, but the great blazing calcium light, and Edison's electric light, that almost rivals in brilliancy even the sun itself.

Every secret society with the mystical grip and enigmatical password and private meetings is doomed. Every hidden thing that will not stand the test of the clear, searching influence of the light of knowledge and science is doomed. The dark and hidden cloister of the convent, the vile dens of social iniquity, the damp and moldy cellars where vice and crime slink away and hide themselves, and even lofty marble palaces and kingly halls where gold, tithes, and honors created tyrants and oppressors, who liv by spoiling others, shall one and all giv up their secrets to the world, beneath the searching lights of an ever growing and ever progressiv race of thinkers and workers for truth, purity, and happiness. The glorious fire stolen by the great and good Promethean god still burns in the heart of all reformers, and it will continue to glow and burn till the last trace of sensual passion, of intemperate sexuality, is burned out of the race, and love, pure and clean, reigns queen of a redeemed world.

. . . . Now and then a bright
Celestial radiance givs a pure delight.
A deathless promis for the ages dim;
And so I hope through all the struggle grim,
That my great gift may prove a heavenly grace,
Though now its glory seems but to abase;
Still whether it may bloom in fruitage grand,
Or be a curse I'll not repent my stand.
I did what the eternal right proclaimed,
And am not, therefore, of the deed ashamed;
Though to my sight it may in ruin end,
My conscience ever will the act commend.

Olla Podrida.

Is Bro. H. L. G. exactly sure that Truth would support a ticket such as true reformers could conscienciously work for? What honest Liberal could vote for U. S. Grant? and yet Truth esteemed him "The noblest Roman of them all."

What next? Well, Bro. Tee Cee Lee, suppose that you turn your attention to the press of this country which has nothing but sneers and cruel taunts for every friend of the people and every movement in behalf of liberty, both in America and Europe. Defend the Nihilist, the Communist, the Social Democrats, and the Labor Reformers against the infernally mean assaults of a press which never speaks for the right—save that right has the sanction of the state and Mrs. Grundy—and consequently never speaks.

Cannot we have some Union Reform Conventions, such as stir the depths at Princeton, in other parts of the country? Let us sustain our platform.

Says H. L. G. to St. Francis: "And now that I am trying to engage the very best Liberal speakers to be had, you also condemn me." Let us amend this so that there will be no admissions, and make it express exactly what we mean: "And now that I am trying to engage what you esteem the very best," etc.

What business had Abbot to meddle with the Hornellsville Convention? He long since forfeited every right to take any part in such things, and instead of taking pains to deny his statements, he should have been curtly told that the social or any other beliefs of those who were getting up that meeting were none of his business; that it was no affair of his or of the world. By denying the facts alleged in such impertinent queries we in fact admit the intolerant's right to question. This we should never do. Neither deny nor affirm. Give the impudent Paul Pry the rebuke he merits, tersely embodied in "mind your own business."

Friends C. A. Marshall and Juliet D. Severance have, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 26th, sent the leaden missils of truth straight to the heart of hoary wrong. To all meddlers Mrs. Severance would say: "Attend to your own affairs and we will to ours, but if you cross the boundary line of individual sovereignty, look out!" If you liv in combustible structures do not propel aggregations of Greek fire and fulminate in our direction.

In the Bible, kept in the rack provided for that purpose upon the wall of the railroad depot of an Illinois city, I found this: "A loaf of good bread would be more convenient.—B. A. Ingersoll, lecturer."
